Brother McGeehee's sermons indicated his thorough understanding and appreciation of the times, and the people were greatly strengthened in faith and revived in patriotism. There were numbers present who have sons at the front, and service flags in their windows, who were languishing for just such messages as God sent them through this noble "soldier of the Cross."

The meeting, as is the usual custom, was under the supervision of the Oxford pastor, Rev. W. W. Woollard, and the Abbeville pastor, Rev. T. J. Hopper. These men of God gave us occasional helpful messages, and added much to the services in various ways. The meeting, comparatively speaking, was a great success.

Quite a number were received into the Church by letter and on profession of faith. All Christians were edified and strengthened. We had the distinct pleasure of having a soldier boy from Camp Pike with us throughout the meeting. Our hearts warmed to him as his presence always whispered silently, of "another boy in khaki, somewhere 'over there!'"

One of the happiest and most touching events during the meeting was the reception of cheering letters from three boys in France, sons respectively of Brother Woollard, Mr. C. McLarty, a tentholder, and of the writer. These letters were the first received from the boys, and were all permeated with a spirit of patriotism, good cheer, and faith in God. A general reading of letters and rejoicing in camp took place. Oh, isn't it true that similar experiences make the heart wondrously tender!

Brother Woollard is in fine favor here at Oxford, and is feeding his flock upon pure and unadulterated gospel.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Greenville, our former pastor, who, with his family, is visiting Oxford friends just now, sweetened our Sunday school and church services the past Sabbath with his presence and his prayers. Brother Lewis will not die as long as the Oxford people live.

Brother Hopper is magnifying his office throughout his charge, and is loved by all of his people.

We are still enjoying the Advocate. God bless it and make it a blessing.

Ever Salivated By Calomel? Horrible!

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

THE FINANCIAL GOAL OF THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

By REV. W. W. PINSON.

Thirty-five Million Dollars looks like a big sum. And it is. But it must be recognized that we are in a big business. The amount seems big only in comparison with what we have been doing. Compared with the "big things" going on all about us and now becoming commonplace, it is not a bit big. Compared with the task now confronted by the Church, and the demands soon to be greater than ever, it is meagre. The fact that it is being asked without apology and that the Church with one voice approves, shows we have entered a new era. We have accepted for always the verdict written everywhere in letters of flame that old things are passed away. The Church that does not accept it dies, and Methodism means to live.

Not as Big as it Looks.

This thirty-five million is not as big as it looks. Let it be borne in mind that the annual income of all the departments represented is included. This is estimated at $2,000,000 a year, or $10,000,000 for the five-year period. Hence the Centenary sum proper is $25,000,000, including $5,000,000 for war work. In other words, we are only asked to increase our income three-fold for our missionary work, including Church Extension, and then add $1,000,000 a year new income for meeting the emergencies created by the war.

Not an Enthusiastic Guess.

The amount was not hastily and carelessly chosen. A careful survey of the fields was made and passed upon by Committees familiar with the fields, and the amounts indicated were studied and combined by the Centenary Commission. They were then submitted to a carefully chosen group of more than one hundred leaders at Memphis, Tenn., March 19-21, 1918, and earnestly and prayerfully considered by a Committee and then by the body. After the discussion they were passed unanimously. The only dissenting voice in the discussion was from some laymen who thought the sum should be much larger.

An Effort to Catch Up.

Let it be remembered also that this amount, large as it seems, only serves to bring the Church abreast of its present task. With the exception of War Work, it provides for entering no new fields, and is very largely consumed in providing adequate equipment for the work now being done. It is for the most part an effort to really catch up with our providential task and to begin the new Missionary Centenary of this new and mighty hour in human history in some fair state of preparedness.

Wide Range of Needs.

This $35,000,000 is to cover a wide range of interest. To summarize, the askings are as follows:

Present income for 5 years	$10,000,000
Foreign Missions, General	7,670,000
Foreign Mis., Woman's Work	3,000,000
Board of Church Extension	2,140,000
Home Missions, General	2,850,000
Home Mis., Woman's Work	1,290,000
Annual Conference Missions	2,500,000
War Work Fund	5,350,000
Total	$35,000,000

A further analysis will show a wide range of interests covered by these askings.

Property Equipment.

There are needed immediately 253 churches and 123 parsonages in Foreign Fields alone, and more, many times over, asked for in the Home Fields, besides the ground on which they are to be built.

For Schools.

There are more than 100 schools of all grades in the Foreign and 18 in the Home Field, estimated at over $7,000,000. This is about one-fourth of the whole amount. It goes into a vast and far-reaching educational scheme. By far the larger part of it lands where there are no endowments, and no public schools, and no background of Christian influence to support the schools. These schools are to train the leaders of the future among great populations of the earth. In China eighty per cent of all those who get education at all are dependent on mission schools. Yet not as much is being asked for all these 123 schools as is frequently asked to endow a single school in this Christian land. This includes the training of our native preachers, about 200 of whom are now in our schools.

New Missionaries and Workers.

There are 214 new recruits called for, men and women, to fill up the ranks and meet the unusual demands. These must be found, equipped, sent out, housed and maintained. Nothing is more urgently needed. Here will be given an opportunity for those who wish to be represented in the great pioneer work of the Kingdom to send and support their own missionaries, as many are now doing.

In addition many hundreds of native workers must be trained and set to work among their own people in the large program of missions we are planning.

Medical Work.

Nearly $2,000,000 are asked for hospitals and medical equipment. When it is remembered that this is mostly among people who have no medical science, and who, but for the missionaries, must suffer and die without the healing ministries of a physician, it is pitiably small. Suffering womanhood alone in heathen lands should demand instantly the whole sum asked for, to say nothing of agonies of little children.

To Increase Salaries.

There are 2756 pastors at home who get less than $1,000; one-half of these receive less than $500 a year. These askings include increasing these salaries something like fifty per cent, till they range from a minimum of $600 to $1,000 each. This reform is overdue and is worthy of our best efforts. This will require over $500,000 a year.

Aid of the Negro.

The Negro schools come in for a share in these askings. A half million for six Negro schools is surely not extravagant, and yet what an untold blessing it will be to this people in their struggles. This we should do, not only for their sakes, but for our own.

Various Home Mission Agencies.

Wesley houses, Bethlehem houses, night schools, institutional churches, and other means of reaching the congested centers, the foreigner, the slums, the neglected rural sections, all on a scale we have not yet even approximated, is provided for in these plans. It is an attempt to really do our share in evangelizing our own land and making and keeping it Christian.

Making Sure.

This analysis is by no means complete. In fact it could not be. Still further pains are being taken to make sure that the enterprises we set forth are entirely worthy and the needs genuine. The surveys are now being reviewed by the missionaries, and there will be changes in the details before the items are finally settled by the Commission.

Objects for Donors.

When the whole list of askings has been thoroughly tested and sifted they will be divided up into objects so that those who may desire may make their Centenary contribution in the form of specials. This will require time and labor but it will be made by the time of the meeting of Conferences this fall.

Epworth League Special.

Already the Epworth League Board has assumed as its Centenary task the total askings for Africa and begun working at it with enthusiasm. The pledges made at the League Conferences this summer give promise that they mean to make good. The indications are they will run the measure over.

The Sunday School Board.

This Board is laying definite plans to line up every Sunday school in the Connection for the Centenary. Its share will be one-tenth of the whole amount, or $3,500,000. Rev. J. L. Neil will be in charge of this work under the Sunday School Board, which will work in harmony and co-operation with the Centenary Commission. It will be a campaign of Missionary education which will be a joy and a blessing to the Sunday School. Objects will be provided which will be most attractive and inviting to the children and young people.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 65—No. 35. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3262.

HENRY T. CARLEY, Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1918. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"Since I must fight, if I would reign,
Increase my courage, Lord;
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by Thy word."

The history of a wasted life is a record of neglected opportunities. The successful man is one who sees his opportunities and seizes them.

A good deal is being said, even in this time of unparalleled industrial activity, about the problem of unemployed hands; the great problem of the age is unemployed heads.

The war has made necessary many departures from the normal order; but the principles of righteousness are unalterable and should not be deviated from under any circumstances.

The true Christian occupies the most exalted position in the world. He is not on the defensive—it is the world that is on the defensive. An apologetic attitude is unbecoming a real Christian.

Infancy is succeeded by childhood, childhood by youth, and youth by maturity. But in the realm of the spiritual, the process of growth seems often to be arrested. We should not always be "babes in Christ."

Christianity is a life. That, after all, is its supreme test. If it does not produce right living, it is a failure. But the evidence of its power to do that very thing is to be found in every community. And nothing else can do it.

Most of the practical troubles of life arise out of our dealings with our fellow-men. Too often we are not properly adjusted in our social relationships. The motive of loving service would relieve many difficult situations.

A man's manliness must be judged by the circumstances in which he is placed and the way he conducts himself in those circumstances. Jesus was tried on every side of his nature—but he stood the test. He is the manliest man that ever trod the shores of time.

* * *

The saddest sight in the world is a man who, having gone into the battle of life with high ideals and noble standards, with clean hands and a pure heart, emerges from that battle with his hands dripping with filth and his heart steeped in pollution.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

One of the most trying situations that develop when the Bishop and the presiding elders are making the appointments, is the necessity of sending some good men to charges that do not, according to the records, pay salaries upon which a man may comfortably support his family. We happen to know that this matter is the subject of discussion oftener than many of our preachers, perhaps, realize.

It is generally recognized by those who have given attention to the subject that preachers as a class are not adequately paid. When the character of the men, the cost of their preparation for service and the nature of their work are taken into consideration, the disparity between the average salary of preachers and the earnings of other men, no more competent in their fields, is painfully apparent.

So far as our knowledge goes, the charge is never seriously made that ministers, as a class, are mercenary. On the other hand, there is a generous recognition by the public at large of the self-sacrificing nature of their work, the value of their ministry, and the justice of their claim to an adequate support. In this connection, we cannot forbear to quote from a recent editorial in the New Orleans Item. We have no personal acquaintance with the writer of the editorial and cannot presume, therefore, to state his point of view. We quote it simply as the utterance of a thoughtful man who is keenly alive to present-day conditions and who knows how to express himself in simple, forceful English. The editorial in question was called forth by an account in a Louisiana newspaper of a surprise party that was "perpetrated" upon a clergyman, the occasion being the presentation of a sum of money to give him and his family a vacation and the means of visiting friends in another State. Among other things, the writer says:

"The world to-day is rocking in the most soul-racking crisis it has ever experienced. Never have the labors of the clergyman been so arduous; never have their ministrations been more needed to sustain the shaken faith of good people in Him who seemingly permits such horrors to overwhelm His followers.

"Never has the laborer for the soul's uplift been more worthy of his hire. This being so, why do people, otherwise kind and good, continue to bestow upon the minister of the gospel as a donation that which he earns?

"Is it not a pity that the educated, refined, sensitive clergyman who spends his life trying to preserve our shattering ideals, should be compelled to accept as bounty that to which he is entitled a hundred times over—the means to live in comfort, to educate his children and to enjoy the occasional relaxation which his spirit craves?

"In the work of reconstruction in which we shall soon be engaged, well-meaning but thoughtless church members should discard the 'pound party,' the 'donation party,' and other forms of 'passing the hat,' for their spiritual director. If they cannot do better, let them pay him the wages of a brick mason or a master carpenter, so that he may apply his earnings in his own way, not in theirs."

Without commenting upon his views of "pound parties," "donation parties" and the like, we simply call attention to the sentence, "If they cannot do better, let them pay him the wages of a brick mason or a master carpenter," as expressing the view that leaders in the Kingdom of God should receive at least as much as skilled laborers in manual occupations.

At our approaching Annual Conferences, the question of a living salary for our preachers is likely to give the cabinet more serious concern than ever before, in view of the present high level of prices for the necessaries of life. If it is at all possible, something ought to be done to relieve the situation.

We venture to suggest that, in some cases, a consolidation or combination of charges or of churches might be brought about that would result in an increase of salary for the pastor, without any appreciable injury to the work as a whole. In some instances, for example, a church that has been accustomed to a Sunday service might be willing to take a week-night service, as a war measure if for no other reason, without decreasing its assessment for ministerial support. That would mean larger circuits to be sure, but it would also mean better salaries. The objection might be urged that it would increase the pastor's work. That is true; but it is our observation that our preachers are not afraid of work, especially when it means better support. Or, to take another case, we have in mind two churches that are close together, both of them financially weak, but both having full-time pastors; in one, the morning congregation is fairly good, while the night congregation is very small; in the other, the reverse is true. As a war measure, one man might serve both, giving each a Sunday service and being in touch with all the activities of each, and from the combined churches receiving an adequate support.

But the cases where combination or consideration is practicable are comparatively few; some other means must be found to provide for other situations. We venture another suggestion: Let us as a Church emphasize seriously and earnestly the value of tithing as a means of meeting at least the ordinary financial requirements of our work. We believe that our people, if our Annual Conferences would take definite action in advocacy of tithing, could gradually be brought to a degree of liberality that would adequately provide for all the ordinary needs of our work, and that would eventually support bountifully very greatly enlarged programs of service.

We are in favor of tithing not as a mandatory rule, but as a simple business basis upon which the work of the Church may be taken care of. Tithing as a system has at least two irrefutable arguments in its favor. In the first place, the history of religious work, from Old Testament times to the present, proves that the ordinary needs of the work may be adequately provided for out of the tenth; and in the second place, experience proves that godly people can afford to give the tenth and still have enough to meet all their own legitimate needs. There may be even stronger arguments than these in favor of tithing, but these seem to us unanswerable.

We believe a campaign in favor of tithing will do more than any other one thing not only to provide adequate ministerial support, but also to place all the work of the Church upon a thoroughly sound financial basis.

JUST HERE AND NOW.

My life's not just a future tense,
A vaiue heid in far suspense,
But yieids a present competence,
Just here and now.

God and my life are here with me,
My heav'n appears when Christ I see:
I haste not, care not, to be free
From here and now.

The distant scene I ieave with Thee,
The nearer duty calls for me:
Alert, obedient I'd be
Just here and now.

For faith I pray to trust the right,
For iove I seek to keep hope bright,
For strength I ask to press the fight—
Just here and now.

Reveal thyself, then, Lord, in power,
Nor let me weakly shrink and cower:
Of grand, rich life be this the hour
Just here and now!

—C. A. S. Dwight, in Zion's Heraid.

THE LODESTONE OF A GREAT AFFLICTION.

The why of pain is not answered when you say there is no pain. As well say there are no blind, no cripples.

The first causes of pain are not in thought. They are not alone in the nerves of feeling. They eat into and derange machinery made for work rather than for feeling. Muscle, sinew, bone and joint are eaten into, robbed of their working strength and suppleness. At the same time the feeiing threads are bitten into and pain is their report of a harm doing. They force the fact upon attention; they hold it upon consciousness. They come to dominate thought. They make us think of our pains.

An occupied mind can forget pain—for a time. A resoiute wiil can go on with life's work as if pain were not—for a time. But not for aii time. There is a resolution which can repress the cry of pain while feeiing its sting; which can hoid on through a crisis whiie the very life is being bitten at; which can go into fire to rescue a friend. But the fire burns.

It does not follow that no pain is feit. The fire burns. I distinguish the involuntary cry extorted by sudden or extreme pain from the cry which murmurs and chafes at pain. There is a cowardly, cringing, crying in pain which magnifies the pain. There is a fortitude in pain, a triumph of soul over pain, in which hopeless invaiids have given examples of supreme heroism, have given to the world words and works richer than any by the healthy and strong.

The experiences of pain are not solitary. There is a sharing of experiences. We cannot get away from that. "Whether one member suffer aii the members suffer with it," is not truer in the single human body than in that more composite body, made up of many persons, especially in the family.

Because mind can stimulate the suffering of the body, my mind can rack me with anguish at sight of suffering. You shall see a chiid run down, rolled under and crushed by a car. While you sicken and faint at the mere sight, your second and more painful thought comes—what must be the anguish of the mother when her mangied baby is laid in her arms.

This pain of yours is reai; as reai, though not as keen as hers. Hers is as reai, maybe more keen than her babe's. This is sympathy, one of the most God-like capabilities in the human nature. In it we enter one another's feelings.

You have seen the bloom fade from a mother's face, the plumpness of her cheek shrivel into wrinkles, as day by day, night after night, she worked, watched and agonized over her sick babe. At the same time you have seen her love pass from a proud fondness into an inexpressibly tender affection, richer and richer as the iittle one suffers on. And when it developed that the little one was left blind, or deaf, or lame, or dwarfed, you have noted her iove weaving itseif into a wrapping, so to speak, a protecting armor for her helpless one; utterly unlike her expression toward her strong, hearty children. Dearer for its very weakness; and though every instant of its afflicted iife imposes a care which ailows her no unbroken rest, every instant of such caring makes the broken one more dear and the caring one more strong.

So the invalid of years, confined to bed or chair, whose every step must be guided, every want be met by a ministering hand, whiie levying on every member of the family a tribute of help and sympathy, lays upon all a common bond. Alike in one great sympathy for the sufferer, they have this as a common experience, and in so much, know one another as they could not without. And with aii the famiiy vieing in a common heipfuiness, aii are drawn and woven into a compact community affection.

The constant presence of the nervous sufferer might seem to dampen the gladness, destroy the mirthfulness of the home. Not necessariiy so. Only the soft pedal is on. The writer knew one just such famiiy. The mother, for years confined to her chair by rheumatism, when not in absolute pain, was one of the most cheerful, jolliest spirits. And the whole family was pervaded with a tender spirit of kindness which was a deiight to witness. Yet the famiiy was fuii of iife and mirth. They knew when to sober down. Their strong hands were gentie.

This sharing others' pain, this thinking constantiy for others' comfort, is a means toward highest cuiture. The spirit of it is invaiuabie in the home. It is of no less vaiue in that larger famiiy, soclety. We never reach the finest feeiings in scenes where all is joy and hiiarity. We never arrive at the deeper acquaintanceship tiil we get in among the pains that distress peopies. I suppose this is why the wise man said, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than the house of feasting."

Lest in aii I seem too iight—the bare fact of invalidism in itseif is not the secret. There are invaiids who are cross and sour and fault-finding; and there are those whom the care of an invaiid makes cross and sour and uncharitable. It is the pain borne in a spirit of submission, resignation, and of faith in God, who, though He may not remove the thorn, will yet give grace sufficient to bear the pain with profit. Such is the spirit that makes the Fanny Crosbys.—"Experience," in Central Christian Advocate.

A GOAL, PRAYER, FAITH, AND RESULTS.

In my ietter yesterday I referred to our campaigns for 500 conversions before my furiough, and promised to write you more fully about it.

This is the way it started. Shortly after Annual Conference in October, Bishop Kiigo visited us and spoke to my congregation on soui-winning. It was one of the greatest and most stirring messages I ever heard. Towards the close he asked how many adults had been baptized the previous conference year. The answer was sixteen. Then he asked us if we wouid pray daiiy for 500 during this year, to raise our hands. We aii raised our hands because we didn't know what eise to do under the circumstances. But at that moment very few of us, if any, reaiiy expected to see 500 conversions in a year. But we had promised to pray and so in a more or iess desultory fashion, we did pray for about three months.

A few days after the Bishop was here, word came that the big Mandarin's house next door was for sale and the price was $10,000 (Mex.) I called together the workers and we taiked it over. It seemed to us that we would be ruined if any one else got that house, as there are streets on all the other three sides of us, and this house is the only direction in which we can expand. We thought we just must buy that house, but where on earth the money was to come from, we couid not tell. Then we prayed. Then we taiked some more and then prayed again. Finaiiy, we concluded that the circumstances warranted our making a covenant of prayer, and standing on Matt. 18:19 we prayed daiiy at noon for the means with which to purchase that property. This we aii agreed to do; and I think in my whoie iife I have never known such earnest praying. As we prayed, suggestions for working were given to us, and we did not ieave a stone unturned in our effort to do aii that God gave us strength and wisdom to do to help answer our own prayers.

At the end of three months there came from the Board of Misions a cable for $5000 (gold.) it was a direct, immediate, glorious answer to prayer. On the foiiowing Sunday we had a thanksgiving service to praise and laud and magnify His great name for thus revealing Himself as a iiving Presence among us. The thought uppermost in our minds was not so much rejoicing that we had received the money, as rejoicing in the sense of cooperation with God. This direct answer to our prayer was God's acceptance and approval of us and the work we are trying to do in His name. This was vastly more precious to us than the money itself.

But, in the midst of our rejoicing, the promise we had made to Bishop Kiigo occurred to us. There with shame we confessed our sin in praying so ardently for more money, and so coidiy for the main thing, the thing without which the money would be empty and meaningless—the conversion of souls. Then we talked about it. Then we prayed some more. Then we decided that again the circumstances warranted our forming a covenant of prayer, so, again standing on His immutable promise in Matt. 18:19, we agreed to pray morning, noon, and night for the conversion of 500 souls before I go home in the summer of 1919.

Again, as we prayed, suggestions of working and how to work were given to us. And, up to the limit of the wisdom and strength God gives us, we are working whiie we pray.

First, we cailed a four days' conference of all the members of the church. We spent a good deai of time in Bibie study, we spent a good deai more in prayer for God's guidance and blessing in this tremendous undertaking. At length we decided that in addition to the forms of work aiready being carried on that we would make three special evangelistic campaigns before I come home—one this spring, one this fall, and one next spring.

The work for this spring is to center around an eight days' meeting to be held Aprii 28 to May 5. Miss Mary Culler White (author of "The Days of June") will lead the services for women every afternoon. Rev. Tsa Suh-Tz, one of our ieading Chinese preachers, wiil preach at the night services. We will either get a iarge tent or erect a big mat-shed. This wiii cost us about one hundred dollars. Where that money is to come from I do not know, but God knows, and He is running this work.

We have organized a training class among the church members in order to get ready a corps of good workers. We meet on Friday nights from 7:30 to 9:00. This time is divided into three periods of about thirty minutes each. First, I am giving a series of talks on the Hoiy Spirit, based on the Acts of the Apostles. Second, we spend a half-hour studying a book called "Elements of Christian Truth." This is a book prepared especiaiiy for new probationers, and is designed to be used in preparing candidates for baptism. We expect each church member who is studying the book to teach it to a class of probationers after the May meeting. Our Chinese pastor, Brother Wang, leads this group. Third, Mr. Zang makes a talk on personal work. All this is done in an atmosphere of prayer. We hope all through May and June to have 200 probationers in 20 classes, and early in July to baptize a large class. Then in the fall we hope to repeat this same process, baptizing another large class just before Christmas, and during the spring of 1919 repeat it for the third time, baptizing the largest class of all just before I sail for America.

I have written thus fully about our plans to request you and all who may read this, to help us daily by prayer for all these forms of service to the end that Christ may be glorified in the conversion of 500 souls. L. D. PATTERSON.

THE PLAN OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE FOR CORRELATING THE THREE GREAT CAMPAIGNS.

By Rev. Stonewall Anderson, D.D.

I have been asked to make a statement of my understanding of the relation of the several great campaigns of the Church to each other. The General Conference authorized three campaigns—for missions, for education, and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund. So the Centenary Movement, the Educational Forward Movement, and the Superannuate Endowment Movement were all launched. The amounts to be secured by the several campaigns are: for missions, $35,000,000; for education, $23,000,000 (of which $10,000,000 is for the universities); and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund, $10,000,000.

It was foreseen that with these three campaigns in operation during the quadrennium, misunderstandings, confusion, and friction might arise between these great interests. It was thought to be of the greatest importance that the three campaigns be conducted in harmony and so as to be helpful to one another, rather than harmful. Consequently, a committee was appointed to work out a general plan by which the several campaigns might be conducted in a harmonious and mutually helpful way. This committee, composed of representatives of the several interests involved, considered thoroughly the whole matter, and for several days. The plan which the Committee submitted to the General Conference was adopted without a dissenting voice.

The method adopted by the General Conference, as I understand it, for conducting the several campaigns harmoniously and helpfuliy provides for the following:

1. The campaigns for the several schools and colleges of the Church which were in process at the time of the session of the General Conference were to be completed without prejudice or interference from any other campaign. It was urged that these campaigns be completed as speedily as possible.

2. The Centenary Movement, projected during the General Conference, Church-wide and popular in its nature, is to be pressed immediately and with all vigor. It is expressly provided that the Centenary Campaign is to have the right of way in the whole Church for the first two years of the quadrennium. So explicit is this provision that to set up a popular general campaign for any other cause during the first two years of the quadrennium would be clearly a violation of the arrangement of the General Conference. Of course, the call for $300,000 for emergency war work by the War Work Commission in no wise opposes the plan of the General Conference. It is in every way right and proper that this call should be made, and no doubt there will be instant and liberal response from our people—as there should be.

3. At the beginning of the third year of the quadrennium, it was provided that a general Church-wide, popular campaign for education shall begin. For the last two years of the quadrennium, the cause of education is to have the right of way in the entire Church, just as the Centenary Commission has for the first two years. To put on a popular general campaign for any other cause than education during the last two years of the quadrennium would be contrary to the positive provision of the General Conference.

4. With the understanding that the campaigns for the two universities and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund were not to be general or popular campaigns, that is campaigns requiring specific organization, covering the general Church, and making appeal to the whole membership of the Church, provision was made for these two campaigns to be carried on through the entire quadrennium. It was contemplated that whatever efforts were put forth by the universities and Superannuate Endowment Movement would be done in such a way as to harmonize, during the first two years of the quadrennium with the Centenary Campaign, and during the second two years of the quadrennium with the general Church-wide, popular campaign for education. As I understand the action of the General Conference, the two universities are not prohibited from sharing in the benefits of the Church-wide campaign for education, which is directed to begin with the third year of the quadrennium.

The action of the General Conference in providing a plan by which the three campaigns inaugurated might be harmoniously carried on was undoubtedly wise. I see no reason why those charged with the leadership of the three great interests involved should not carry out the plan of the General Conference in a spirit of mutual helpfulness. If the campaigns are allowed to get in each other's way, doubtful success may be the result. If the forces of the Church representing the three great interests work together as true allies, which they are, I believe that triumphant success will be gloriously achieved. For my part, I stand ready to carry out completely the plan of the General Conference, and am ready to aid the Centenary cause, the Superannuate cause, and the universities, according to the plan of the General Conference, to the fullest extent of my ability. In this matter, I feel sure that I express the sentiment and position of the Board of Education, as well as the entire educational forces of the Church.

The action of the General Conference relative to the plan of campaign for the three causes is embodied in the report of the Committee of Conference, which is as follows:

Your Committee on Conference, appointed to consider the feasibility of correlating the campaigns for missions, education, and Superannuate Endowment Fund, respectfully report:

The needs of the world call to us as never before, and in the terror and confusion of the present hour it is to the ancient messages of the Church that men are turning for comfort and hope and the power to "carry on." Moreover, as we look toward the future the only world worth fighting for is the world remade by a vital faith in Jesus Christ and rebuilt on the foundations of the principles of his kingdom. The blood sacrifice of our sons on the battle fields of France will, in the end, be futile if the Church at home does not consecrate itself to the duty of preparing its forces and agencies for a real conquest of the world after the war. Missions, church extension, education, the care of our ministers in old age—these never meant to us what they all mean now, and not to apply this new understanding acquired in the awful experience through which we are passing would be to miss the very call of God.

Your Committee would, therefore, recommend that all of the great campaigns, prepared and projected, be carried forward with a clear vision of their supreme importance and a whole-hearted zeal born of a faith in the ability and intelligence of the Church to meet its duty in this crucial hour of the world's history.

Your Committee makes this recommendation in the conviction that those to whom are committed the great interests we have in hand—the Centenary Movement for missions, the strengthening of the schools and colleges of the Church, the equipment and endowment of our two universities, and a pension fund for our superannuates—will wisely work and plan in helpful harmony, knowing that the complete success of each depends at last upon the success of all.

Your Committee further makes the following definite recommendations:

1. That we find that there is no inherent conflict in interest between these respective calls; that it is not practicable to place the campaigns under the direction of one Board or Committee; that the Centenary Movement is not intended to interfere with the normal work and movement of the Church in other fields.

2. But that, in the interest of efficiency, and in order that there may be carried on but one popular campaign in the Church at the same time, and without prejudice to existing campaigns, we recommend that the right of way be given to the Centenary Movement during the first two years, and to the educational campaign during the second two years of the quadrennium, and that during these two periods, as far as possible, the full power of the Church be delivered in these respective campaigns.

3. That, as the campaigns for the two universities and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund are not, in a sense, general campaigns, they may be carried on throughout the quadrennium without embarrassing other campaigns or being embarrassed by them. Signed:

H. N. SNYDER, Chairman.
L. S. BAILEY, Secretary.

THE GREATEST QUESTION OF THE AGE.

Christianity is not dependent upon the infallibility of the Church nor of the Bible. The Church and the Bible are simply a means to an end, and not an end in themselves. Their purpose is the revelation of God in Jesus Christ.

Therefore, the chief question that men are called upon to answer is not, What do you think of this doctrine, or that church, or that system of theology, but "What think ye of Christ?" Gladstone once said that this is the greatest question of the age.

You might be asked, "What do you think of Plato, of Socrates, of Shakespeare?" and you could dismiss the matter with an off-hand reply. But this question asked of Christ passes into the most practical and the most personal of questions, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus?" The question becomes insistent. Men cannot get away from it. It will follow them to the ends of the earth. They may become angry because of its presence, but does not this prove that it is no ordinary question? To dismiss it by saying that Jesus was simply a great reformer will not satisfy. To say that He was only a good man, or that He was a great teacher, but simply one of many teachers, brings the consciousness that one is only dodging the issue.

It is frequently stated that Christ came to establish an ideal republic, or that He sought to inaugurate a Utopian democracy. Neither statement is true. His own words indicate that it was His purpose to establish an absolute monarchy, a kingdom, of which He should be the head. This kingdom is to embrace all those who will acknowledge His kingship.

Therefore, when some social reformers select from among the words of Jesus a few catch-words, which have to do only with certain social affairs, rejecting everything else that meets with their disapproval, especially that which applies to their personal lives, and then claim to be the only bona-fide followers of Jesus Christ, they are leaving out of their consideration altogether some of the most important parts of Christ's plan for the complete emancipation of mankind.

"What think ye of Christ?" Workingmen cannot afford to evade Him. He is too often quoted by them. He is too great a factor in their lives. More and more will this be true.—Rov. Charles Stelzle, in The Christian Intelligencer.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

THE CHURCH WILL RESPOND.

"It appears to me, as a layman, that it is peculiarly fitting that Southern Methodists should enter into this anniversary of the one hundredth year of Methodist Missions with great zest, feeling sure that no Church has ever been so blessed as we have. God has been our pillar of cloud by day and pillar of fire by night, and he has led us in the most wonderful and marvelous manner. If there is any people on earth that ought to return their grateful appreciation of God's goodness and to express that in some outward act it is the Southern Methodist Church, and I am expecting nothing other than that Southern Methodism will respond to this call of the time, and will, with an unbroken front, move upon the world of ignorance and superstition as it exists in the non-Christian world, and accomplish in the next twenty-five years more than we have in the whole hundred that has passed.

"CHARLES H. IRELAND,
"Layman N. C. Conference."

THE CENTENARY IN A NUT SHELL.

1. A celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of the Missionary Society.

2. A world-wide program based on careful surveys of need and opportunity.

4. A stewardship drive to secure the enrollment of millions of Methodists who will acknowledge their stewardship by the payment of the tithe.

5. An appeal for life service to recruit a large number of new workers for the ministry, home and foreign missions, and for service in the local church.

6. Special Centenary activities in the Epworth League, featuring stewardship, prayer, and mission study, with a thorough presentation of the Centenary message and methods at all institutes.

7. A movement to make the Sunday school missionary in spirit, and to insure a very definite expression of this spirit through prayer and offerings of life and money.

8. Unprecedented publicity through the Church papers, and the secular press.

9. A Church-wide educational campaign with mission study, missionary instruction in the Sunday school, and the use of lantern slides, charts, and pictorial materials.

10. The enlistment and training of many thousand leaders to carry the Centenary message and methods to the last member and adherent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

11. A nation-wide organization of the country by territorial divisions, conferences, districts, groups and local churches.

12. An allotment of financial goals to be voluntarily accepted by every district and local church in Southern Methodism.

13. A national simultaneous ten-day financial drive to secure pledges for thirty-five million dollars, to be paid during a period of five years.

14. A series of great meetings throughout the Church to inspire and inform the membership.

15. A central patriotic Centenary celebration at Columbus, O., in June, 1919. The general theme of the program to be: "The Christian Crusade for World Democracy."

16. World-wide extension and conservation to sustain and surpass the standards of devotion and giving set by the Centenary.

Bishop McMurry Visits Dignitaries.

"I feel greatly honored because of your visit and am delighted to know you will visit China in the next few weeks. The first instruction I received in the English language was at your Methodist school in Shanghai, China. I wish for you a pleasant and profitable visit to my country."

The above statement was made last week to Bishop W. F. McMurry while on official business in Washington, D. C., by the Chinese Minister, who received the Bishop with every mark of courtesy. The same cordial treatment was accorded Bishop McMurry by the Japanese Ambassador. Both gentlemen were familiar with our missionary work in their respective countries.

Let the prayers of the entire Church go up in intercession for Bishop McMurry, who in a few weeks sails for the Orient to plan for better and larger things in China, Japan and Korea.

Twenty-three Thousand Persons Enrolled.

Rev. S. A. Neblett, Secretary of the department of Spiritual Resource in the Missionary Centenary plan, says that as a result of the movement inaugurated in April by the Centenary Commission, 23,000 persons have enrolled as members of the "Fellowship of Intercession."

Brother Neblett states that this is indeed very encouraging, even though it represents but little more than one per cent of the entire membership of the Church.

From the records on file in the office of the department of Spiritual Resource, the department is convinced of three things: Many pastors did not present the matter to their congregations in April.

WHAT PRESIDENT WILSON THINKS OF MISSIONS IN WAR TIMES.

"Do you agree with me that if Missions have justified their existence, this is a time when they should not only be maintained in spite of war, but urged on because of war?"

This question was addressed to President Wilson by a missionary, and he replied as follows, having put his "whole thought into these few sentences":

"The White House.

"I entirely agree with you in regard to the missionary work. I think it would be a real misfortune of lasting consequence if the missionary program for the world should be interrupted. There are many calls for money, of course, and I can quite understand that it may become more difficult than ever to obtain money for missionary enterprises. But that the work undertaken should be continued, as far as possible, at its full force, seems to me of capital necessity, and I, for one, hope that there may be no slackening or recession of any sort.

"I wish that I had time to write you as fully as this great subject demands, but I have put my whole thought into these few sentences, and I hope you will feel at liberty to use this expression of opinion in any way that you think best.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,
"(Signed) WOODROW WILSON."

Many others who doubtless made the call for signatures and distributed the enrollment cards, failed to collect them and send them to this office for file and future follow-up work. It is probable that a number of church members were absent at the time the matter was presented and have not had a subsequent opportunity to sign the card.

In view of the pre-eminently spiritual Aims of the Centenary Movement, it will be realized how important it is to enlist intercessors at the earliest possible moment. Failure at this point would be a calamity, imperiling the success of the entire Centenary Movement. We ought to have a million enrolled by January 1. The department of Spiritual Resource offers to every pastor and others interested its co-operation, and urges that at the earliest possible moment the enrollment of intercessors in every charge be completed and that the organization of the League of Intercession be effected.

The Aim of the League of Intercession is to enlist intercessors: to organize them in every congregation for participation by prayer in the Missionary Centenary and for the systematic cultivation of intercession as a permanent part of their Christian life; and to plan and hold meetings of intercessors for united prayer for specific missionary objects. All members of the Church are eligible. All who sign the Fellowship of Intercession enrollment card thereby become members. There are no membership dues.

Seven Annual Conferences to Observe Centenary Day.

Centenary Day will be observed in the seven Annual Conferences which meet in September. Teams of Centenary specialists will attend them and present every phase of the Movement.

Mountain Schools.

Our Church maintains ten mountain schools. The "Efficiency Program" calls for a minimum of $750,000 in five years.

Team Work.

Kipling puts it:

"It ain't the individuals,
Nor the army as a whole;
But the everlasting team work
Of every bloomin' soul."

With the hearty co-operation of Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, district lay leaders and the good women of the Church, the Centenary program will prove one of the greatest blessings ever experienced in our Zion. We are all cogs, and bolts, and pins in a mighty machine. The prayer of each should be, "Lord, help me to do my bit wholeheartedly and with a full consecration to the cause."

Because We Have No Man to Send.

Rev. L. D. Patterson, writing from Sung-kiang-ku, China, says:

The following story was told me recently and I want to give it to you.

"In the Yangste River lies the fertile island of Zang Ming, the home of a wealthy, but unreached clan. Many years ago one member of the clan lost all of his wealth, and greatly reduced in circumstances, wandered away from his own land and people. He drifted to Shanghai, where in God's good providence, he fell among Christians, and was happily converted.

For many years he lived a faithful Christian life, serving as gatekeeper at the Anglo-Chinese School. All the while, though, his heart yearned for the salvation of his wealthy kinsmen in Zang Ming and his prayers for his brethren were unceasing. At last the answer came, and, as is so often the case, it came through sorrow. Word reached him that his wife was dead in Zang Ming. He hurried home where he found his relatives assembled and all arrangements made to celebrate heathen rites.

"No," objected the grief-stricken husband, "we will have a Christian ceremony."

"But," they replied, "you have no Christian priest."

"Then," he answered, "I will get one."

Accordingly, he set out on foot and walked seventy-five miles to where he knew a native presiding elder was due to hold a quarterly conference. He laid the matter before the elder, who, when he learned the circumstances, made haste to return with the bereaved husband.

When they reached Zang Ming they found a great throng gathered to see what the strange priest would do.

"Elder, tell them of Christ," pleaded the husband. "Teli them of Christ; they have not heard."

So, for two hours the presiding elder stood by the body of their dead kinswoman and told those wealthy heathen people of the Christ on whom if they believed they should never die.

And did they believe? Like the Samaritans of old, they besought the preacher to tarry with them some days, and when he finally took his departure they followed him to the boat, begging him to send some one who would live among them and expound unto them more fully the gospel which he had preached.

When this story was related to Patterson his first question was, "Has a man been sent?"

"No," was the answer.

"Why," inquired Patterson.

"Because," came the heart-breaking reply, "we have no man to send."

No man, and no money! How often have we had to stand face to face with magnificent opportunities which we may not embrace because the men and the means are lacking!

Brother Patterson with a host of other missionaries on the field are praying that the Centenary Movement will be blessed of God, so that men and money may be furnished that we may take advantage of the wonderful opportunities which are daily presented to give the Gospel story to those who dweli in darkness. If you cannot go, will you not help to "send a man?"

FOR WHAT DO THE ALLIES FIGHT?

By Rev. Geo. H. Thompson.

For what do the Allies fight? We are toid that it is to make the world safe for democracy. I prefer to believe that we are fighting to save to the world the Bible and Christianity.

The nineteenth century dawned when the world was enjoying the flood-tide of the Wesleyan revival. The heart of the movement was the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The example and teachings of Christ were the rule for conduct, its end was the greatest good to the greatest number of people. True living was realized in service. Philosophy was pleased to cali this Realism.

But history has an absurd tendency to rush from one extreme to an other. From a tendency to reverence service for the sake of service, the swing was back to a view of life kept aiive by German Prussianism, which the philosophers have been pleased to term Subjectivism. Rudolph Eucken has defined Subjectivism to be "a deep-rooted, variously motived aversion to the prevailing tendencies of the time," and "a native repugnance to all moral and religious ties." "With the repudiation of these ties there grows up a vehement desire for a wider life, a ionging for the unrestrained development of all one's faculities, the will for authority and power." "Let the individual exalt his own life, and make the realization of this his supreme end. Let him strive above all else to enjoy and aggrandize himself, to raise his lot above the average and to increase to his utmost capacity the distance between himseif and the common herd. Civilization reaches its ciimax, not in the well-being of the majority, but in the striking success of the few."

Nietzsche.

Out of much old and some new material Nietzsche buiit up his view of iife. He was born in 1844, and died in 1900, after five years of insanity. In Germany he has been and is now regarded with aimost idolatrous affection, and his Subjectivism philosophy in popuiar German thought has an authority above the Bibie. The Standard Encyclopedia says of him: "He began in 1878 a series of works to expound a revolutionary phiiosophy denouncing all religion and treating all moral laws as a remnant of Christian superstitution." "His ideal, 'the Overman,' is to be developed by giving unbridled freedom to the struggle for existence, will seek his own power and pleasure, and knows nothing of pity."

A partial list of his works gives an idea of his radical cast. Take for example the following: "Beyond Good and Evil," "The Geniality of Morality," "The Overturning of all Vaiues," his masterpiece, "The Twilight of the Gods." He laid it down as a fundamental doctrine that "Christian morality is the most malignant form of all falsehoods; it is that which has corrupted mankind."

Germany loves Nietzsche because it likes his philosophy. It likes his philosophy because it suits German living. He taught, and Germany believes, that real life is found in the unrestrained indulgence of the appetites and desires. This is just the reverse of what Christ taught and what we believe. The world has never discovered a limit to man's desires, and when they are unrestrained they often take on monstrous shapes. For this reason the German Crown Prince could say that if his father did not start a war he would, "just for the fun of it." Civil life was too tame for a people living in their feelings. Prussianism could not be satisfied with dominating the German Empire, but wanted the world. With their philosophy, hate is as vituous as love, and murder is more heipful in develoiping iife than mercy. This may account for their horrible and unnamabie crimes.

I think I have heard some echoes of Nietzsche's philosophy, even in America. Some years ago I was a guest in a home for a number of days where there was a child three or four years old. No effort to control him was made by either parent, and I became a bit anxious about their idea of famiiy government. My curiosity was finaiiy reiieved by the mother when she said that the most striking personaiities were developed by noninterference of the wiii, and that she was anxious for her son to be a striking personaiity, and for this reason she would not interfere with his wiii. I would have passed this by as the frothing of Mrs. Newlywed, but I remembered that a few months before this an educator of national reputation had delivered an address in Tulane University in which he took the same position. If these parties desire to see a well developed specimen of the fruitage of this theory, I respectfully refer them to the German Kaiser. Certainly he is a striking individual, but one at a time shouid satisfy the world.

Directly across the path of this German philosphy of life lay the Bible and the teachings of Christ. These stiil had a grip on the German mind and conscience, but one must give way to the other. Which shouid it be? The philosophy of subjectivism was more palatable to the German taste than the gospel of self-sacrifice, and for the ruiing classes the choice was easy. But to wean the popular mind from the Bible was the question. Germany relies strongly on propaganda, and in this case the machinery, their schools, was oiled and geared for the work. All the schools of Germany are under government control. Their teachers are licensed and paid by the State, and it is easy to feel that you shouid serve your paymaster. It has been charged, I think on ample grounds for the charge, that about forty years ago the government laid on its schools the obiigation to deny the infaiiibiiity of the Bible, the divinity of Christ, and the existence of hell. The approach to the task was gentle, progressive, and diplomatic. The leaders of this were soon heralded as angels of iight. Their torch was known as "higher criticism." It passed through the system of German universities, which extend into Austria and Switzerland. Conservative Americans cailed the new iight the product of irreverent scholarship, while they who thought themselves progressive Americans flocked to light their iittle torches at the new-found flame. Aias! how many American congregations have been stifled by the smoke made in Germany, but carried in little American pots.

The first announcement of these super-lights said that the Bible had many things in it that should not be there, and that some things should be in it that were not there. That seemed not to shock the world much. It must have feit that whiie the Bibie must iose some things it should gain others, and thus break even. The world having received this pronouncement without heart-failure, they proceeded to tell us that Moses and Isaiah had not done as much in making the Bible as we thought, and that these naughty fellows should not receive as much pay as we wanted to give them. The super-iights then felt of the German pulse and found it normai enough to bear another shock. This was administered through an attack on the Gospei of John. They said he did not write the gospel bearing his name, but that it was written by an unknown party living at Ephesus. They denied its authenticity and its historicity.

Just why this gospel was attacked, and the others were ieft, is not clear, unless it be because it is so full of the divinity of Christ, and they were preparing the way for the supreme shock. This was not long in coming, and it furnished a ciimactic effect to the series; the divinity of Christ was called in question. They denied him a supernatural birth, said that he was born as ail men are born. That if he was divine it was a gift suhsequent to birth, perhaps at his baptism. This view involves the charge of impurity against Mary. Ail of this to remove the obstacles from the way of Nietzsche's "Overman," that he might stand before the world in the person of the German Kaiser. The Aiiies not oniy fight for democracy but for its foundations, which are the Bible and the religion of Christ. The Crusader fought for the grave of Christ, the Aiiies fight for the Bibie and the divinity of Christ. No soldier ever bore arms in a hoiier cause. His arm is strong and his heart is hrave, hecause he is right.

Notes and Comment

She is a Woman.

A dispatch from Amsterdam says that Empress Augusta Victoria of Germany is ill, owing to overstrain from her war relief work. We have no disposition to question the assumption that she has given heavily of her time and strength in relief work among the victims of the war. She is a woman—and what woman's heart can be untouched by suffering? We wonder if her lordly husband, the Kaiser, thinks on these things?

The Real Test.

Director General McAdoo, of the Railroad Administration, in discussing his work recently, said that all he asked of his assistants was that they have brains and be loyal to the Government; and then he added, "The supreme test of the hour is to deliver the goods." That is the real test anywhere. Good intentions and great promises help a little, but the man who can "deliver the goods" is what the world wants. The Church wants him, too.

Many a Slip.

A dispatch from Paris says that the German commanders, in confident expectation of success in their last offensive, had prepared special siege artillery with which to render the city untenable. These big guns were about sixty feet long, weighed about 110 tons, and had a range of more than thirty miles, shooting a shell weighing about 1600 pounds. Thus far, we have not heard that the Germans have been abie to use any of these guns for the purpose intended.

Worth More Than They Cost.

One day last week, 3½ per cent Liberty Bonds sold in the New York market for 102.40, the record price. The bonds are a good investment at par, and patriotic citizens are not going to regulate their buying of Government securities at a time like this by their speculative value. But when the new issue of bonds is offered for sale, it may be well for the purchaser to remember that he is getting something that, in all probability, will soon be worth more than it cost.

One is Enough for Us.

A Washington dispatch last week stated that the War Industries Board, after conference with the manufacturers, had announced restrictions and curtailment of variety in styles, colors, shapes, weights and trimmings of fur and felt hats for men and women for the spring of 1919. Colors of fur felt hats for both men and women will be restricted to nine, and of wool felt hats, to twelve. That is enough for us; in fact, we are more concerned about the hat itself, than we are about its color and style.

He's Right.

"The Bible is certainly the best preparation that you can give to an American soldier going into battle to sustain his magnificent ideal and faith," writes Marshal Foch in a letter to the American Bible Society in appreciation of the distribution of nearly a quarter of a million copies of the Scriptures among soldiers abroad. We believe Marshal Foch is a competent witness as to what makes for efficiency in miiitary affairs—he has lately acquired some reputation as an expert in that line. Our soldiers need the Bible, and we must give it to them. And it is worth just as much in peace to sustain ideals and faith as it is in war. We need the Bible all the time.

They Will Foul Anything.

According to daily newspaper reports, suit has recently been entered against two alcohol manufacturing companies across the river from New Orleans to prevent the further pumping of distillery slops and other refuse matter into a canal which connects the Mississippi River with the waters of lower Jefferson and other parishes, on the ground that such matter is injurious to animal life, makes the water unfit for steam purposes, kills fish and endangers the health of residents along the banks of the canal. It is a well known fact that the most highly refined product of a distillery is destructive; we do not wonder that the slops foul a canal. They will foul anything.

A Good Idea.

It has been announced that there will be only two big campaigns this winter for funds to carry on war camp activities. The first one, beginning November 11 and running a week, will be for the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., and the American Library Association; the second, coming sometime in January or February, will be for the Jewish Welfare Society, the Knights of Columbus, and the Salvation Army. All these causes are worthy, and they are working under the full approval of the Government. They are entitled to liberal support at the hands of the public. We believe the combined campaigns will be more effective than separate ones would be. The combination is a good idea.

The Wrong Ones Get Hurt.

Almost every day, the newspapers have accounts of automobiie accidents, resulting in serious injury or death to one or more persons. Frequently, the driver escapes injury, while those who suffer are passengers or innocent pedestrians. We have very little practical knowledge of automobiles; but sometimes, at a safe distance, we observe the apparent recklessness with which some drivers rush through crowded streets and around corners where traffic is congested. We are sorry that anybody gets hurt in the many accidents that are reported; but we cannot help feeling that it would be a grim sort of justice if the reckless driver should suffer and the others escape. Carelessness and recklessness are responsible for many of the tragedies of every-day life. It is a pity that the wrong ones get hurt.

A Good Example.

Dr. A. Gordon Bakeweli, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, New Orieans, is nearly 96 years of age. For forty years, he has never failed to register and vote. He does not intend to fail to do his duty in the coming elections in this State. The other day, though in extreme feebleness, he went to his registration office and qualified himseif to exercise all the rights and privileges of a citizen. We commend his example to many, both preachers and laymen, who seem to think that voting is merely an incident of citizenship, to be attended to or not, as convenience dictates. Many a fight for civic righteousness has been lost because so many so-called good citizens have failed to qualify themselves to vote, or having qualified, have not voted. The man who fails, through indifference or neglect, to meet the requirements for voting, has no right to say a word about public affairs, no matter how deplorable the situation may be. He is a "squaw man."

And Others Seek Theirs.

It was just a nine-line item in a New Orleans newspaper the other day; but the tragedy of myriad broken hearts was crowded into those few words. We leave out names and give the item as it appeared: "The proprietor of a saloon and grocery asked the police Thursday to look for his daughter, 15 years old, who disappeared from home Wednesday night. The girl, large for her age, wore a red cape, red hat, black low shoes, white stockings and a short, white ruffled dress." We think of the father, not the saloon keeper, as our hearts go out in sympathy to the bereaved parent. We do not know whether the chiid was found or not—we earnestly hope she was. But we cannot get from before our eyes the picture of thousands of other girls, in the bloom of girlish beauty, the pride of loving fathers and mothers, who have been lost never to be found again, on account of the stuff the saloon keeper sells. He is seeking his chiid—yes, and thousands of others are seeking theirs.

Labor Shortage.

The Department of Labor at Washington, issued last week the following statement: "The big labor jam has come, and the final tabulations of labor demands show a present shortage of one million unskilled laborers in war industries, with a tremendous additional shortage coming as soon as the new army draft expansion increases the need for supplies. The skilled labor situation is equally serious." The industries that are essential to winning the war will be maintained; the Government has let it be known unmistakabiy that it will not permit anything to interfere with the steady and adequate production of supplies needed for the prosecution of the war. Uniess necessary labor can be secured otherwise, less essential industries will have to close in order to furnish the men for essential industries. The situation is serious. The time has come for the authorities to adopt and enforce such measures as will do away with loafing and useless labor. "Work or fight," should be more than a siogan—it should be a rule of action.

Getting the Money from the Right Place.

The House Ways and Means Committee, which is framing the $8,000,000,000 revenue bill, is having difficulty in determining the rate of tax on excess profits and war profits. We have full confidence in Chairman Kitchin and his fellow members of the committee, and we believe the final draft of the committee's bili will provide for an equitable share of the necessary revenue to be paid by those individuais and corporations that are best able to pay it. The records of tremendous profits made by big business are encouraging indications of the magnitude of the enterprise in which we are engaged, and of the financial resources of the country. We are glad to note that the pecuniary rewards of business acumen, preparedness and efficiency are aitogether adequate. But above pecuniary rewards, we place the obligations imposed by patriotism. There should be complete wiiiingness on the part of those who are reaping such great rewards to bear their full part of the burden of necessary taxes. But in order that those who are not thus wiliing to pay their part may be made to do so anyway, we hope the committee will fix a rate that will cut deep into selfishness and make profiteering impossibie. The little business will pay its part; let the big business do likewise.

He's Wrong.

Mr. Bainbridge Colby, of the United States Shipping Board, who recently attracted considerable public attention by saying that, in his opinion, the abolition of beer would decrease the efficiency of the men engaged in ship building, is again in the public eye. He is reported to have said, in addressing the Virginia League of Municipalities: "This is no time for suffrage or prohibiton, but every energy should be devoted to winning the war." We leave the women, who are perfectly able to do it, to take care of Mr. Colby on the suffrage proposition. But concerning the prohibition issue, we should like to remark, in passing, that Mr. Colby is evidently predisposed in favor of iiquor, else he would give some weight to the testimony of the foreman of the most efficient ship building gang in the Philadelphia yards that "no booze" was the secret of their success. He is right when he says every energy should be devoted to winning the war; that is exactly what all those who favor war time prohibition, and all time prohibition, are doing. If a little beer makes a good workman, it ought to make a good soldier; but Uncle Sam has studied the situation carefully enough to know that it wiil do neither. He cioses the saloons in the neighborhood of camps. If Mr. Colby will devote all his energy to getting ships built instead of expending some of it in fighting prohibition, he will greatly increase his usefulness to his country. He's wrong on the liquor question.

THE JUDGE.

I think he's judge of all the rest,
Our friend, the solemn frog;
He's judge of all the water things,
The skimming hugs with dripping wings—
The turtle on the log.
He sits upon a lily-pad,
And if he sees that one is bad,
With sternness he will say,
"Go hide among the darkest weeds,
Down deep, among the dungeon reeds,
And there repent your wicked deeds.
Away, young thing, away!"

—Miriam C. Potter, in Youth's Companion.

A KNIGHT IN RAGS.

We are all familiar with the story of Sir Walter Raleigh's gallantry in spreading his cloak in the mud for Queen Elizabeth to walk on, and boys have often secretly wished that the opportunity for a similar gallant action had come in their way. Of course, everybody knows, or should know, that all boys are gallant in heart, as our story—a perfectly true one—goes to show.

'Twas on a dirty, murky day in winter that certain woolen merchants journeyed from the West Riding of Yorkshire to the city of Liverpool to do business on the Exchange there. The streets were very muddy and greasy, and slippery with oil and petrol from the big motor-lorries and the taxis. As they picked their way very gingerly through the mud they noticed a little girl, daintily dressed, carefully crossing the busy road. The middle of the road was safely reached, when her foot slipped, and down upon her hands she fell in the thickest and sticklest of the mud. Before they could make up their minds about helping her, a ragged little arab, shoeless and capless, with clothes so ragged and torn that once he got out of them he would be puzzled to get his arms and legs through the right holes again, darted like a flash to her aid, lifted her very carefully, and carried her to the safety of the footpath. Then, holding her hands helplessly in front of her, the wee girlie burst into tears at the sight of their muddiness. At once one of the gentlemen took out his handkerchief to wipe them; but he noticed that it was a fine silk one, so back into his pocket it went. At this the second gentleman took out his handkerchief, but this was snowy cambric, and the mud was so very bad that it really seemed a shame to spoil so fine a handkerchief, and back into his pocket it went.

Meanwhile the little street urchin watched them, and grinned a little at their hesitancy, and he had no handkerchief to offer. All at once his face brightened with a radiant smile, as though at a happy thought, and then, bending his thin little body, he turned his back to the little maid, saying, "Ere, missy, you just wipe 'em on me." At this the girl ceased her crying, and carefully wiped her begrimed hands on the boy's bended back till her hands were nearly clean and his poor rags were plastered with mud. The boy's face glowed with pride as the girl prettily thanked him, and the gentlemen felt rather silly and ashamed. They whispered together for a minute, and, turning to the boy, said, "Come along with us, boy, and we will give you a new suit of clothes," "No, thank you," replied the boy; "them ain't for the likes o' me." However, they would not be denied, and they took him into the "Stores" and gave him such a complete new outfit, handkerchief and all, that he had to pinch himself to see if it was really true and not a dream.

"Bravo, my boy! That beats Sir Walter Raleigh," I thought, as the gentleman told the story.—T. Maland in The Christian World.

THE WONDER GAME.

"Here is your luncheon, Nancy," said that little girl's mother, "and you may spend the whole day in the woods if you wish."

Nancy ran joyfully out into the woods. She had been there so many times she had no fear of getting lost. The sun shone brightly, the birds sang gayly, and the prospect of a whole day in the woods made the little girl happy.

"I wonder, I wonder," sang Nancy as she skipped along the woodsy path.

"What is it you wonder, little girl?" asked a gruff old man, as he laid his hand on Nancy's shoulder.

Nancy was so startled that she did not answer him for a moment. Then she wondered what she did wonder, after all.

"Why, lots of things," she stammered.

"I wish somebody wondered how they could help people," said the old man, with a sigh, as he went on.

Nancy sat down on a log to think. She was sorry for the old man—his bundle had looked so heavy.

Then suddenly she jumped up. "I'll make a game of it," she cried. An old woman was coming along the path. She led a frisky goat, and it was with difficulty that she could pursue her journey.

"I wonder how I could help her?" thought Nancy. Aloud, she said, "Let me lead your goat for you."

The old woman thankfully gave her the rope and thus they walked along until they came to a poor cottage where the old woman said she lived. She thanked Nancy again for her help. "I wish there were more like you, my child," she said.

Happy and light-hearted, Nancy sped away and sat down by the path to eat her luncheon. Before long she saw a woman leading two little children. The children looked hungrily at Nancy's luncheon.

"I wonder how I could help them," thought Nancy.

"Could you tell me where I could buy something for the children to eat?" asked the woman.

"Here, take my luncheon," said Nancy. "The village is two miles farther on, and I am not at all hungry."

"No, we couldn't ask you to do that," began the woman, but the children were already fast devouring the good food that Nancy's mother had given her.

After they had finished, the woman thanked Nancy; then she and the children went on their way.

Nancy played the "Wonder Game" all afternoon. As she was starting home, she saw the old man whom she had first met.

"Let me carry your bundle," she offered. The weary old man seemed very glad to be thus relieved. Then, looking at her more closely, he said, "Are you not the little girl I met this morning?"

"Yes, sir," replied Nancy; and then as they walked along she related her adventures of the day.

"I wish everyone played the 'Wonder Game,'" said the old man.—Dorothy Jean Whitted, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

HOW THE PINE TREE CAME TO HAVE CONES.

Once upon a time, the pine tree had no cones at all—nothing but needles.

Now, not far from the pine tree lived an oak tree, who was very dignified and haughty, and considered himself better than all the other trees in the forest, because he had wonderful little acorns on his branches.

"You have nothing but leaves," he told the other trees. "I am more fortunate than you, for I have ornaments."

Then he shook himself a little and the acorns fell all about his trunk and the next day the children came and picked them up. "You are not worth talking to," he told the poor pine tree. "You have not even leaves—only great, ugly, sharp needles! I would not change places with you for half a kingdom!"

The pine tree pretended not to hear what the oak tree said to her, and he held himself more erect than ever and looked straight ahead of him. But all the same, he did not like the way the oak tree talked to him. He did not so much mind not having any acorns, but he did want to have the children come and play around him as they did around the oak tree.

But he never told anyone how badly he felt about it, until one day the Christmas fairy, who grants wishes to all good people, came to ask him what he would like to have given to him.

"Oh, I should like to have acorns on my branches," cried the pine tree. "I should be so happy if you would only give me a few, so that I might drop them to the children to play with."

"I could not give you acorns, because you are not an oak tree," said the fairy, "but I will give you something bigger and prettier, because you have always been such a well behaved tree."

So she touched the pine tree with her wand, and it was covered with beautiful ornaments—bigger and handsomer than those on the oak tree. The fairy called them pine cones, and we call them that even now.

And the next day, when the children saw the pine cones, they were so pleased that they came and played about the pine tree and they carried some of the new toys home to show to their mothers. And from that day, the oak tree was more polite to the pine tree, and he never spoke of his own wonderful acorns in the same way again.—The Child's Hour.

PRACTICING RELIGION.

"Practice makes perfect," is an axiom that is applicable in the religious life as elsewhere. It is well to have a theoretical knowledge of the requirements of the teachings of Jesus, but unless that knowledge is applied to the problems of daily life, it is not likely to afford much of comfort and joy in the trying circumstances that are constantly arising.

We need to practice our religion. Sometimes, for example, in the home something will be said or done by some member of the family that is likely to provoke an outburst of temper. Then is the time to remember that hasty and unkind speech is in violation of the spirit of him who was kind and gentle. Our feelings may be deeply stirred, and unrestrained human nature may clamor for utterance; but the need is to put into practice our religion and restrain our feelings and our words. This practice will make it easier next time for us to control our tempers, and pretty soon we shall have reached a degree of perfection, at least, in this important Christian virtue.

Or it may be that in the course of the day's work there will come the temptation to resort to some sharp trick that will likely go undetected and at the same time result in some immediate personal advantage. The conscience raises a warning signal, but it is easy to disregard it in the midst of the turmoil. If we stop a moment to reflect, we know that the thing we are about to do is not what Christ would approve. Then is the time to practice our religion and forego whatever of pecuniary gain might be in sight, for the sake of the sure gain in Christian character.

And so it goes; instances might be multiplied every day that furnish opportunities for putting into practice the principles that we know are in keeping with the requirements of our religion. If we fail to make use of these opportunities, if we are content to say one thing and do another, we need not wonder that our religious experience is unsatisfactory, and that we are constantly being overcome by all the weaknesses flesh is heir to. What we need is practice, that we may become increasingly strong to resist evil and to do good.

It takes heroic blood to stand when the enemy has surrounded the position, trained his guns upon it and is hurling his missiles of death and destruction. But the foundation of God standeth sure. Blessed is he who is fixed upon it.

WORK TO WIN THE WAR.

The United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor has issued within the last few days a statement that is startling in its urgency: "Advices from Washington are that the present shortage of common labor in essential war industries amounts to one million men. As a result of this condition, vitally important war work is being retarded all over the country. * * * All this because of a lack of labor—while many men, rich and poor, white and black, are still idling and loafing; and thousands of others are frittering away their time in non-essential work. The condition is a shameful one for the American people to face. It must be changed immediately. Unless we speed up the work of production in this country, the American army in France, whose glorious achievements have thrilled the nation, will face the coming winter with insufficient supplies; our progress toward victory over the Hun will be retarded, and eventually widespread want will confront our people. Labor slackers cannot ease their consciences by purchasing Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps at 4 per cent interest!"

This is a matter that must be dealt with not only from a general economic point of view, but from a religious one as well. We are engaged in fighting a war that is not for the maintenance of economic well-being so much as for spiritual freedom. It is not a policy that is involved, but a principle—a principle that is embedded deep in the teachings of Christ himself. It is a war for liberty of thought and of conscience. It is a matter, therefore, that churches and ministers and Christians of all denominations ought to be vitally interested in. To lose this fight would be the biggest blow free men have ever suffered. The Church can well afford, in carrying out its divinely appointed mission, to do all in its power to enlist men in the ranks of the vitally important productive workers. Loafers and labor slackers need to have the gospel of useful work preached to them in the most unmistakable terms. Work is needed not only to secure bread to eat for the individual and his family, but to make the world a fit place in which to live, even in the midst of plenty.

"GO TO COLLEGE CAMPAIGN" MEETING OF LOUISIANA COLLEGE PRESIDENTS.

On Saturday morning of last week, at 10 o'clock, there was a meeting at the Grunewald Hotel in this city of the presidents of a number of the colleges of Louisiana, to consider the situation that has developed in connection with the establishment of Students' Army Training Corps in schools that meet certain requirements as to attendance, and the Government's announced policy of securing as full attendance at colleges this year as possible. The following were present: President Dinwiddie, of Tulane University; President Boyd, of Louisiana State University; President Otis, of Loyola University; President Cottingham, of Louisiana College; President Grace, of St. Charles College. President Wynn, of Centenary College, was detained by a late train, and at his telegraphic request the Editor of the Advocate represented him at the meeting. President Boyd was elected chairman of the meeting, President Otis, vice president, and President Cottingham, secretary.

The meeting developed the fact that there was unanimous and hearty approval of the steps that have been taken thus far by the Government to meet its own requirements and at the same time maintain the work of the educational institutions of the country at their highest efficiency. It was not felt that the colleges themselves can do very much more than they have been doing to emphasize the importance of college attendance at this time, but steps were taken to bring to the attention of all our people the statements of President Wilson, Secretary Baker, and other prominent government officials concerning our educational policy. It was felt that the utterances of these distinguished leaders would accomplish a great deal more toward the end sought than would the action of the school officials themselves, who might be looked upon as interested parties.

The fact that impressed us most deeply during the discussions in the meeting was the deep and genuine interest the leaders of our large colleges and universities feel in the welfare of the smaller institutions of learning. The opinion was freely and emphatically expressed by both President Dinwiddie and President Boyd that the small colleges have an important place in the educational work of the State, and that any action that would make it more difficult for them to accomplish their work would be altogether unfortunate. There can be no question but that the great institutions, by reason of the resources at their command, are able to do an indispensable work; but it was recognized that the small college has a place all its own, which must be maintained. Anything else will result in serious injury to the educational well-being of the country.

We feel that this is a matter that should be most carefully considered by the educational leaders of our Church. We are in full sympathy with the movement to develop and maintain our two great universities at Dallas and Atlanta. We cannot afford not to give them endowments and equipment that will place them in the forefront of American institutions. And we are in hearty agreement with the policy of strengthening our large colleges throughout the connection. But we believe we shall make a very great mistake if we fail to recognize the value of our small colleges and to put them upon a sure foundation.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, of Greensburg, La., has our thanks for two new names to be added to our subscription files. Brother Crooks is a faithful friend of the Advocate.

Rev. S. C. Moody, of Oloh, Miss., brings us under obligations by sending us four subscriptions with the money to pay for them. We thank him for his work in behalf of the Advocate.

We learn from an exchange that Miss Mabel Head, who was for a time Council Secretary of the Foreign Department, has gone to New York, where she will begin work with the National Y. W. C. A.

The United States Fuel Administration says that eighty million tons of coal must be saved this winter to keep war industries and warships going—and the big burden rests on the patriotic American and his axe.

We thank Rev. J. H. Hoffpauir, of Longville, La., for the renewal of his subscription, accompanied by some kind words concerning the Advocate. We trust he finds the Conference organ a help to him in his work.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, of Corinth, Miss., sent us a subscription from his charge recently, which makes nine he has sent altogether. Even a busy pastor can find time to present the claims of the official Church organ.

The Publishing Agents announce that they expect to have the new Discipline ready by September 15. The price will be fifty cents. We wish every Methodist would buy a copy and familiarize himself with its contents.

Miss Anna Bruce Bowman, of Concho, Okla., has lately contributed $1000 to the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension, on the annuity plan, which amount, added to her former contributions, makes a total of $4000.

A note from Rev. P. H. Howse, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., containing four names for our subscription files, informs us that things are moving very well on his charge. We thank Brother Howse for his work in behalf of the Advocate.

Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer preached for the Westwego Presbyterians last Sunday, in the absence of their pastor, the Rev. Mr. Harry, who is away on a vacation. Dr. Sawyer will fill the same pulpit for two more Sundays, when the pastor will return.

Meridian, Miss., was visited by the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension on August 11. He preached for Rev. E. C. Gunn, at 11 a. m.; delivered an address at the laying of the corner-stone for the new $75,000 Central Church and preached again at night.

A personal note last week from Dr. Theodore Copeland informed us that he was, at that time, engaged in the Ables Springs Camp Meeting, at Terrell, Texas. The attendance was large and growing all the time, and the Lord was wonderfully blessing the work.

Rev. Paul M. Brown, our pastor at De Ridder, La., called at the Advocate office last Saturday. He was in the city to attend a meeting of those in charge of the War Savings Stamps campaign throughout the State. Brother Brown is the efficient Parish Chairman of his parish.

Dr. H. A. Boaz, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, visited Lexington, Ky., on Sunday, July 28, to raise an $8000 debt and dedicate the new Epworth Church. He preached at 11 a. m., and took a collection of $9885, and at the evening hour dedicated the beautiful church in due form.

Mrs. J. B. Upshaw, of McDonough, Ga., has placed with the Board of Church Extension $503 to establish a loan fund as a memorial to her mother, Mrs. W. B. Candler. This fund will be known as the Elizabeth Slaughter Candler Memorial Loan Fund. It is subject to annuity.

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of the admirably arranged program that was carried out at the Jefferson Street Methodist Church at Natchez, Miss., on the occasion of the unfurling of its service flag. One of the pages has a heartening message from the pastor, Rev. W. H. Saunders, to his people.

Mrs. R. S. Le Guin, of Dubach, La., is entitled to our thanks for sending us one of the largest lists of subscriptions we have received recently. She has helped the Advocate and done a real service to those in whose homes she has placed a Church paper. She will receive a fine Bible as a premium for her work.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., presiding elder of the South Atlanta District, Georgia, is visiting his father, who is pastor of our Main Street Church at Biloxi, Miss. A friend who was present at the service informs us that Dr. La Prade, Jr., preached a fine sermon to a large congregation at Biloxi last Sunday morning.

Rev. E. C. Downer, in sending us two subscriptions recently, for which he has our thanks, states that he has held two very satisfactory meetings this month, one at Batson church, with the help of Rev. F. B. Ormond, and the other at Rawles Springs, with the help of Rev. H. E. Carter. The spiritual life of both congregations was quickened.

Rev. J. F. Dring, of Ringgold, La., has our thanks for a club of ten subscriptions, which he sent us last week. This entitles him to a fine Bible as a premium, which has been sent him. He reports that he has received 41 members into the Church to date, and that all goes well on his charge. We agree with him that he will have a good report at Conference.

A personal note from Prof. P. M. Brown, Jr., a son of Rev. P. M. Brown, of the Louisiana Conference, informed us that he was on the eve of leaving for "over there." Brother Brown has two other sons in the service, one of them being already in France. Our personal acquaintance with these young men leads us to say that our country has no finer representatives in a foreign land.

Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo has written Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, that he will be in New Orleans on October 9. He will meet the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference at that time. It is likely that a reception will be given by the Methodists of New Orleans during his stay in the city to extend to the Bishop a welcome to this part of his field.

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Durant District, North Mississippi Conference, in sending his announcements for the fourth round of quarterly conferences, says that the third round closed far in advance of any previous third quarter in the history of the district, and the fourth round begins with prospects of even greater success. This is the note we like to hear sounded—advance all along the line.

Rev. F. G. Hocutt, of Biloxi, Miss., has deeded property to the Board of Church Extension, which he values at $14,000, and thereby establishes a memorial loan fund in the name of himself and wife. The property bears income. Brother Hocutt receives a small annuity during his life and retains one of the houses for his home. It would be difficult to measure the good this gift will accomplish during the coming generation.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, a superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, but serving as a supply on the Franklinton circuit, paid us a pleasant call on Thursday of last week. He was passing through the city on his way to help Rev. H. C. Murphy, of the Springfield circuit, in a meeting at Red Oak church. Brother Sweeney, whose reputation as a garden maker is well established, says he is living up to his reputation this year.

The Florida Christian Advocate will not appear this week, on account of the confusion incident to its moving into new and more commodious quarters. The omission, however, does not break a settled policy, since the Florida Advocate is published only fifty times a year, two issues being omitted at the discretion of the editor. We congratulate Dr. Wilson, the editor, upon his good fotune in having an up-to-date home for his fine paper.

The announcement of the fourth round of quarterly conferences for the Greenville District, Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder, reached us just as the Advocate was going to press, too late for insertion in full this week. The following are the dates announced for the month of September: Merigold, a.m., Sept. 15; Evansville, p. m., Sept. 15; Tunica, a. m., Sept. 22; Coahoma, p. m., Sept. 22; Duncan, a. m., Sept. 29; Leland, p. m., Sept. 29.

We learn from an exchange that Dr. Luther H. Gulick, who attained international reputation as president of the National Camp Fire Girls, and who was prominent in founding the National Playground Association of America, died recently at his summer home in Maine. Dr. Gulick had been serving since the outbreak of the war as chairman of the international committee on physical recreation of the War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Nine Baton Rouge saloons suspended at midnight Thursday, August 15, on instructions from army authorities, issued under the war department order prohibiting operation of saloons within half a mile of an army post where more than 300 soldiers are stationed. Three hundred and fifty drafted men arrived at Louisiana State University Thursday for training in special work, and the order closing the saloons followed. Immoral resorts will not be permitted within five miles of the post.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College, was in New Orleans last Saturday and honored us with a call. A late train caused him to miss the educational meeting which was the occasion of his visit to the city, though he had the opportunity of consulting with several of the educational leaders of the State who were in the city. Dr. Wynn states that the prospective attendance in some of the departments of Centenary is encouraging, but the war situation will materially reduce the number of students of college grade.

During July 646,341 soldiers visited the Red Triangle buildings at Camp Pike. This is exclusive of the attendance at entertainments and regimental "sings," and of those served by the Y. men in their barracks. During the first six months of the year some 40,000 Testaments were given to soldiers by the Y. M. C. A., and more than 16,000 soldiers promised to read their Testaments daily. Five thousand enlisted under Christ's banner, 621 signed anti-profanity pledges, 761 the personal purity pledge, and 325 the anti-gambling pledge.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, the popular and efficient presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, is leading the preachers of his district in the campaign for the Advocate. He recently sent us a list of nine subscriptions, with check to match. The Church paper is not the least important of the interests of the Church, and the presiding elder has a fine opportunity to present its claims. Brother Linfield states that he will endeavor to have his district secure its allotted number of new subscriptions before Conference. He reports that Chunky and Meehan, and Newton have paid their part of the Emergency War Fund in full, and that Montrose, Bay Springs, and Shiloh have overpaid theirs. A fine record!

Fifty men are wanted immediately by the Y. M. C. A. for service in Russia, according to an announcement made in Baton Rouge by A. K. Jones, State executive secretary for the War Y. M. C. A., who has just received another call for men from national headquarters. Thirty are to be sent to Russia proper, while 20 will go to Siberia. There is destitution at many places in Russia, and where the Red Cross is not operating the Y. M. C. A. will inaugurate a relief service of its own. Louisiana also has been asked to supply part of the 300 men desired for Y work among civilians at munitions and shipbuilding plants. These calls are in addition to the call for 3,700 men wanted at once for Y. M. C. A. overseas army, for service with the American, French, and Italian armies.

The presiding elder, Dr. S. M. Robinson, the pastor, Rev. R. B. Freeman, and the people of Kennett, Mo., deserve unstinted praise. More than two years ago a new church was built, commodious, modern and complete in all its accommodations. It could not be duplicated now for $40,000. A distressing debt of $18,000 was left. Recently it was determined to raise this debt. They invited Dr. H. A. Boaz, Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, to come for two days to direct the campaign. He visited Kennett Saturday and Sunday, August 17 and 18, and the debt was raised with a neat margin and the church dedicated by the presiding elder at the evening service, Dr. Boaz being compelled to leave at 7 p. m. They did not ask the Board of Church Extension for a dollar, not even a loan, and they paid all expenses of the Secretary. All honor to all concerned.

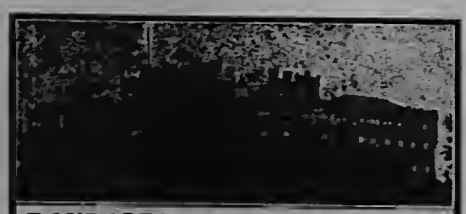
HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.



If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Mrs. O. A. BODDIE, wife of Rev. O. A. Boddie, died on June 15, 1918, at the home of her daughter, in Bienville Parish, La. She was born in Edgefield, S. C., on December 24, 1826. She was married to Rev. O. A. Boddie in 1842, and to this union were born fourteen children, of whom seven have gone on before to be with their sainted father and await the coming of mother over there. Seven still linger to mourn the loss of a sainted mother. Brother and Sister Boddie moved to Louisiana in the year 1870, where they lived happily until 1882, when Brother Boddie was called "up higher." Since the loss of her husband, she has made her home with her children, mostly her eldest daughter, Mrs. S. D. Rhinehart.

Sister Boddie was a devout Christian woman, often praising her God in the church and her home. During her last hours, she called her children to her and asked them to kneel and ask God to let her dying hour be peaceful, which prayer was granted. She fell on sleep, to awake on the other shore with husband, children, and all the redeemed gone on before. Dear ones, be faithful and you will meet her where parting is no more.

I knew Sister Boddie the last few months of her life. I found her at all times trusting in her Savior, willing and ready to go. She was surrounded by loved ones to the last, who did all that could be done for her.

Look up, dear ones, let not your hearts be sad; she is not lost, but gone before, to rest and await your coming. You can meet her there where no farewell tears are shed, and sorrow and parting are no more, but a glorious welcome forever more. Her pastor,

J. F. WALTMAN.

IN MEMORY OF MY BROTHER.

On the morning of December 12, 1917, the spirit of Roark Montgomery Floyd was called to its home in heaven. He was born in Marshall County, Mississippi, on January 9, 1888. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, while quite young. He was greatly revived while attending a meeting at his old home church three years ago and lived a consistent Christian until the summons came. He went to Texas when a young man and was married to Miss Nellie Dannar, of Pecan Gap, Texas. This union was blessed with two little blue-eyed girls—one aged four years, the other aged six months.

Roark was taken with tuberculosis of the lungs sometime ago and he and his family came back home to spend the winter, but owing to the condition of his health he got to stay only eight days when the summons came. How sad it was to part with him, but oh, how sweet to know he is at rest! He did not fear death. He said he was only waiting the call of his Master. He prayed a sweet prayer and talked to all the family that were present just awhile before the spirit left him. He was a devoted husband and father, and a friend to everybody. His neighbors loved him and thought there was no one like Roy, as they called him.

His remains were laid to rest in Macedonia cemetery near Potts Camp, Mississippi, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. T. A. Jones. He leaves a mother, father, five brothers, five sisters, a wife and one little girl to mourn their loss, the little baby having gone to be with him on February 18, 1918. Weep not, dear Nellie, we shall soon meet them both.

His sister, ALMA FLOYD.

If we think continually of God's goodness and his never-failing mercies, we shall experience such happiness that distrust and discord will fade away.—E. V. H.

A GREAT MEETING AT ACONA, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Mr. Editor: We have recently closed a very fine meeting at Acona. Brother G. A. Baker did the preaching, and did it to the satisfaction of all. The Holy Spirit was manifested in the first service, and grew in power and manifestation till the last. The church was gloriously revived, and many sinners were converted. Twenty-two united with the church, thus proving again that where the gospel is faithfully preached and the Holy Ghost honored, it will give results.

Brother Baker is a strong, evangelical preacher. He is a power in the hands of God and a terror to the devil. He will some day be one of our most effective evangelists.

I have assisted the brethren in four meetings away from home, and have seen at least 150 souls blessed. It has been a glorious year. People are listening to the gospel as never before.

I am about ready for the Annual Conference, having paid all assessments for benevolences in January, with the preacher's and presiding elder's salary paid to the present, and a great revival. Why should I not be ready? W. R. GOUDELOCK, P. C.

SERVICE FLAG DEDICATED AT NATCHEZ.

Dear Brother Carley: On the 11th inst. we had the unveiling and dedication of our Service Flag for the Jefferson Street Methodist Church and congregation in Natchez.

As in most all things, this historic church and congregation are measuring up to the high water mark in the number of boys sent to the front.

These are among the very finest young men of the city and the South, and of course will give an account of themselves. The parents and relatives and friends of these young men are justly proud of them, and will look to the day when the ends for which they have been called to the front have been achieved and they can come home. Should any of them fall on the field it can truly be said they died for HUMANITY and GOD and it can be truly written on the tomb of each, "Thou blessed martyr."

The big auditorium of this old church was well filled, the patriotic music selected for the occasion was sung by the choir and congregation, and also some special selections; among them, the new national hymn, by Clara Endicot Sears, was very inspiring.

Dr. I. W. Cooper delivered a strong, inspiring message and Judge Richard Reed, of our own congregation, presented the flag in a few well chosen words, six young ladies drew the veil and the congregation sang the Star Spangled Banner and saluted the flag, and the benediction was announced.

GOOD MEETINGS ON THE SCOTLAND CHARGE, MISS. CONF.

Dear Brother Carley: On the second Sunday in July we began our meeting at New Hope, on the Scotland charge, with Rev. C. A. Schultz, of Gallman, doing the preaching. He did some fine preaching, and several souls were definitely saved during this meeting. The church took on new life. God bless the New Hope people.

We began the third Sunday at Wright's Church. Rev. A. S. Oliver, did the preaching and, let me tell you, he knows God. He did sound and lasting work. God certainly blessed us at Wright's.

On Friday night, July 24, we began the camp meeting at Caseyville, and Rev. J. A. Wells and Rev. L. L. Roberts did the preaching. I think Wells did the best preaching I ever heard him do, and Brother Roberts, I had never heard him but once or twice before, but everybody was delighted with his preaching. I think he preached the closest sermon I ever heard in my life. The people said it was one of the best meetings that had ever been held at Caseyville.

We had several of our brethren with us during the meeting; among them were Rev. J. T. Leggett, our presiding elder, Rev. J. L. Decell, Rev. W. B. Lewis, Rev. E. J. Coker, Rev. J. N. Miller, Dr. Grafton. We were glad to have all these brethren with us and pray that God may bless them all.

On the 6th of August, we pitched the battle at Union Church, Brother Wells doing the preaching. The church seemed to be built up. Our good Presbyterian people came all the time, and Dr. Grafton helped us out so much. So this closed out the meetings on the Scotland charge. In all, we received 19 members into the Church, nearly all on profession of faith.

But that is not all; the good people on the charge, sent in and brought in, more good things to eat than this scribe ever saw. Every church on the charge sent in something, and God alone knows how we appreciated it. May God bless every member on the charge, and repay them for their kindness shown us. We are expecting to wind up with victory this fall and go to the Annual Conference with glad hearts. May a Merciful Father bless all the preachers that helped us this year.

We will, D. V., have Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Louisville, Ky., to hold our Camp Meeting next year. Fraternally,

W. W. NELSON, P. C.

CHRIST OUR WITNESS.

By Rev. Jno. D. Ellis.

(Isa. 55:4: "Behold I have given him for a witness to the people.")

Be thou my witness in that great day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away;
When I, poor sinner, must give account,
Lord, plead for me thy healing fount.

When the world melts down with fervent heat,
Let me find in thee a safe retreat;
Thy sprinkled blood is my earnest plea;
Lord, there is no shelter, but in thee.

When the Judge and I meet face to face,
Witness for me thy redeeming grace;
When empty before God's throne I stand,
Lord, lift up for me thy wounded hand.

My sins, though crimson, thou wilt commute,
If thee I take for my substitute;
I need a Savior like unto thee,
Be thou my witness, and set me free.

When the trump gives sound over the dead,
And a flaming world makes men afraid;
When all come up from a world of strife,
Be thou my witness, and give me life.

LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring,

WHY?

John R. Mott's Seven Reasons Why The Hundred Millions are Needed.

1. Because overseas the Y. M. C. A. is the only agency able to do this work on an adequate scale.
2. Because over there the forces are scattered, and small units must be served. A single division of less than 30,000 may be in 30 or 60 villages, and in each should find a Y. M. C. A. worker.
3. The constant shifting over there, requiring constant opening of new work.
4. The broken means of communication, calling for our own camion and automobile service—expensive but absolutely essential.
5. Higher prices for everything over there, and constantly increasing.
6. The urgency of the situation. Now is the only time. We have got to pour out money like water—not extravagantly, but wisely and generously. The boys over there cannot wait.
7. The extreme devotion of our men. "I have had it out with death," one of the boys said to me. That is true of every American boy.

These are reasons why we must get more than one hundred million dollars. We must get overseas at least 4,000 more American workers, one-fifth of whom should be women. We will never do any more highly multiplying work than in helping to secure these millions and these men and women for this Christlike service.

FROM ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

That war prohibition, "the forerunner of National Constitutional prohibition," will be adopted by the United States Senate on or soon after August 26, was asserted in a talk made at a luncheon of the City Club, Boston, Tuesday, by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League of America. He asserted that war prohibition is a vital part of the great war program for democracy and civilization, and that the two greatest enemies of the ideals which we are fighting for to-day are Kaiserism and all it stands for over there, and the liquor traffic and all it results in over here.

Mr. Wheeler continued:

"The American Army and Navy with our splendid allies will defeat the Kaiser across the sea. It is up to the patriots to defeat the Kaiser's best ally over here, John Barleycorn. The liquor traffic has shown its selfishness and disloyalty to the government in this great warfare, and has challenged every patriot to get into this fight.

"It put beer before country and liquor before loyalty, when it threatened to bolt the administration's war program unless the democratic house caucus' action was rescinded, which included the consideration of prohibition in the last session. It again showed its disloyalty when it threatened a filibuster on the Beer Bill unless the beer provision was taken out.

"It has continued its disloyalty by wasting food, fuel, man-power and transportation facilities when patriots are doing their best to safeguard them.

"The United States Brewers' Association has forfeited its last claim on the patriots by furnishing money to the National German-American Alliance propaganda. Congress repealed the charter of the pro-German Alliance by unanimous vote. The work, however, of the Alliance will continue in another form, backed by that part of the liquor traffic which is pro-German.

"The best way to safeguard American patriots is not only to disband the National German-American Alliance, but to prohibit its chief backer, the pro-German brewers and allied liquor dealers. The most patriotic thing which Congress can do on August 26 is to enact the War Prohibition Bill. The most patriotic thing which Massachusetts has done this year was to ratify the National Prohibition Amendment.

"Thirty-five other States will follow her example before March 1, 1919. The most patriotic act that any citizen can perform this year, unless he is actually in the trenches or in the Navy, is to do his best to destroy the liquor traffic, the greatest enemy of democracy and civilization."

Words and Their Meaning.

A certain Siamese teacher is remembered by a former missionary chiefly because of his unique definitions of English words. Some of these are the following:

Kick—A verb of the foot.
Hop—A verb of the frog.
Liar—A bad adjective for a boy.
Flattery—A good kind of curse word.
Wig—Hypocrite hair.
Bullet—Son of a gun.
Whiskey—Sin water.

His Complaint.

"And how is your husband, Aunt Sarah?" asked the employer of an old colored woman whose "ole man" was forever taking to his bed on one pretext or another.

"Porely, suh," answered the old woman. "He was gittin' along fust rate for a while, but now the doctor says he's got de convalescence."—Ex.

"Wicked? How wicked?" said the mother.

"She tells us," said the little girl, "Bible stories on week-days."—Washington Star.

No Difference.

"As a matter of fact," said the lawyer for the defendant, trying to be sarcastic, "you were scared half to death, and you don't know whether it was a motor-car or something resembling a motor-car that hit you." "May I say, then" the plaintiff calmly replied, "that I was forcibly struck by the resemblance?"—Exchange.

Needs Practice.

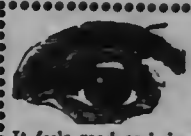
"What are you studying now?" asked Mrs. Johnson.

"We have taken up the subject of molecules," answered her son.

"I hope you will be very attentive and practice constantly," said the mother. "I tried to get your father to wear one, but he could not keep it in his eye."—Kansas City Star.

Went to Work Hungry.

Lysander, a farm hand, was recounting his troubles to a neighbor. He said that the wife of the farmer who employed him was "too close for any use." "This very morning," said he, "she asked me: 'Lysander, do you know how many pancakes you have eaten this mornin'?' I said: 'No, ma'am, I ain't had no occasion to count 'em.' 'Well,' says she, 'that last one was the twenty-sixth.' And it made me so mad I jest got up from the table and went to work without my breakfast."—Exchange.



The Lesser Evil.

A certain little Baltimore boy was evidently a firm believer in the adage, "Of two evils choose the lesser." Turning a corner at full speed, he collided with his uncle. "Where are you going?" asked the uncle when he had regained his breath. "Home!" panted the boy. "Ma's going to spank me." "What?" gasped the astonished uncle. "Are you eager to have your mother spank you, that you run home so fast?" "No, sir," shouted the boy over his shoulder as he resumed his homeward flight; "but if I don't get there before pa, he'll do it."—Harper's Magazine.

THIRTY-DAY DRIVE FOR TEACHER TRAINING IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The evangelical denominations of the United States and Canada have arranged for a simultaneous drive, beginning about the fifteenth of September and lasting for thirty days, to establish teacher-training classes in the Sunday schools of North America as a permanent and normal part of the school's work.

The day when any person can be a Sunday school teacher, when anything goes as teaching in a Sunday school, when anything, so long as it is religious, will do for a Sunday school lesson, is past and gone forever. All denominations are convinced that the work of the Sunday school should be true to the best educational principles. As a first step in this program of progress, it is necessary to have trained teachers who will understand three things: the pupil to be taught, the principles of teaching, and the material for teaching. For this reason, the denominations are working together for the promotion of teacher-training as part of the Sunday school program.

Some Sunday early in September will be known as "Teacher-training Sunday" and will mark the beginning of the drive. In our Conference we will begin September 15. All the Sunday school agencies are behind this drive. In our Conference we are to bring this matter to the attention of about six hundred schools. Who is to do this work for our beloved Church? Of course the Field Secretary of the Conference must do his part; but it will require the best efforts of every presiding elder, pastor, superintendent, teacher, and district officer to carry the news to the remotest school in our territory. We may not put a teacher-training class in every school, but the least we can do is to give the opportunity to the smallest school under our care to do this most important work.

In a few days literature will be mailed from the office at Nashville and from my office to our leaders, giving information as to how this work must be done. I pray that no man will throw this literature aside until it has been prayerfully considered, and that no man will pass criticism until he has obeyed the call of his Church in this concerted effort to help all the people.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Certainly the Brookhaven Institute was a success. The impression made by Rev. C. V. Breithaupt was fine. He reached the hearts of the people and got a fine response. I was delighted with his work and so were the folks.

Mrs. Featherston's demonstration of the Elementary work was very fine indeed, and I feel that these two features of the program will do much abiding good.

Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder, presented the claim of the Centenary Celebration in a most telling manner. I feel that we need to be aroused over this great opportunity to the Church.

Mrs. L. H. Bowen presented the Cradle Roll, and Mr. J. M. Wood presented the Wesley Bible Class and stressed the necessity of teacher-training. Brother Wood made one statement that I wish all the Sunday school workers would get. He said: "We had gotten the impression from somewhere that the book, 'The Pupil, the Teacher, and the School,' is very hard; I want to say to you that it is not and that you will find it very interesting and helpful. You need not fear the psychology; why it is nothing but common sense you have been using all your life."

It was a most helpful occasion indeed.

"Every Sunday school with a teacher-training class." This is the goal for the Drive. We can do it and it will give power and a greater victory.

Brethren: It may be that these dates will not be as convenient for you as some others that you might designate, but when we take into consideration that we have seven districts, and that our Sunday School Board has only one worker in the field for full time, it is easy to see that we have to cut every corner that can possibly be cut in getting from one charge to another and in saving as much mileage on trains as possible.

Let me urge that you accept the suggested date as per above tour if at all possible; that you have as many of your officers and teachers present as you can get to attend the meetings; that you write me at Alexandria that the date will be acecptable to you, if it is.

Where the close of a visit to one charge is indicated as the same date that work is to be done on another charge, the best work can be done by having a round table discussion with the Sunday school workers the morning of the second day, and for the next place to be visited on that date to prepare for an evening service with the entire church congregation or as many friends of the Sunday school work as can be prevailed upon to attend the evening service.

Fraternally yours,
C. V. BREITHAUPT,
Field Secty., La. Conf. S. S. Board.

CHILD LABOR BILL INTRODUCED IN CONGRESS.

Congressman Edward Keating of Colorado stands sponsor for a new war measure which would directly prohibit the labor of children under the age of 14 years at any time, and of children between the ages of 14 and 16 for more than eight hours a day or at night, and of children under 16 years of age in mines and quarries. These are the standards of the federal child labor law recently declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The new bill seeks to restore and maintain these standards during the war by direct prohibition under the war power of Congress, as there is no question of the authority of Congress to meet the present emergency in this way. It is believed by child welfare workers that prompt action by the federal government is needed, since it is known that many children went back to work immediately upon the decision of the Court, and that the lure of high wages on the one hand and the high cost of living on the other are inducing many others to keep out of school in the States which have not enacted these standards.

The new bill was drawn by Thomas I. Parkinson of the Legislative Drafting Research Fund of Columbia University and has been approved by a Joint Committee of the National Child Labor Committee and the American Federation of Labor, which are actively supporting it.

Edward N. Clopper, Acting Secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, says: "This proposed exercise of the war power of Congress is not only to protect the children from excessive hours of labor and premature employment, but also to conserve national health and vigor. Children who lose their chance for education and normal growth to-day, will make poor citizens to-morrow. Those who are now children will have to bear the burdens arising from the war, so every opportunity must be given them to become strong and intelligent. The passage of the bill as a war measure will give the National Child Labor Committee and the American Federation of Labor and others interested in permanent child labor legislation time to study the best methods of meeting the objections of the Supreme Court to the old law and to frame a bill for times of peace calculated to pass the test of constitutionality. In the meantime, the exploitation of children will be prevented. When the old law was declared unconstitutional it was insisted by those who were opposed to such federal legislation that the States would each take care of their own problems satisfactorily. The opportunity soon came—the legislature of Georgia, from which State strong disapproval of the old law had come, convened a few weeks after the decision of the United States Supreme Court was handed down. A child labor bill embodying the standards of the federal law was introduced in the lower house but was roundly denounced on all sides and promptly rejected by a vote of nine to one in the committee to which it had been referred. This shows only too clearly that the remedy lies in federal legislation rather than in an appeal to the States."

The new bill has been presented to President Wilson and he is reported to have given it his unqualified approval.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to do your best will breed in you temperance, self-control, diligence, strength of will, content and a hundred other virtues which the idle will never know.—Charles Kingsley.

SUDDEN DEATH.

By J. W. Lipscomb, M.D.

I saw him as he walked the streets
With all his manly pride,
As into his car he stepped,
To take that fateful ride.
And then methought, as mortals oft are wont,
Of life's uncertainties and death,
Of mortality and immortality,
Separate only by a breath.

I wondered as I saw his corpse,
As from that ride he came,
All mangled, torn and bleeding there,
If this could be the same
Proud man who, smilingly, had gone
Upon that fateful ride,
So swiftly from terrestial things
Into eternity to glide?

And then methought, if he but ready be,
As God who knew his inner life did see,
Death's call would have no fears for him;
The evening shadows would be bright—not dim,
As carried to his heavenly bliss
Welcomed by his Master's kiss,
He hears the angels proudly sing,
"Death where is thy victory! Grave where is thy sting!"

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. SCARRITT BIBLE AND TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Scarritt Bible and Training School, after twenty-six years of most valuable service, during which hundreds of choice young women have been trained for both Foreign and Home Missions, and are now in their several fields, announces the election and acceptance of the Presidency of Rev. E. F. Cook, formerly and for many years Foreign Secretary of our Board of Missions. His personal visits to all our foreign fields and his careful study of their needs admirably fit him for his chair of Church History and Missions. He arrives this week to take charge of his important post, Miss M. L. Gibson remaining as Lady Principal.

In addition to other former members of the teaching staff, strong and trained and experienced college graduates take the chairs of Bible Instruction and of Sociology. The former will be filled by Miss Mabel Roberta Carter, a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University and a post graduate of Boston University. Miss Sophia Gleim, a graduate of Chicago University, takes the department of Sociology. These two valuable teachers take the places of Mrs. Hargrove and Miss Howell, who have been called to special work by the Woman's Council, Miss Howell as Secretary of Oriental Fields, and Mrs. Hargrove in connection with the Centenary of American Methodist Missions.

Never were trained women more needed than now in all our fields, both Foreign and Home, and the reorganized and enlarged Training School is ready to do the best work in its history. Let its halls be filled with the choicest and most consecrated young women. The higher standard of entrance makes a strong appeal to all such students.

EUGENE R. HENDRIX,
Chairman, Board of Managers, Scarritt Bible and Training School.

COMMITTEE ON CITY MISSIONS AND DEACONESS WORK.

Mrs. R. W. MacDonell.

The Woman's Committee on City Missions and Deaconess Work held its annual meeting at Lake Junaluska on July 2 and 3. The importance of the appointment of deaconesses at this time is magnified because of the problems arising in Wesley Houses and churches located near military encampments. Mature, strong women with gifts of leadership are necessary at these places, as a large part of the war work of the Church now consists in absorbing the attention of the girls of the teen age in order to divert them from the attractions of khaki and other military paraphernalia.

There were calls for one hundred and forty deaconesses and home missionaries, and only ninety-eight were available for appointment. Imagine the distress and embarrassment of having to deny thirty-two insistent calls! Twenty-two listed for service last year were not available this year, while there were only six new deaconess candidates to enter. This apparent net loss of fifteen workers would be distressing were it not for the fact that five have gone into direct war work and a large group into indirect war work in that their fathers and brothers had been drafted into service, and they had to return home to assist in the family support. There were others temporarily retired for health reasons or because of family obligations.

The committee decided to enter no new fields. Two Wesley Houses were closed, and three churches that were served during the past year were denied deaconesses because there were not enough to go around.

Despite these discouraging facts, reports show that there has never been a year in which the deaconess and city missionary have demonstrated more thoroughly the fact that they are an essential part of the Church's work. Reports from all the Wesley Houses, Bethlehem Houses, and other social centers show that they have taken a worthy part in the war program of the nation. Especially has this been true in settlements working among foreign-born people. The watchword of deaconesses and home missionaries during the year has been "Co-operate, Serve, or Die."

OUR PRESENT OPPORTUNITY.

(Extracts from an Address by Dr. John R. Mott.)

"For the twelve months following the entry of the United States into the war, the gifts from this country for absolutely unselfish objects, such as the Red Cross, the Christian Association, relief of stricken nations, welfare funds, but not including national loans, denominational gifts or education, will be at least $330,000,000. In no year before the war did America give for such causes as much as $30,000,000. We have nothing to boast about. That is only about three dollars and a little more per capita, whereas I visited cities in Canada within a few weeks where they were giving now, in the fourth year of the war, fourteen dollars per capita for every man, woman and child."

"The very fact that every thing is upheaving means we are going to have a period of unexampled reconstruction. The very fact that the world is bearing impossible burdens means that we are going to have the chance of our lives to lift loads. The very fact that people are suffering is going to make our generation unique in the development of heart power. The very fact that this world is embittered is going to give Christianity its chance."

"Nothing has happened in this war which has invalidated a single claim ever made by Christ or on behalf of Christ. Not a thing has taken place in the world which has weakened one of Christ's principles. Christ never was so necessary, never more so; never more unique and never more sufficient. It is a great thing by an infinite process of exclusion, like this war has been, gradually to rivet the attention of the world upon the unchangeable One, the One who is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. He came not only to proclaim a message, but that there might be a message to proclaim. Thank God for the chance of the ages to go back into our colleges and into our homes and into non-Christian nations and fix attention on the Only One that has not slipped and fallen. There He stands higher than all the rest, strong among the weak, erect among the fallen, clean among the defiled, living among the dead—Jesus Christ our Lord."

Spiritual service looks not to immediate result so much as to a time of harvest to come. There is a joy set before it, which is a positive inspiration to endure all that is involved of present toil and hardness.—J. S. Holden.

Proof that Some Women do Avoid Operations

Mrs. Etta Dorion, of Ogdensburg, Wis., says:

"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

How Mrs. Boyd Avoided an Operation.

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

LABOR PROBLEMS AND THE Y. W. C. A.

Labor Sunday, which comes this year on September 1, is to be Woman's Labor Sunday. Ministers all over the country, will be considering with their congregations, matters that have grown to be facts of first-rate importance almost over night. While we were drafting and training our army of men for service abroad, an army of women was quietly recruited, not only to take the places of some of the men who had gone, but to make up the reinforcements that were needed back of the lines. Curiously enough, when the National Army was one million, five hundred thousand strong, that same number of girls and women were already busy in war industries. And as one army grows, so does the other. For every man in khaki, there is a woman in industry.

The Ordance Department Woman's Committee under Miss Mary Van Kleeck, has given to the Y. W. C. A., the task of providing recreation and the elements of real community life for the girls now working in the big munition cantonments. Industrial Hostess Houses, modeled after the plan of the familiar cantonment Hostess House, with a cafeteria, comfortable living room, and rest rooms, are included in the government plans, and administered by Y. W. C. A. secretaries. The Government is bound that we will solve the problems of maintaining the morale of our Women's Army before they arise. The War Service Clubs' military drills, games, parties and hikes, encouraged by the Y. W. C. A., are a distinct contribution to the labor situation of the country.

This is the pledge that the members of the Industrial Service Clubs take:

"It is my desire to serve to the best of my capacity in the ranks of the Women's Industrial Army, a 'Second Line of Defense.' I pledge my loyalty to my country, and I pledge to express that loyalty by promoting in every possible way the spirit of service and good will in my work and community."

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it doesn't straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.

WHEN IS A CHILD HEALTHY?

By Mrs. Max West.

The weighing and measuring test conducted by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense revealed to many parents the fact that their children were suffering from hitherto undiscovered defects of the sort liable to cause much trouble in the future. Such defects undoubtedly exist in many children, unknown to the parents. A child may have faulty teeth, weak eyes, or defective ears, "bad" tonsils or adenoids, without being actually ill. Yet such defects should be remedied in order to make sure that he may, in the future, be able to live and work efficiently and happily. Attention to the child's health in general is so necessary to his future well-being that parents should regard it as a grave responsibility to keep him in good condition. Especially now, as the opening of the public schools draws near, mothers should make sure that they are sending their little ones to begin their lessons well equipped from the point of view of health.

A healthy child is happy; he has bright eyes, an expression of wide-awake enthusiasm; he is alert, eager for play and full of laughter. His posture is erect and upstanding; his skin is clear and smooth; his hair is abundant and glossy; his sleep is immediate and dreamless; and he is genuinely hungry at least three times a day. If a child manifests the opposite of these characteristics in a marked degree for considerable periods of time, there is very likely something not quite right in his daily care. The following health rules may help some mothers whose children seem not to be quite up to the mark in their general condition:

1. The growing child must have plenty of sleep. Up to six years he should sleep half the time—12 out of 24 hours. Part of this time may be included in the daytime nap.

2. His food should be plentiful and nutritious. Each child should have at least three pints of milk a day. Part of this may be in some other food, such as custard or ice cream. He should also have limited quantities of meat and plenty of eggs, cereals, vegetables and fruits.

3. He should have plenty of out-of-door play—not too much work, nor too long continued.

4. His clothing should be sufficient for comfort, clean and simple.

5. He should have a daily bath or rub down and a cleansing bath with warm water and mild soap at least once a week and oftener if possible.

6. His bowels should move freely at least once a day. If they do not, his diet and exercise should be so regulated as to bring about that result.

7. He should be interested in life. Sullen, dull, or unhappy children are frequently suffering from the want of interest in life. Such a child should be watched to discover, if possible, what he does enjoy and where his natural interest lies; and it is then an easy task to stimulate his interest until his whole attitude is changed.

8. He should be taught simple lessons of personal hygiene: the use of individual towels, handkerchiefs, toilet articles; good care of teeth, nose, eyes, hands, and feet.

9. He should be taught to believe that to be healthy is one of the finest possible achievements in the world, and the most patriotic.

NUXATED IRON

The Power Behind Strong, Keen, Red-Blooded Americans

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator Richard Rolland Kenney of Delaware, at present Major of the U. S. Army; General John L. Clemm (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

Ten years ago, a movement was started to found and locate an institution, at some suitable place, that would bring within the reach of the ministry, especially the young men of the Conferences on the gulf coast in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, such training, instruction and inspiration as would qualify these men for a more efficient leadership. The Seashore Camp Ground was selected as the place; and a more accessible, convenient and desirable place could not have been found. In the days gone by, these Conferences had made the Camp Ground famous for the great revivals that had been held; and many souls had found the way to God.

The first year was an experiment on the part of the movers of the enterprise, but it was a success from the very start. Much good has been accomplished and many young men have been helped to a higher conception of their high calling. Men like Dr. Mathews, of Chicago University, Dr. Robertson, of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Bishop Hoss, Bishop Candler, Bishop Quayle and Dr. Henry Cope are some of those who have been the lecturers and speakers at different times, and many others of equal note. To say that it has been anything but a success would be less than the truth, and the many instructors who have lectured the undergraduates in the class work have rendered a great service to the Church.

It has been my pleasure to attend all the sessions of this school since it started but three, and to hear most of the very best they have had; but I must say that the 1918 session, in some respects, was the high water mark and set a new record.

It had been rumored that this year would be the last session, as some things had taken place that would make it expedient to discontinue, but I can say there is not the least thought on the part of the promoters that this school shall be abandoned. In view of what has been done and the possibilities for the future, it would be a sin against the young men in the patronizing section to let it drop out. As long as the Church recognizes the work done in the undergraduate classes, the school will continue, and will continue to do a great service. For the ten days given to this school each year I am sure that, if the young men could be at Chicago University, Moody Bible and Training School, Emory or the Southern Methodist University, they could not do better or get more real good.

At the recent session, Dr. Snyder, of Wofford, sustained his great reputation as a lecturer and thrilled the large congregations that attended.

Dr. Ozora Stearns Davis, President of Chicago Theological Seminary, preached two very fine sermons, and then told more about how to preach than any it has been my pleasure to hear. In fact, it was the very best that Chicago could give. Then what shall I say of Dr. Camden M. Cobern, of Allegheny College, of the M. E. Church?

As I thought of the many young men in easy reach of this school I was sure that it was a pity, yes, more than a pity, that they did not hear what he had to say on the Bible. It gave them a new grip, a larger vision, a stronger faith to grapple with the doubts and dissipated faith of these trying times, and times when the ministry must have a sound adjustment of all things, divine and heavenly.

This school can not run in opposition to any other. It has a territory all its own, and a need to supply that can not be met by any other. To discontinue it, or to expect some other school of the kind to fill its place, is out of the question. The location could not be surpassed, the local surroundings are as beautiful as a dream and everything just ideal. It was unfortunate that the Junaluska meeting came this summer at the same time and took so many of the presiding elders of the patronizing Conferences away.

I do not want to seem presumptuous, but if the presiding elders and the Bishop in charge of the patronizing Conferences will do the best service for the young men of the Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana Conferences, they can not do better than to take hold of this school in real dead earnest, and consider it a part of their work. They owe it to the young men, to the Church, and to themselves. There is hardly a pastoral charge that could not be made to see the best thing they could do for the cause would be to give the young man the time and the means to attend this school. Nearly every Baptist congregation in the Southern Baptist Convention gives the time and the means to send its pastor to the Convention. The Methodists would do hardly less if they should be reminded. The presiding elder is the man to do this. The Bishop should get behind the presiding elders and all push together, and then we would have a school that would send a thrill through all the gulf coast States.

Then, I think, the laymen who do church work could not do better than to spend this ten days and take in these lectures, and they would be amply paid for the time. Esepcially the young people should be encouraged to attend, and the Sunday School Boards of the three Conferences should take steps at once to provide a Sunday School Department and get the very best experts to lecture. It seems to me the Sunday school and the League could combine their young peoples' department and make a thing worth while.

Evidently this is the finest property in the gulf coast section and it would be a shame for it to fall out of use, or even to continue as it is. With the attendance doubled, the financing of the school would be easily done. Some of the laymen of the Church in this section who are able, should furnish the means to erect better buildings to take care of the lecturers and furnish rooms free to the undergraduates. If they could be induced to attend this school, they would see the wisdom of doing it.

Let me, in conclusion, make an earnest appeal to all concerned in the interest of the Church to do his part, and we will go over the top next year, and the next, and on.

A PROGRAM WORTH WHILE.

A big undertaking has about it an inspiring attractiveness that appeals to men who would be unmoved by the insignificant. It is precisely this quality that is going to enlist the sympathy and interest of the membership of the Southern Methodist Church in the Missionary Centenary Movement.

It would have been easy to present an argument to prove that this is an unfavorable time for launching a movement that involves a thorough organization throughout the connection, and the collection of millions of dollars, unless that movement were directed specifically toward winning the war, or sustaining some form of activity in connection with the war. The plea could have been made that we can concentrate upon only one thing at a time, and since all our energies must be devoted to the supreme task of subduing the enemy of civilization, the undertaking of any other task would be ill-timed.

But this argument would fall to the ground upon careful analysis. This war means infinitely more than making the world safe for democracy; it means that the supreme opportunity has come for Christianity to demonstrate the validity of its claim to be sufficient for all the needs of humanity, and to have within itself a vitalic power that is able to withstand all contrary forces whatsoever. For Christ's holy Church merely to mark time while the whole world is in travail, would be to confess weakness or trepidation, or both. The times call for exactly some such program as has been undertaken.

Another consideration must be kept in mind: After this war is over, the test of efficiency is going to be applied to institutions as never before. The men who have gone through the inferno of the battle front are coming back home with a clear understanding of the value of activity and energy and enthusiasm in the accomplishment of a great task. No sentimental or theoretical considerations are going to have half the weight with them that practical efficiency will. An institution that claims to have a world-wide mission, but that has stood still in the face of the most urgent need for the fulfillment of that mission, is likely to be looked upon as unworthy of allegiance. The Church must hold its men who have gone to the front, when they come back, and it must be in a position to claim the loyal devotion of those who heretofore have not yielded to its call. The surest way to do this is to maintain a program of work that will command the respect even of the scoffer.

We need have no fear that the call for thirty-five million dollars from the membership of the Southern Methodist Church is going to interfere with the fullest performance of our duty in connection with the war. Patriotism is not a passion that will grow cold in the presence of other claims, and the patriotism of our people has been demonstrated at every turn. Nor need we fear that religious zeal will grow cold because of the requirements of patriotism. Both are passions too powerful to be subdued by any principle of expediency. The rather will one re-enforce the other.

The Missionary Centenary Movement, in a measure, meets the needs of the hour so far as the activities of our Church are concerned. The only criticism that can justly be made is, not that it is too large, but that it is too small. This feeling was actually voiced at the Memphis meeting of leaders in March. But it is big enough to enlist the interest of those who want to see the Church do big things in a big way, and it is big enough to command the respect of those who have looked upon the Church as a non-essential organization.

We do not, however, for a moment believe that the chief value of the Centenary Movement is to grow out of the raising of thirty-five million dollars for the proper extension and equipment of our work, great though that will be; its chief value will be in the deepening of the spiritual life of our people as they join together in prayer and in giving for the hastening of the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth. There will be a stirring of the heart and a quickening of the conscience that will make the Church what it ought, primarily, to be—a great spiritual force in the life of the individual and of the nation.

We have laid out before us a program that is worth while. Let us carry it out, not in a perfunctory way as if it were a disagreeable duty, but with a tremendous spiritual enthusiasm that is aroused by the prospect of winning the world.

PRISON REFORM.

We have no feeling of resentment when a man who has deliberately violated the law of the land, after a fair trial, is convicted and sentenced to a term in prison. Men nowadays are not in ignorance of the penalties provided for the violation of the law, and when they commit criminal acts it is only right that they should have to suffer.

But we do not believe that conviction of a crime should deprive a man of all his rights as a human being. The commission of a crime does not, of itself, destroy the capabilities of an individual, and there is always the possibility of penitence and amendment. It is a poor civilization that would rather damn forever, or allow to be damned, a man who has broken its laws than to redeem him to a life of usefulness by means of, and after, his punishment. Vengeance and retaliation have no place in a Christian system of penology.

We are not swayed by any feeling of maudlin sentimentality when we think of the fate of the criminal. We once had the privilege of teaching a Sunday school class in the Mississippi State Penitentiary; and we recall something of the hardness and selfishness and downright viciousness of some of the members of that class. We do not, for a moment, imagine that such persons should be dealt with as if they were honored guests in the home, to be showered with courtesies and expressions of friendship and love; by the very nature of the case, their lot is a hard one, and it should be so.

But we cannot believe that prisoners in our penal institutions are no better than vicious brutes, to be treated with all the harshness and cruelty that unfeeling guards can devise. They are helpless before the arm of the law; they are at the mercy of merciless overseers and guards. Many a criminal, who might have been rescued by just and humane treatment, has been hardened beyond any probability of reform by the unjust treatment he has received in prison walls and on prison farms.

We have fondly imagined that the horrors of the old prison system have been done away with. In many respects, perhaps, they have; but, if the stories that come to us from responsible sources are to be believed, there is still enough permitted in the treatment of prisoners to bring the hot blush of indignation to the face of every conscientious citizen of this land. Some people are always looking for some reform movement into which they may throw themselves for the general good of society; here is one that public sentiment should lay hold of and develop to the point where at least simple humanity would remedy some heart-sickening evils.

THE TEACHER-TRAINING DRIVE.

We cannot afford to neglect the importance of doing everything in our power to make successful the effort to increase the number of trained teachers in our Sunday schools. This effort is being made by a large number of the evangelical denominations of the United States and Canada during the fall months. In our own territory, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sunday school field secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, announces that the drive in that Conference will begin on September 15, and will continue at least a month. The other Conferences are likewise making preparations to carry forward this work.

We trust all our preachers and Sunday school officials will give every encouragement possible to the field secretaries as they enter upon this great undertaking. They cannot accomplish the task unaided, faithful and energetic though they are. The way must be opened for them; the literature that has been prepared must be circulated and read; careful attention must be given to the details of meetings and programs. A thing worth while is worth working hard for; we know of nothing that will strengthen our cause more in the years to come than the raising up of a generation of skilled teachers for our Sunday schools. It is the correct method of beginning at the ground and building up.

HOLDING TO A COURSE.

When once we have decided to do a certain thing at a certain time, that thing ought to be done at that time—unless this would be positively wrong—simply because we decided that we would do it then. For any decision made, or intention formed, is a promise of the will; and the turning from that decision or intention, unless such change is a plain duty, means a broken and weakened will. This is as true of the ordinary routine duties of daily life in the home or the office as of decisions in matters of moral right and wrong.—Selected.

IS THERE A GOD?

By Wm. C. Allen.

A fire-mist and a planet—
A crystal and a cell—
A jelly-fish and a saurian,
And caves where the cave-men dwell;
Then a sense of law and beauty,
And a face turned from the clod—
Some call it Evolution,
And others call it God.

—William Herbert Carruth.

One sunny afternoon in London in 1916, I entered into conversation with a group of young soldiers and girls in a pretty little park close by Westminster Abbey. I spoke to them of the joy there is in Jesus, whereupon one of them exclaimed: "There is no God—I was brought up to believe such things, but know better." He assigned as the reason for his assertion the awful sufferings developing from the war and his personal experiences in the Dardanelles. His loss of faith, like that of many others, was based on the persuasion that no deity worthy of reverence could permit such anguish to overtake mankind. These doubters represented a natural unwillingness to admit that forgetfulness of religious authority is, in individual, national, or international life, succeeded by suffering somehow or somewhere. Retribution is not a matter of chance. This fact alone indicates a profound reason for confidence in the existence of a God.

The lofty mountains, the thunder of the cataract, the boisterous sea, the flow of the rivers, the fruitful field, the lonely forest, all bear impressive witness to a universal and wonderful Architect. Every humble blade of grass, each modest wild flower—the germination and growth of which science can not explain—bear testimony to the marvelous handiwork of a supreme Creator. The stars in their courses tell of a great Superintendent of the universe without whose control all things would collapse and perish. God is everywhere. The touch of His finger is detected in the far-off worlds—the music of the wind sings His praise.

The most amazing fact of history is the realization of Biblical prophecy. Men of vastly different epochs, with widely diverse intellectual capacity, often unknown to each other, all dedicated to Jehovah, foretold with great variety of detail of the coming of One who was to be the light and hope of the world. Their extraordinarily various predictions were realized in the personality of only one man, Jesus Christ. According to the law of compound probability as applied to chance, there was not one possibility in very many millions of such a consummation of prediction. To assert that this is coincidence is absurd. The only explanation is that a supernatural authority was operating through those seers of successive centuries, and that when Jesus came He was really what He claimed to be—the incarnate Son of God.

A defiant and sinful man or woman who has been regenerated, purified, redeemed—and there are many such—is a miracle that the unsupported will of man can not produce and which philosophy cannot explain. A transformed life bears witness to God. In the presence of twice-born men, the assertions of the agnostic are scattered as the dust.

To those who reject Jesus because of finite vision or human limitations, He with love to-day cries out, "Oh, ye of little faith." Those who lay aside the doubts that have harassed them find in Him what he promised—peace. The inevitable law of retribution applying to individuals and nations, the beauty of the nearby dew-drop or the distant suns, the miracle of heart-change, the marvels of prophecy, alike proclaim that there is a God.

"SELLING" RELIGION.

He was a breezy Western sales manager, spending a few days in New York, and on Sunday morning he found his way to one of the big metropolitan churches. The minister, a vigorous, convincing man, of unquestioned faith, preached a remarkable sermon, in which was a strong undercurrent of evangelistic appeal. The expert, who knew the psychology of salesmanship from its every angle, was held spell-bound by the power of the preacher. Frequently he turned to his companion and whispered his admiration. At the close of the service he went forward to congratulate the minister on the splendid effort he had made.

"That was a marvelous presentation you made this morning," said the sales manager, "and as a stranger within the gates I wanted to stay and have the privilege of thanking you for it, but having said that, honesty compels me to state that if you worked for me I would discharge you."

The preacher caught his breadth at the suddenness of this announcement, and begged the gentleman to explain.

"Why, it's perfectly simple," said the successful business man. "you marshaled your talking points in a masterful way, and you had your goods sold, but you made the fatal mistake of not trying to take any orders."

As the minister reflected on the sales manager's criticism the conviction forced itself upon him that his visitor was right. He had made his case, but had not attempted to crystallize it into what the business house calls "results." Customers that had mentally been convinced and were ready to purchase were sent away without the chance.

Why is it that the incident that occurred in that church is repeated over and over again, in its essence, in churches throughout the country? Is it lack of confidence in the message? Is it a fear that the "beauty of the service" will be marred by a frank and fair invitation? Is it because some of the church members, who love to have things "orderly," object to having a straightforward test in "their" church?

Whatever may be the explanation, the stern fact remains that the minister often sells his goods without taking the semblance of an order, and before the matter is clinched the prospective customer changes his mind and forgets or neglects the great impression that was made upon him by the preacher.

The writer was an attendant at a splendid church service only a few Sundays ago, where he heard a compelling message that surely must have gripped everyone present. But, illustrative of the point of the salesman's criticism, a notice that was given from the pulpit that day furnished evidence of poor selling ability.

"The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed in this church next Sunday," announced the minister, "and any persons wishing to unite with the church, either upon profession of their faith or by letter, may present themselves before the officers of the church on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock."

That was all. No burning, apostolic appeal for men and women who were tired of defeat and sin to grasp an opportunity for the beginning of a new life! No warm word of welcome to the outsider, telling him how happy the church members would be to welcome him into their fellowship! No appeal to the weary and heavy laden to come to the great Head of the Church to find rest! Nothing but a bald announcement that "anyone wishing to" blast his way in, could, if his courage held, face the governing body of the church on Thursday night.

In a modern treatise on salesmanship the author says: "Always be ready when the moment arrives for closing the deal. Have plenty of well-sharpened pencils, a fountain pen in good working order and every facility at hand for the signing of the contract. Make everything so simple and easy that the customer will not wish to change his mind."

Why should not the salesman of religion be expectant, and even confident? His ability to make the "presentation" is generally of the highest grade. The goods he has for sale are universally desired; in fact, if every man would be honest, he is more anxious to purchase that commodity than anything else in the world. The price is not prohibitive, for the preacher's product has not advanced "on account of the war," and is offered still without money and without price. Knowing all of these things, the salesman is in a position of tremendous advantage, and he should press his case expectantly.

"If I had a school of salesmanship I would make a specialty of the philosophy of expectancy," says an efficiency writer. "I would never lose an opportunity of driving home this philosophy of expectancy to make good. I would constantly emphasize the lesson of expecting success, expecting to win out, until it should become the dominant note in the salesman's life." Wise words and as wise for the preacher as for the drummer.

Competition in the realm of the soul is quite as keen as in any phase of commercial life. "The battle of angels and demons for the soul of man" is not mere rhetoric. It is a vital and tragic fact. The downward tug is ever present and must be offset with the greater power of the upward beckoning. The minister cannot be too workmanlike in bringing his persuasive power to bear upon the man whom he would rescue from sin. Goldsmith aptly describes this faculty in his reference to the persuasiveness of the village preacher:

And as the bird each fond endearment tries
To tempt its new-fledged offspring to the skies,
He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.

The writer does not question the motives of the ministry. Some of the noblest men the sun shines upon are preaching the gospel to a lost world. It is not their motive, but their method, that is at fault when they fail to reap a commensurate result of their labors.

There is a vast deal of psychology in the gospel appeal that differs only in kind from the psychology of salesmanship. There is no valid reason why the men who make the presentation of the greatest and most convincing case in the whole world should not be as intrepid and confident as men who sell leather goods or automobile accessories, and there is good reason for believing that if a general practice of "taking orders" were instituted at practically every religious service we would see converts flocking to the church "as doves to their windows."—W. W. Adair, in Christian Advocate (New York).

A PRAYER FROM THE LONG AGO.

O Lord of heaven and earth, we are truly sorry for all our misdoings; we utterly renounce whatsoever is contrary to thy will, and here devote ourselves entirely to the obedience thereof. Accept, O most merciful Father, this renewed dedication which we make of ourselves, our bodies, souls, and spirits, unto thee. And grant that we may be able every day to offer up ourselves more sincerely and more cheerfully unto thee; with more pure affection, and hearty devotion, and ready disposition to thy service. Preserve in our minds a grateful sense of thy mighty love, that we may follow the doctrine and example of thy Son Jesus Christ. Grant that we may be like him, pure and undefiled, meek and gentle, peaceable and patient, contented and thankful. Fulfill unto us all the gracious promises that he hath made unto us. Let it be unto thy servants according to his word. Amen.—Simon Patrick.

GOD CHOOSES QUALIFIED MEN.

History shows that God chooses qualified men to carry forward His designs. It was no accident that the man who did the most to establish organized Christianity was thoroughly trained for his task. Paul was a man of liberal education and would have made his mark in any calling upon which he determined to bestow his talents. A professor in one of our law schools told an audience not long ago that if Paul were living in the United States to-day and were engaged in the practice of law, he could easily make a hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year. A survey of his writings and the achievements of his crowded life will convince any fair-minded student that he would have attained eminence in any realm of service he might have selected. But his native endowments could not have reached their highest efficiency without the discipline of technical training and culture.

He studied Greek literature and philosophy in the schools of Tarsus, which were famed throughout the world. Three times he refers to the Greek poets and in his argumentative combats with the Stoics and Epicureans he shows that he has an accurate knowledge of their doctrines. As a Roman citizen he enjoyed certain cosmopolitan influences which broadened his intelligence and gave him a proper appreciation of law and order. At Jerusalem he was the pupil of the most famous Jewish teacher of his times; for the fragments of Gamaliel's instructions that are left us indicate that he was a man of extraordinary ability. The finest streams of Graeco-Roman civilization and Hebrew religious culture converged in Paul and made him one of the broadest scholars of the day.

When, after his remarkable experience on the way to Damascus, he fully surrendered himself to Jesus Christ, his life was sanctified by a profound consecration to truth and his learning was transfused with a spiritual element that lifted him to the sublimest heights of usefulness.

Dr. Augustus H. Strong in his lectures on the books of the New Testament said: "It is very remarkable that the apostle Paul, who, before his conversion was the greatest enemy of Christianity, has become the founder of the great majority of Christian churches, for the churches that were founded by the Twelve had died out. Paul is the principal author of the New Testament, for, including Luke and Acts, which were probably written under his supervision and with his sanction, the major part of the New Testament may be attributed to Paul. Christian doctrine owes more to him than to all the other twelve apostles put together."

We are sometimes tempted to believe that the highest scholarship and the deepest spirituality are not congenial yokefellows, but Paul is a signal proof that a man may have the ripest learning together with the strongest passion for the souls of men. On Mars' Hill he skillfully appealed to the intellects of his hearers and penetrated their consciences by the application of gospel truths, calling upon them to repent and follow Him whom God had raised from the dead. A simple exposition of truth like Paul gave at Athens, the seat of culture, is the supreme need and is always the effective message. The educated man is best qualified to deliver it.

It is said that no great religious stir has ever been made by the Christian Church without the aid and inspiration of cultivated minds. Martin Luther declared that with the single exception of John the Baptist's unique mission, he knew no striking revelation of the Word of God in which the way had not been "prepared for it by a revival of languages and letters." In his "Address to the German Nobility" he says, "Even if we had no souls, and schools and languages were not needed for God's sake and the Bible's, there would still be ground enough for establishing the best possible schools both for boys and girls, for the world needs fine and capable men and women to conduct its affairs." Luther was largely instrumental in laying the foundations of our modern educational systems, advocating the multiplication of public schools and the compulsory attendance of children upon them. Religion has no fear from knowledge but much to dread from ignorance and superstition.

The Wesleyan revival of the eighteenth century was born in a university, and could not have attained its marvelous proportions had it not been guided in the order of Divine Providence by men of trained intellect. Wesley placed so much emphasis upon the cultivation of the mind that he felt that it was necessary to warn his preachers that "gaining knowledge is a good thing, but saving souls is a better." Education in his view is a means by which men become more effective in co-operating with God in saving their fellows. Is it not reasonable that the Holy Spirit should choose men not only of pure hearts but of trained minds for accomplishing great things in His kingdom? Nothing which we have written is designed to reflect upon worthy men who have not been able to secure a college education, but to show that a man's usefulness is often greatly enhanced by this priceless boon.—Editorial in Baltimore Southern Methodist.

PROF. WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH.

Professor Walter Rauschenbush, who died July 26, was born at Rochester, N. Y., October 4, 1861. He came of a long line of ministers and university graduates. He worked for eleven years in a tenement section of New York City, refusing several invitations to editorial and educational positions. During an epidemic of Russian grippe he exposed himself prematurely in order to help his parishioners, and his hearing was affected. This handicapped him for the rest of his life.

In 1897 he became professor at Rochester Theological Seminary, first of the New Testament, and since 1902 of Church history. He was an inspiring teacher and in the seminary and city he was a dominant intellectual and spiritual influence. In the City Club of Rochester few foreign speakers drew larger crowds, which is very unusual, and none was heard with more enthusiasm.

He had published several books during his missionary years, but he first came into public notice in 1907 through the publication of "Christianity and the Social Crisis," which immediately achieved a remarkable success, and has often been called an epoch-making book. It appeared at a psychological moment, when Roosevelt was President and men like Ray Stannard Baker and Lincoln Steffens were writing on social conditions. It did more than any other book to mobilize the spiritual forces of the Church for the social awakening. John Haynes Holmes said of it four years later: "In the field of the Church and the social question one book is supreme, namely, 'Christianity and the Social Crisis,' by Professor Walter Rauschenbusch. Into this book has gone the learning of the scholar, the vision of the poet, and the passion of the prophet. It is radical without bitterness, uncompromising without fanaticism. It is the first gospel of the New Dispensation." In a guide to reading in social ethics compiled by Harvard professors in 1910, "Christianity and the Social Crisis" was the only book starred in the literature on "Religion and the Social Question."

Since he came into public notice through "Christianity and the Social Crisis," Professor Rauschenbusch was constantly in demand for public addresses, far beyond his capacity to comply. His voice was, of course, affected by deafness, yet he was one of the most popular speakers in the "forum movement," especially in New England, and had unusual readiness in handling questions put to him after the address. He paid no attention to set effects of eloquence, but talked right along and held his audiences by clearness, sincerity, abundance of ideas, capacity for illustration, and by a spontaneous kind of humor. The hold he had on audiences of all kinds, in spite of his terrible handicap, was always a surprise to himself. He most enjoyed audiences of thoughtful workingmen and audiences of students. A student said of him: "You can't help listening to him, for he is always saying something."

Professor Rauschenbusch delivered important series of lectures on various academic foundations at Berkeley, Cal., at Ohio Wesleyan, at Grinnell, at Bangor, and last at Yale.

He had two sisters who both survive him. He leaves his wife, Pauline, and five children—a daughter Winifred, who is doing investigation work for the Carnegie Foundation; Hilmer, who volunteered for ambulance service and has been in France since August, 1917; Paul, studying at Amherst; and Karl and Elizabeth at East High School, Rochester.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

FIFTY-FIFTY AND THE CHURCH.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D.

Whence came the expression I do not know, but from its use upon the streets it seems to mean an evening up—a toting fair. As the numerous calls have been made upon the pulpit in connection with the war work of our nation, I have often recalled this slang to ask if there has been in the past, or is even now being extended to the ministry, the fifty-fifty spirit. The ministers have been called upon to preach, or give a talk, upon every department of work, from how to prepare the household meals, conserve coal, etc., to the purchase of Liberty Bonds, and all, with the truest spirit of patriotism, have responded. The Church has certainly come to her own in the opinion of nations, for, almost without exception, every appeal has contained language after this sort: "We are depending upon the ministers as leaders for the greatest success of our cause—the influence of the Church is above every other," &c., &c. Then I have asked myself, Why these empty benches at our services and especially this withholding of encouragement by even those who call upon the ministers for sermons and lectures upon these so important questions? And I have said, Where's the fifty-fifty spirit?

Not long since I heard a railroad employee say that he had received a raise in salary of thirty-five dollars per month (about 33 per cent upon previous receipts) and back pay for three months. Since then I have conversed with ministers to find that there has been little advance in salaries, if any at all, notwithstanding living is just as expensive to him as to the railroad man, and already he's been working according to estimate upon the eight hour basis, overtime; for some one has calculated that upon that basis the preacher's year is 534 days instead of 365, or 169 overtime, and half the salary deferred to the close of the year, if ever at all received. Then I said again, Where's the fifty-fifty spirit? If the Church is such an essential factor in our civilization, why are her altars so deserted by our leading citizens, why so largely given over to the women and children for recognition? If the ministry is so indispensable for leadership, why this embarrassing neglect in matter of support, and failure of our leading citizens to give recognition to their worth? Again I must ask, Where's the fifty-fifty spirit as applied to the Church and her ministry?

REWARD.

I think that, whenever a man is trying to do the little errands of the Lord that come his way, the spirit of the Lord will catch him up for something larger, whether he be a minister, a manager, an office employee, an overseer, a teacher, a farmer, a what-not. Do the first work you can find for him, and he will give you more and larger errands. Shouldn't you like to be known in your community as "the man that runs on God's errands?" Well, just begin by saying, "Lord, if you have any errand that is too little or too disagreeable for anyone else to do, please let me run on it for you."—John F. Cowan.

The secret of happiness, like the kingdom of heaven, is within. It is not in this place nor that place, nor in any external surroundings. It is within the soul.—Selected.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

NOT ONLY TO SUPPLY MILLIONS.

The Church of Christ is to be tested as never before in all its history. The need of the hour is a revived and mightily spiritualized Church. The Centenary Movement, in God's providence, is not primarily to supply millions of money, but to lift Methodism to a new plane of spiritual vision and ministry from which it shall accomplish the Christian conquest of the world.

THE MOUNTAIN PROBLEM.

The great Centenary Movement offers no larger opportunity than to project and develop in connection with the schools already established by the Church an extension system by which in two or three strategic points in each country, two-story schoolhouses of four rooms each would be erected where earnest, godly teachers would quickly solve the problem of the so-called "mountain white."

Probably no one in Southern Methodism is more familiar with all the phases of the mountain problem that Miss Belle H. Bennett, LL.D., President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and a pioneer in inaugurating mountain schools. In discussing this question, Dr. Bennett says:

"For the past decade no part of our country has been subject to a larger share of sensational and, for the most part, misleading publicity than the territory embraced in the Appalachian Range of mountains extending from the Ohio River through the States of Kentucky, West Virginia, Georgia, the Carolinas, and a portion of Alabama.

"This range is estimated in round numbers to be about 700 miles in length, 250 in width, and to have a population of 2,500,000. More than one-half of these two and one-half millions of people live in cities, towns and villages and have had the benefit of all, or much, that goes to make up our American civilization in cities and towns of the same size elsewhere. In addition to these, there are many well-to-do families who live in the country near the towns, have well built modern houses, and are accustomed to the comforts and luxuries of the average Southern home.

"To this educated, cultured portion of the mountain people the newspaper reporters, sociologists, and missionary societies rarely refer in writing or speaking, and as a result the public generally seem almost to forget that these are as really and truly Southern mountaineers as are that largely exploited class frequently dubbed the "mountain white." While we are often inclined to resent this, we can readily see how it has come about in the effort to aid those who greatly need a helping hand.

"Back in the interior counties of the range, along the creek bottoms in the coves and narrow valleys, and on the less precipitous mountain sides, away from railroads, turnpikes, churches, and schoolhouses—all that makes for progress and betterment—live a cabin-home people whose condition of life is truly deplorable.

"The lives of these isolated and scattered people are pathetically primitive and barren of stimulus. The one-room cabin is lighted by the open door, while one or more rude beds, a rickety table, a 'split bottom' chair or two, a stool, and a few cooking utensils, constitute the household furniture. Now and then, if the family has inherited a loom or cooking stove, the cabin will have a 'shed room' or a 'lean-to.' Early marriages and large families are the rule; but the 'lean-to' is for the loom or the stove, not the increasing family. The one room still accommodates the household, and is sitting room and bedroom for all who live beneath the roof and for the 'stranger that is within the gates.'

"Poverty is evident everywhere among these people. In the northern portion of the range, in Kentucky, Tennessee, and the Virginias, the mountains are steep and rugged, tillable land scarce, and, except in the bottoms, the soil so barren that even the best efforts produce but meager results. The little corn crops (worked generally by the women and girls as well as the men), a few hogs, some sheep (if the man is very thrifty), with apples and peaches (wherever one or a few trees have been planted), constitute the living resources for these cabin-home people.

"With few railroads and fewer turnpikes, the ox cart and almost impassable mountain roads to poor markets, and the rude sled their only means of conveying produce, what incentive have they to industry or larger crops?

"Some of the States through which this chain of mountains runs have made a creditable advance in their public school system during the past few years; and while the more southern States still have only a three-month term, Kentucky, West Virginia, and perhaps one or two others have six. Better schoolhouses, larger salaries, stricter examinations for teachers and less politics in their appointments are noticeable. While the topography of the mountain counties, the sparesly settled districts, and the dire poverty of these rural people greatly hinder the best efforts of county superintendents and teachers, they too are sharing in this universal movement for the betterment of the people.

"What the mountain folk need, and greatly need at this time—not in ten years from now—is a good system of secondary schools, with practical industrial departments and positive religious influence and teaching. These schools should have sufficient financial assistance to put them within reach of the class of young men and women in the sections in which they are located. These will gladly attend them to prepare themselves for the coveted district schools. Those who will seek this preparation are already leaders in their communities; and if well equipped as teachers they can reach and elevate the masses as no other agency of the Church of God can do."

"TO ENTER THE TRENCHES WITH JESUS CHRIST."

The plans adopted by the late General Conference for the Centenary Movement of American Methodist Missions make altogether the most significant action taken by our Church in fifty years.

Through all the confusion and conflict of the hour, the clear call of Jesus Christ is being heard above the call of country and the call of civilization. The Christian Church is being called to enter the trenches with Jesus Christ and throw the weight of her last man and her last dollar and her deepest longing into the decision for a redeemed world.

Beyond a doubt, the words of Simeon Calhoun, of Williams College, may be repeated with deepest emphasis to-day, i. e.: "It is my deep conviction, and I say it again and again, that if the Church of Christ were what she ought to be to-day, twenty years would not pass until the story of the Cross would be repeated in the ears of every living man."

The spectacle of a great Church seriously proposing to devote itself to the accomplishment of this task heightens desire and quickens hope, as nothing else has done in the day in which we live.

SOOCHOW HOSPITAL A GREAT HELP IN EVANGELISTIC WORK—BUILDINGS OLD AND INADEQUATE.

Dr. Park Expects Much from Centenary Drive.

The story of Soochow Hospital is a story of small beginnings that have gradually moved in ever widening circles, until to-day there is scarcely a movement for civic or religious betterment in all that territory which does not, either directly or indirectly, owe its origin to the influence of this institution which is operated by the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South.

It has often helped in opening medical work at other points in our mission. Rev. Zau Tsz Zeh, after many years of splendid work in the Soochow Hospital, as Chaplain, Superintendent and General Assistant, opened up new work in Nan-zing and in Poh-Li-Hong, the good results of which abide to this present day and which will leave a lasting impress on future generations.

It has spent thousands, and tens of thousands, of dollars for additional land, buildings and repairs, added equipment and new residences for its staff, both native and foreign, collecting all of the money for this, with the exception of $2000, from donations made in China.

On a lot provided by the Hospital, St. John's Church, St. Louis, built our Soochow St. John's Church, at a cost of $13,000 in gold, one of the finest Protestant churches in China.

The Senah Stalcy Kindergarten, the pride of the Park family and said by visitors to be the most beautiful kindergarten they have seen in their travels around the world, also owes its site to the Soochow Hospital.

The Hospital often helps in renting property and opening new work, not only for our own mission, but for other missions and the Y. M. C. A. as well.

The Hospital is a wonderful help in evangelistic work. Our church workers say they can get a better hearing in Soochow and all the surrounding towns and country if they can say that they are from Tien-Sz-Tsong, the location of our Soochow hospitals.

The influence of Soochow Hospital in helping to found Soochow University, aiding in the anti-opium and anti-alcohol campaigns and anti-foot-binding movement, developing a medical school, school of pharmacy and training school for nurses, would make too long a story for the limited space of a weekly newspaper.

The Hospital has done, and is doing, a wonderful work, but a new hospital in Soochow is imperative if we are to go forward with our missionary work in that city. The present buildings are old, out of date and inadequate for the work. During the Centenary Drive is it too much to expect that some loyal, generous Methodist will acknowledge his stewardship by an investment of life or money in Soochow Hospital and thus have a part in promoting one of the greatest opportunities offered a Christian worker to-day?

SAME OLD INEQUALITIES.

"If half the zeal and passion, half of the outpouring of life and treasure, of organization and efficiency, that the State has put into this war could be thrown into the cause of the Kingdom and of the eternal verities, the world would soon be won.

ADMIRAL SIR DAVID BEATTY,
Commander of the British Fleet."

A PLAN FOR MORE EFFECTIVE LAY SERVICE.

By Rev. Geo. Stanley Frazer.

When we consider the more than five hundred thousand laymen of the Southern Methodist Church, with their splendid possibilities of leadership, with the latent powers undeveloped and the challenge to noble service, it is quite enough to enlist the serious consideration of every loyal Methodist. The church is calling as it has never called before for the mobilization of our hitherto unrelated powers for the stupendous needs in all the fields of Christian service. The Methodist Men's Club has offered to the various churches of our connectionalism a plan for enlisting our men more definitely in the work of the church. No bigger or more glorious task could claim our attention than to organize more completely the lay work of the church that it may attract, hold, and spiritualize men at home and invite compellingly those who return to us from the war. In the carrying out of such a plan we must proceed to plan our work on a basis that will enlist the greatest possible manpower of the church. It is not enough that organizations and movements with many heads but few bodies be created. There must be the working plan expressed in the life of the men of the individual church—a group of trained and ready servants of the church who stand eager for any service that they might render in the extension of Christ's Kingdom.

This is the day of opportunity for Methodism. Because of her resources in men and money hers is a place of vantage. Nothing could be more in error than to assume that because of many perplexing problems brought about by war conditions this is not an opportune time to more definitely organize our men. Because of the unusual problems that confront us we are forced to bring unusual methods and service into their solution. But no work or organization can be efficient or permanent that is not based on loyalty to the church, fellowship among the men of the church, and service in the church. That is a platform broad enough and big enough to enlist the energies of any man.

If the Methodist Men's Club were doing nothing more than carrying out its plans for bringing the church at home to the Methodist men in camps and overseas; or of formulating plans to administer more intelligently to the men when they come back home—these things alone would justify every effort that is being put forth to stimulate the men of the church. But when we think of its spirit of fellowship that affords a real attraction for men—when we think of its service in the Sunday school, in building up the efficiency of the church, in creating a more enthusiastic environment in which to build up a strong missionary sentiment, these and many other fields of service—then we cannot wonder that one of the Bishops of the church should say of its plan: "Not only is the organization desirable in the local church, but it has become almost, if not altogether, necessary that some such work should be done."

For an example of the power of such an organization as the Methodist Men's Club in any church we may consider the wonderful achievements of the men's organization in the Episcopal Church, organized thirty years ago on a platform of personal service in the spread of Christ's kingdom among men. No man can estimate its far-reaching service through its thousand chapters in all parts of the country. Suffice to say that such was the recognized power of the organization that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was looked to as one of the chief resources of the church in carrying the church to the Episcopal men in camp. Through its Army and Navy Department the Brotherhood has placed sixty-four men—laymen of the church—in the various camps of the country, and these consecrated laymen, having caught a vision of personal service in the chapters to which they belonged, are daily touching the lives of hundreds of men in the camps both in America and in France and are making real to them the ministry of the church. It is altogether significant that the power of such an organization was so genuine that sixty-four of its lay members voluntarily answered its call for service in personal work for Christ. It is further noteworthy that the great majority of these are suffering heavy financial loss for the privilege of such service—many having offered their services without any salary. Such examples constitute a challenge to the Christian manhood of the church. If there has been in Southern Methodism no distinct organization for the enlistment and training of our men in Christian service, let us recognize this as the great day of opportunity now that such an organization has become a reality and is demonstrating its usefulness in every field of the church's work.

THE BLUFF CREEK CAMP MEETING.

After having been in the delightful yet strenuous work of a city pastorate for three years continuously, without a vacation, there had begun to come unbidden to my mind visions of some beautiful, quiet spot far out in the heart of the country, when I received a letter urging me to come and preach for a few days at the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting. So, with my son Paul, who also needed a little vacation, I found myself on an early train out.

The Bluff Creek Camp Ground is ideally located for beauty, comfort, rest, good-fellowship, and worship, and these are the things that make a vacation really worth while.

Retiring at night under blankets, we were lulled to sleep by the songs of the katydids and awakened in the morning by the barking of the squirrels, to inhale the salubrious atmosphere and feast our eyes upon the beautiful country scenery.

At the hotel, where I stayed and where all the preachers ate, it seemed that Brother and Sister Brocheen must have had a special permit from Mr. Hoover to forget the war; for they gave us three times a day an abundance of white biscuits, fresh butter, fried chicken, and plenty of sugar for the coffee, together with many other good things—that reminds me that I have forgotten to weigh since I came home.

The ministers who attended for a part or all of the meeting were the presiding elder, ten of the pastors of the district, and the writer.

That most princely presiding elder, Rev. H. W. May, was in charge, and the executive committee of the Camp Ground Association, composed of godly laymen such as Townsend, Roddy, Lipscombe, Hatcher, Harvill, Stokes, Haney, and others, rendered most efficient service in looking after the conveniences and comforts of the guests and also in singing, praying and doing personal work.

No one did more faithful or efficient work than Sister Coburn, of Clinton, who presided at the organ at every service. Many of the excellent young people were in the choir and the singing, under the direction of Brother Early, of Amite, was full of inspiration and power.

I reached the Camp Ground about the middle of the meeting, after which I heard the following brethren preach: May, Early, McCain, Akin, Hoffpauir, Crooks, and Watson; and I also heard an able address by our Conference Lay Leader, W. S. Holmes. There were four preaching services a day, and during the last days of the meeting the preaching was done by the presiding elder, Brothers Early and McCain, and the writer, each having one service a day.

The congregations continued to increase until on the last day there was a great crowd from the surrounding country and from Greensburg, Amite, Wilson, Clinton, Slaughter, Baton Rouge, and other surrounding towns. It was a pleasure to shake hands with many old friends. My good friend, Brother Stokes, said that he hoped I would get religion while there and go back and scatter it all over New Orleans, to which the presiding elder exhorted the people to say "amen." Well, my brethren, these blessed days of rest and worship and good-fellowship were refreshing to body, mind and soul, and I trust that my ministry may thereby be made more effective in the great city.

The Holy Spirit was working in many hearts and many returned to their homes with deeper consecration, richer experiences, and a greater determination to live for the glory of God and the salvation of the world.

Brother May, the capable presiding elder of the district, is in high favor among both preachers and laymen, and not only demonstrated great ability in successfully directing a camp meeting, but under his capable leadership the entire work of the district is making progress.

A MOONLIGHT NIGHT ON THE GULF COAST.

By Willie Conger Page.

I lingered near a rose trellis in an old garden, wrapped in the spirit of romance and star-shine. The moon rose slowly over the quivering waters, flooding the whole world with a soft radiance. The waters from the bay came in with the incoming tide, lapping the pebbly beach with the cadence of some half-forgotten music. Ofttimes the seagulls, disturbed of their rest, sailed and circled over the deep, the sound of their wings against the wind reminding one of the distant echo of a flute in a lost dream, stirring the heart, quickening the pulses, weaving a spell of witchery over the night. The big ships lay quietly at anchor, their dark hulls rising against the blue, rounded dome of the sky, casting shadows over the silver wavelets, that played joyfully beside them.

The wind lisped softly, and whispered in my ear many beautiful legends of the sea—of spirits of the lost, who had found watery graves in its coral and gem-paved depths, that they still loitered near, to warn others of danger; of bold Spanish adventurers, who first set foot of civilization on these untouched shores, so that ofttimes, when the moon hangs low in the west, and the south wind sighs through the drifting leaves, or the gray moss sways in the errant breeze, the white spirits of those departed souls may be seen hovering like a gentle benediction to guard their loved coast; of the pearl-divers whose lives burned low, as through the depths of the translucent waves they descended and robbed old Neptune of his brightest treasure.

The zephyrs talked of ships laden with rare perfumes, and brought the aroma of fragrant spices from far-off Arabia. The sailboats out in the distance moved lazily to and fro, like white, fleecy clouds o'er the blueness of the sky. The soul, raptured by the beauty and sublimity of the scenes soared away on the wings of the wind. God seemed so near, His benign presence could almost be felt, as of old, when He walked in matchless majesty on the troubled waters of the sea of Galilee, and spoke words of comfort and cheer to His humble followers. Oh, the witchery the enchantment of the night!

They Got In.

A press report of the meeting of the American Bar Association last week, stated that for the first time women were admitted to membership, the delegates voting unanimously to admit two. We mention it merely as a matter of interest, not by way of information. Do they want to be admitted? of itself answers the question, Will they be admitted. "It must follow as the night the day," etc. We do not think the American Bar Association has lowered its standards by admitting women.

Advancing Backward.

The German Government is an adept in sophistry. It is attempting to prove to its people, with what seems to be a considerable degree of success, that the recent retreats of its armies are simply temporary and, as such, are masterpieces of strategy. We recall a well known saying, "You can fool all the people some of the time, and some of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." The German people are in for a sad awakening. In the meantime, the German armies continue to advance backward.

Less Than We Thought.

A dispatch from Washington says that a comparison of food prices prevailing now with those of five years ago, shows that the purchasing power of a dollar bill has shrunk to 54 cents in Washington and Baltimore, 57 cents in Philadelphia, 59 cents in New York and Cbicago, and 63 cents in San Francisco. These were the only cities mentioned in the report. We have the feeling that a dollar bill has shrunk more than that in these parts. In the marts of trade, a dollar bill is beginning to look like "the tenth part of a dollar, thrice computed," as O. Henry would say.

Twenty Years to Prove Their Profession.

The leaders of the Industrial Workers of the World, the organization that has been on trial in Chicago on the charge of trying to interfere with the Government's war program, have been found guilty and have been sentenced by Judge J. M. Landis to 20-year terms in the federal penitentiary and to pay fines of $20,000. These enemies in the fight for freedom, who have consistently advocated violence on the part of labor toward the employing class, will now have an opportunity of devoting considerable time to the practice of their profession—industrial workers. But they will work under the supervision of the Government.

Please Pass the Biscuit.

Food Administrator Hoover announced last week that wheatless days and wheatless meals will be discontinued on September 1, and that thereafter bread may be made of 80 per cent wheat flour mixed with 20 per cent of substitute cereals. This relaxation of the restrictions on the use of wheat has been made possible by the sacrifices of the American people in observing the conservation program of the food administration last year, and the bumper crops raised on the farms. Plenty of the new "victory bread" is assured tbe civil populations at a time when the wheat situation in Germany and Austria is anytbing but promising. Please pass the biscuit.

Who Said it Was?

A newspaper report the other day was to the effect that a member of the Louisiana Legislature has given notice that he intends to introduce at the next session of the Legislature a bill requiring people to bathe at least once every three weeks. In commenting upon the report, the eminent president of the State Board of Health is reported to have said that the time-honored institution of the Saturday night bath is not too closely observed, and that a bath once a day is not too much. The world is gradually being enlightened. The men of science are devoting themselves to the great problems of human welfare. We are glad to have it stated on the highest authority that a bath once a day is not too much. But who ever said it was?

Right.

The Administration's attitude toward the conscription of labor was outlined recently by Louis P. Post, assistant secretary of labor, according to an Associated Press dispatch. He said: "The time may come when we will have to conscript workers in mines, forests and factories, but in the name of democracy these men shall not be conscripted until we have first conscripted the places where they shall work. This democracy will not stand for the conscription of men to work for the profit of other men. The conscripted man must work for Uncle Sam, and no one else." We have not expected anything else; but we are glad to see that this policy has been laid down in definite words. Mr. Post is absolutely rigbt in his estimate of the democracy of this country.

"A Long Dry Spell."

At the time of this writing, the war time prohibition bill has not been passed by Congress, but the reports from the national capital indicate that there is very little doubt about its adoption very soon. A compromise amendment has been agreed upon that will defer the operation of the law until July 1, 1919, instead of January 1. We regret that the measure cannot become effective at once, but we are glad that it has been possible to adopt a measure that will put the United States on a "bone-dry" basis for the period of the war, including the time required for demobilization. And by that time, we confidently predict that the national prohibition amendment will have been adopted and our nation will forever be freed from the curse of the saloon. Even Texas will not suffer from a long dry spell of this kind.

Digging Up the Slackers.

Examination of the business records of about 265 coal producing companies by experts of the internal revenue committee is reported to bave disclosed unreported profits yielding more tban $5,000,000 additional tax revenue to tbe Government. The explanation is offered that while some cases show attempts to evade taxes, the companies' accountants bave experienced great difficulty in figuring the proper tax under the complicated excess profits law. Maybe so; but we do not recall a single instance of the Government's being called upon to refund an overpayment. The mistake seems always to be in favor of the companies. We believe the country at large would be very greatly pleased if the Government would allow some of these financial slackers and swinish profiteers the opportunity of meditating upon the error of their way witbin the walls of the penitentiary.

18-45 and Fight.

The new manpower bill, providing for the registration and enlistment in the military service of the Government of men from 18 to 45 years of age, has passed both houses of Congress. In the beginning of the war, it was felt that, perhaps, the number of men available between tbe ages of 21 and 31 would be sufficient to meet all requirements. But tbe situation has developed to the point where it is realized that the quickest way to end the war is to put as many men as possible into the field in the quickest possible time. The patriotism of our people has been demonstrated in the ready response to every call that has been made upon it. We are not in the war as a result of an emotional excitement, but as a result of an intense conviction that our duty lay on the side of the Allies. Our young men have made a notable record for military efficiency on the fields of France; there is no doubt but tbat our older men will do equally well. A man never gets too old to fight for the right.

We Hope He Finds Them—We Can't.

A dispatch from Havana says tbat Pedro Osorio, secretary of the Cuban food administration board, has been selected by the president to proceed to Washington to confer with the American food administrator in an endeavor to arrange for the purchase of a cheap make of shoes to be sold there by the government on account of the exborbitant prices charged by the dealers. We do not profess to be an expert on trade conditions, and we know very little about the available supply of raw materials in any given branch of industry; but we are under the impression that an investigation of the shoe business would reveal some very interesting facts concerning profits. We do not at all agree with the criticism of the merchantile business that "it is a business conducted by men who buy articles for less than tbey are worth and sell them for more than they are worth," but we are convinced that some things are not worth what they cost in the retail market. In tbe meantime, we hope our Cuban friend will be able to find some cheap shoes—we have not been able to do it.

Go to Church Instead.

The United States Fuel Administration has called upon the public in all the States east of the Mississippi River to refrain from using automobiles and otber gasoline propelled vehicles on Sunday as a gasoline conservation measure. The appeal is based upon the increased demand for government uses at home and abroad. The broad ground of patriotism is thus laid as the sufficient motive to insure observance of the request. The warning is given, however, that unless there is a hearty response to tbe request, a mandatory order will be issued wbich will accomplish the purpose. We believe our people will gladly comply with the request. It will seem a hardship to a great many of them to forego the pleasure of the long trips they have been making on Sunday, and doubtless some of them will wonder what in the world they will do to while away the time. Let them go to church. We do not recommend this as a means of whiling away the time, but as the performance of a duty that has been sadly neglected since the advent of the automobile. Here, as elsewhere, patriotism and religion go hand in hand.

American Policy in Settling the War.

Walter H. Page, ambassador of tbe United States to Great Britain, has resigned his position on account of ill-health brougbt on by his arduous labors in connection with the war. His successor has not, at this writing, been appointed by President Wilson. The Manchester Guardian, one of the leading papers of Great Britain, after paying a tribute to Mr. Page, has the following to say, as quoted by dispatches from abroad, concerning the appointment of his successor: "It is of the utmost importance tbat America should be represented here at tbis time by some one of tbe highest authority and enjoying in the greatest possible measure the confidence of the President. The American policy will, it is safe to say, be the determinant policy of the war, and how and when the war is to end will depend in a larger measure upon America than upon any other country. * * * America's influence ought to be continuously and effectively brought to bear on the whole policy of the war." This statement is recognition of tbe fact that today the United States occupies a position unparalleled in history. It brings the glow of pride to the cheek of every patriotic citizen—but it implies a responsibility that can be met properly only in the fear of God.

SHACKLING THE TEMPER.

There is an adage somewhere to the effect that the fighter who loses his temper gladdens his enemy. The experts of the prize ring will tell you this is a true saying. In further proof we have the Solomonic assurance that he who is slow to anger is better than the mighty. All of which means that anger is weakening, and tbat the man who permits his temper to rule him has a destructive master.—Exchange.

THE EXAGGERATOR.

"I'm most dead. It's hot as fire, and I've heen over a dozen miles after that colt." Andrew threw himself at full length on the lounge and wiped the perspiration from his forehead.

"Where did you go?" inquired the father.

"I went over to Brigg's and back by the bridge."

"That is a little less than a mile. Is it so warm. And? It seems quite cool here."

"No, not quite so dreadful if I'd taken it moderate; but I ran like lightning and got heated up."

"You started about 5 o'clock. And, and it is now a quarter to six," said his father, consulting his watch.

"Yes, sir, just three-quarters of an hour," answered Andrew innocently.

"Does it take lightning forty-five minutes to go half a mile?"

"I didn't mean exactly that, father; but I ran all the way because I expected the whole town would be here to-night to see my new velocipede," answered Andrew reluctantly.

"Whom did you expect, son? I was not aware that such a crowd was to he here. What will you do with them all?"

"Jim, Eddie, Tim and Sam told me they'd he around after school, and I shouldn't wonder if Ike too; that's all."

"The population of the town is about 5000, and you expect five persons. Well, as you are very sick, I am glad no more are coming. You couldn't play with them at all."

"Sick!" cried Andrew, springing to his feet. "Who says I am sick?"

"Why, my son, you said when you came in you were almost dead. Does not that mean very sick?"

"You are so very particular, father, about my talking. I don't mean exactly what I say, of course. I was not nearly dead at all; but I did some tall running, you bet. There were about fifty dogs after me, and I don't go much on dogs."

"Quite a band of them! Where did they all come from?"

"There was Mr. Wheeler's sheep dog and Rush's store dog and two or three more, and they made for me, so I ran as fast as I could."

"Five at the most! That is not fifty, Andy."

"There looked to be fifty, anyway," answered Andrew somewhat impatiently. "Carter's ten acre lot was full of dogs just making for me; and I guess you'd thought there were fifty if it had been you."

"Ten acres of dogs would have been many thousands; have you any idea how many?"

Andrew did not like to calculate, so he only shook his head.

But his father continued: "I know no better way to break you of the habit of exaggerating than to tell the children of the trouble you had in going after the colt. You ran like lightning, encountered ten acres of dogs, traveled more than a dozen miles to get a half mile; expected 5000 people here to examine your new velocipede, and when you reached home you were nearly dead."

"Please don't, father; the boys and girls will laugh themselves to death."

"Laugh themselves to death at a simple story like this? I hope not."

"But, father, I will never stretch things again if you will not tell them," pleaded Andrew.

"I hope not, my child, for it will finally cost you the faith of all your hearers. Nobody relies upon the word of one who is given to habitual exaggeration. State things just as they are. Habit grows with years and becomes in time so deeply rooted that it will be impossible for you when you become a man, to relate plain, unvarnished truths unless you check the foolish habit in which you indulge of stretching simple incidents into most marvelous tales."—Mrs. W. T. Morrison, in Western Christian Advocate.

A LITTLE ERRAND GIRL.

Hester loved to do errands for her mother. One day she had been talking with her mother about God, when she quickly raised her head, with a bright look in her eyes, and said: "Why, mother, then God is sending us on errands all the time. I am His little errand girl, too."

"Yes, dear; He has given us errands to do, and plenty of time to do them, and a Book written full to show us how. Every day we can tell Him how we try to do them, and ask Him to help us; so when He calls us, we will run to meet Him and give Him our account."

"I like that," the child said, nestling back in her comfortable seat; "I like to be God's little errand girl."—Child's Gem.

THE STORY OF TWO PENNIES.

They were new. They had just come from the mint and had traveled a long way with a lot of other little bronze coppers. They were put into a pay envelope and given to a big, rough-looking man, who tore it open, poured out the pennies and dimes into his hand, and, after counting them, put the envelope back into his pocket. When he reached home, his little girl, about 7 years old, came running to meet him. "Any pennies to-day, daddy?" she asked.

"Yes, love," said the rough-looking man in the gentlest of voices, lifting her to his shoulder.

"How many?" asked the eager, childish voice.

"Guess," said her father.

"One."

"No, two; and one is a brand-new Lincoln penny."

Wriggling down from his arms, the little girl held out her hand. "Do give them to me quick, daddy. I think I wanted just two."

He placed them in her small hand, and she flew past him into the house, climbing a chair to reach a small iron bank that was on the mantel. Then she sat down on the floor and began shaking the bank over her lap. "Please count 'em for me, daddy. Quick!"

"One, two, three," counted her father, up to twenty-three.

"How many more does it take to make twenty-five, daddy?"

"Just two, yet."

Then Edith darted across the floor, picked up two neglected coppers and held them up in glee. 'I've twenty-five," she cried, "just even twenty-five, and I'm so, so glad." And she danced up and down for joy.

'Well, what are you going to do with them?" her father asked. "Buy a doll?"

Edith looked up quite disdainfully when he said doll and shook her head. "Guess again, daddy."

"Candy?"

"No."

"Chewing gum?"

"No."

"Well, I'll give up. What is it?"

"A Thrift Stamp," she cried, in delight, "a really, truly Thrift Stamp, to help buy things for Susie Smith's brother who had to go away to fight. Won't Susie be glad?"

Edith's father gathered her close in his arms and kissed her. He felt proud of his little daughter.—Exchange.

WHY DOG'S NOSES ARE COLD.

When your faithful dog pokes his nose into your hand even your affection can not prevent a little shiver, because the nose is so cold. Why is it? When the body of a dog is so warm, why should this one spot he different from all the rest of him? The coldness of a dog's nose is due to the fact that it must be kept moist all the time in order to sharpen his sense of smell. And, of course, as the moisture is evaporating all the time, it keeps the nose cold. A dog depends a great deal on his powers of smell, especially in the wild state. In addition to the olfactory or smelling nerves inside a dog's nostrils, the whole black membrane around the nose is very sensitive, but this sensitiveness can only he retained by moisture. Thus it is that when the dog's nose is dry and warm he is ill and needs doctoring.—Berwick Advertiser.

MAKE UP AND BE FRIENDS.

In every community there are people who are unhappy because they cherish in their hearts resentment and ill-will. Their feelings have been hurt by something that has been said or done by somebody, and the pain of wounded pride shows itself not only in clouded countenance, but also in bitter words and spiteful deeds. The flame of anger in the heart is constantly fanned, lest, uncared for, it should die down. Unhappiness inevitably results.

One of the sad things about our wounded feelings is the fact that oftentimes the wound was inflicted unconsciously and unintentionally. The offender is so utterly unaware of any wrongdoing that he cannot understand the changed attitude of the one who has been hurt. Unhappiness comes to him, therefore, because of his perplexity over the reason of an unpleasant situation.

Misunderstanding is the most frequent cause of these hard feelings and consequent unhappiness. How easy it would be, if we could see face to face and talk heart to heart, to clear away the clouds and rejoice in the sunshine!

Suppose we try it. Let us, with sincere friendliness, try to find out what the trouble is, and clear it away. We shall have the satisfaction, at least, of knowing that we have done our duty; and the consciousness of duty done is one of the greatest things in the world for cleansing the thoughts and purifying the heart. Resentment dies away in the presence of a clean mind and a pure heart. Let us make up and be friends.

LABOR DAY.

Monday, September 2, was Labor Day. It is not exactly what its name implies; instead of laboring, everybody who can possibly do so, stops work on that day and devotes the time to recreation and enjoyment. As we sat in our office Monday morning, maintaining as best we could the warfare against the grippe, which began a drive against us on Saturday, and at the same time trying to perform the duties that pertain to the position we occupy at present, thousands of workers in holiday attire passed our door, marching to the music of bands of all kinds, good, bad and indifferent. It was an inspiring sight, even to one who had to fight the grippe and work at the same time.

The thought came to us that perhaps it would have been better for the workmen of the country, at a time like this, when every department of the Government is trying to speed up war preparations, to remain at their places in factory and shop and postpone to another time this holiday which marks the practical cessation of work throughout the nation. But as organization after organization passed, carrying the American flag, and banners inscribed with mottoes of loyalty and devotion, we came to feel that after all it was well for them to take this day off. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is a proverb the truth of which has been proved over and over. These laboring men, these men who spend their lives in carrying forward the tremendous business enterprises of this country, have responded nobly to the call of the Government for increased production. They will work the better Tuesday for having rested on Monday. There is no question of their loyalty; they are American citizens to the core; the Government itself has set apart the day as a legal holiday. It is a day well worth while.

And as these thousands of men passed, in apparently an unending stream, professing loyalty to our great country, and proving that loyalty by their works, we thought of those other thousands of men, pouring in an endless stream into our training camps, and thence to transports, and thence to the fields of Europe, fathers and sons and brothers of these who stay at home and work that those others may fight; and we thanked God that all the people of America are banded together in one army that is going to fight and work till this war is won. The laboring men of America are back of the fighting men in France; victory will be the inevitable result.

THE FOURTH ROUND.

It is hard to realize that Conference is so near, but the presiding elders' announcements of their fourth round of quarterly conferences remind us that time is rapidly slipping away. The Louisiana Conference will convene at New Orleans on November 13, and the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences will follow in rapid succession.

The work of the Conference year has largely been accomplished; but there is still time to put in some telling blows for the good of the cause in general. Some revival meetings are yet to be held. They should be pressed with all the urgency that the spiritual needs of our people demand. Never were the people more responsive to the gospel call than they are now. Many souls are under conviction of sin, brought there by the realization of their need in a time of great stress. They are eagerly looking for the means of their salvation. The faithful minister will make every effort to gather many of them into the Church before the end of the year.

The crops are beginning to be marketed and money will be in more plentiful circulation in many sections than heretofore. There will be many demands upon the generosity of our people in supplying the needs of the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, and other deserving causes. But the financial requirements of the Church should not, under any circumstances, be neglected. More than ever, it is necessary to have our collections in full if the various forms of Church activity are not to suffer. Especially should the stewards see to it that the salaries of the preachers are paid in full. It would be a graceful expression of appreciation in many cases, if, after the salary has been paid in full, the preacher should be presented with an additional sum to pay his expenses to Conference. The cost of travel is considerably greater this year than usual, and many of the faithful servants of the Church are going to find it hard to spare the money to go to Conference.

Every church that uses coal as its fuel during the winter months should not fail to make provision for its fuel supply before cold weather sets in. Coal is going to be an exceedingly hard thing to get a little later, according to the announcements of the fuel administration. And where wood can be used, a bountiful supply of it should be provided.

The fourth quarter is also a good time to secure renewals and new subscriptions to the Advocate. Full reports of the proceedings of our three supporting Conferences will be given, and readers of the Advocate will have the opportunity of keeping in touch with the progress of the Church as indicated by the pastors' reports and the plans that will be laid for next year's work. No official member of the Church should think that he is doing his full duty as such, unless he takes the official Church organ. And the duty of taking it should be laid upon the conscience of the entire membership.

When everything is taken into consideration, we believe this has been a good year thus far in our work; let us pray that the fourth quarter may be rich in reaping and rich in planning, that our coming together in our annual meetings may be a time of rejoicing because the Lord is with us.

A HIGH TRIBUTE.

Under the caption, "Dr. Meek Resigns," the editor of the Central Christian Advocate, in his issue of August 28, pays a tribute to the character and ability of Dr. Meek, who has made his influence felt throughout Methodism. The editor of the Central says:

"We notice that Dr. Robert A. Meek has tendered his resignation as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The action is due to health reasons. His physician insisted on immediate surcease from his task as editor.

"We shall miss the erudite pen of this good man. He held views diametrically opposed to our own on the matter of the approachment of the two great bodies of Methodism. Nor did his Church endorse his position, since he and the delegates from his own Conference were the only ones who voted against the report favoring a continuation of the Commission on Unification, every other vote in the General Conference being solidly for it.

"But we do not fear honest discussion; we would not silence any objection to our views; they compel one to recanvass his ground, and if the debate be in good temper, the truth is advanced, not hindered by the clearing of the atmosphere.

"Our correspondence with Dr. Meek revealed a character winsome at heart. We hope a speedy return to health, and we hope his life may be spared to see tested in the laboratory of an achieved and just universalism the organic unification of his Church and our own. We reach for his hand in downright good will."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly camp pastor at Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss., has been appointed a chaplain in the army and assigned to duty at Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga.

We learn from an exchange that there are 100,000 Smiths in the United States army, and that 1500 of them are named William. There are 1500 Millers, 15,000 Wilsons, and 1000 John Browns.

Rev. W. V. Shearer, of Kilmichael, Miss., has our thanks for two subscriptions which he recently sent us from his charge. We pray that the Advocate may be a blessing to both the new homes into which it goes.

Rev. S. C. Moody, of Oloh, Miss., sends us three subscriptions for the Advocate and says, "I expect to send more soon." He has previously shown his interest in the Conference organ. We thank him for his faithful work.

Dr. F. N. Parker completed his vacation engagement at Rayne Memorial Church, of this city, last Sunday. He has preached a series of great sermons. The pastor, Dr. Foote, is expected to be in his pulpit next Sunday.

Mr. George L. Carley, of Gulfport, Miss., surprised his brother, the Editor, by calling at the office one day last week. He spoke encouragingly of the work at First Church, Gulfport, and of its pastor, Rev. H. M. Ellis.

We extend our thanks to Brother J. T. Little, of Pleasant Hill, La., for sending us two new subscriptions, with the statement that he hopes soon to send us additional ones. We are grateful to our friends for their continued interest.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, continues to evidence the fact of his interest in the Advocate. We thank him for an additional list of names for our subscription files recently sent in.

We learn from the Midland Methodist that Rev. R. A. Clark, well known in Mississippi, formerly having been a member of the North Mississippi Conference, has been apponted field agent in the Memphis Conference for the Centenary Missionary Campaign.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Drew, Miss., very kindly sends us this week a list of subscriptions, with check to match. Our chief reliance in extending the circulation of the Advocate, is our faithful pastors. We appreciate their steady efforts in that direction.

According to Dr. F. T. Keeney, chairman of the Central New York Conference Stewardship Committee, there are ten thousand enrolled tithers in that Conference. We venture to say that the financial problems of Methodism in that region are in a fair way of being solved.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, our pastor at Ponchatoula, La., began a meeting at one of his appointments last Sunday, assisted by Rev. J. S. Rutledge, of Denham Springs, La. We pray that there may be a gracious revival of religion in the community as a result of the meeting.

Rev. Gervaise Roughton has for twenty-one years been pastor of the Wesley Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cincinnati, Ohio. The fourth quarterly conference of his charge, held recently, after passing highly commendatory resolutions, unanimously asked for his return for another year.

Rev. Clinton J. Bushey, a local preacher of the Main Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., has recently finished the course at the Chaplains' Training School, Camp Taylor. He has been ordained deacon and elder by Bishop McMurry, commissioned and assigned to Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, the energetic presiding elder of the Lafayette District, Louisiana Conference, in sending in the fourth round of his quarterly conferences, pays a high tribute to the men of his district when he says, "Every man is doing his best." We are sure the tribute is deserved—we know the men of that district.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, our pastor at Greensburg, La., sent us this week some new subscriptions to the Advocate, with the request that we furnish him with a list of subscribers at the various points on his charge. By means of this, he will be able to assist us materially in maintaining our circulation. We thank him for his thoughtfulness.

We appreciate more than we can tell such words as the following from Mrs. M. A. McCants, of Wilson, La., who, in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says: "I find much consolation in its pages. For ten years, now, it has brought sunshine into my home." That is a part of its mission, and we pray that it may never fail of it.

Main Street Methodist Church, of Hattiesburg, Miss., under the leadership of Rev. Paul D. Hardin, is having a prosperous year. There have been 114 accessions to date. Plans are being made for a revival meeting to begin September 29, with Rev. Theodore Copeland, D.D., of Pine Bluff, Ark., to do the preaching. Mr. Charlie Butler will conduct the singing.

Rev. F. B. Ormond, of Richton, Miss., has been diligent in presenting the claims of the Advocate to the good people of his charge. As the result of his work, he sent us last week a list of twelve names to be added to our subscription files. And to encourage us still further, he says that he hopes to send us another club soon. May his tribe increase!

A personal note from Dr. I. W. Cooper, the distinguished president of Whitworth College, informs us that more students have engaged rooms two weeks before the opening of school this year than during any of the preceding seventeen years of his presidency. A great record he has made. The next session of Whitworth begins on September 12.

Brother E. A. Enochs, of Natchez, Miss., in renewing his own subscription authorizes us also to send the Advocate to Hugh R. Enochs, Company D, 3rd Infantry, Del Rio, Texas. The Advocate is read by a goodly number of soldiers; we pray that it may be a blessing to them. We thank Brother Enochs for kindly expressions of appreciation of the paper.

The Literary Digest of August 31 devoted a whole page to an editorial urging the churches throughout the United States to pay their preachers living salaries. The Digest is read by probably two million people a week, some of whom, doubtless, are not interested in the preacher's welfare; but many others will be led to think seriously of an important matter.

More and more our preachers are feeling the call to service in behalf of the men who are fighting their country's battles on the fields of France. Rev. A. A. Bernard, of Ponchatoula, La., is the latest member of the Louisiana Conference of whom we have knowledge to enter his application for Y. M. C. A. war work. He is abundantly qualified for that field of service.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster has entered actively upon his work as pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Church in this city. He is indefatigable in his pastoral work—already he has made considerably more than a hundred pastoral calls. This means that he is getting into the hearts of his people. For Brother Foster's convenience, we state that mail addressed to him at 1125 Fern Street, New Orleans, will reach him promptly.

We learn from the Holly Springs Reporter, of August 29, that an interesting service was held at the Holly Springs Methodist Church, of which Rev. E. R. Smoot is pastor, on Sunday evening, August 25, at which stars were pinned on the service flag by a committee of young ladies in honor of six young men who have recently entered the military service of their country. The report states that an effective talk was made by the pastor.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, pastor of our Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., requests us to state that if pastors and parents of young men in training at Camp Shelby will send him or the other pastors there their names and regimental and company addresses, they will do what they can for their spiritual welfare. We consider this a matter of the utmost importance, and we trust immediate attention will be given to it by all concerned.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, president of the Mississippi Training School, at Montrose, Miss., who is also serving as pastor of the Bay Springs charge, is busy in the performance of the many duties that rest upon him. He recently closed a meeting at Bay Springs, during which there were 13 accessions to the Church. We thank Dr. Hunt for a subscription in addition to those he has already sent. The Training School will begin its new session on September 18.

We learn from an exchange that Bishop Hoss is resting at Galbraith's Springs, Tenn. We quote: "The Bishop is not strong. The death of his wife and his own physical condition have made a heavy draft upon his strength, but mingled with his tenderness are the old-time conversational vivacity and intellectual vigor." Our people will remember in their prayers this great servant of the Church, who has never spared himself when its interests were at stake.

Rev. E. B. Moll, formerly a student of Centenary College, who has been engaged in evangelistic work during the summer, made us a pleasant visit last Saturday. He had just returned from a short visit to his mother, at Defiance, Ohio, and was on his way to Clinton, La., where he was going to assist Rev. J. L. Cady in a meeting on the Olive Branch charge. Brother Moll is always a friend of the Advocate, doing what he can in the meetings he holds to extend its circulation. He is expecting now to offer himself for Red Cross work in the near future.

Brother L. P. Brown, of Meridian, Miss., one of the best known laymen in the Mississippi Conference, in sending us a renewal of his subscription a few days ago, stated that he had been a reader of the Advocate since childhood, and a subscriber for more than fifty years. We take the liberty of quoting a sentence from his letter as expressing the conviction of one who is in a position to know whereof he speaks. Speaking of the Advocate, he says: "Its true place in our Methodism's work and polity cannot be measured in dollars and cents, or in words." We wish the Advocate could be given a chance to prove its usefulness in every Methodist home in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Rev. C. C. Miller, the apostle of sunshine, whose genial companionship is as refreshing as a mountain breeze, honored the Advocate office with a call last Thursday. He was returning to his pastorate at Morgan City, La., from Live Oak Church, in Livingston Parish, where he had gone to conduct the funeral service of J. Z. Underwood, one of the princes in Israel. Brother Underwood, who died on August 26, was eighty-three years of age. He had taught school for fifty years, and for thirty-four years had been an official member of the Church. He was a Confederate veteran, having served throughout the Civil War, three years of the time in the Virginia campaigns. We trust some one will furnish us a suitable memoir of this really remarkable man.

We have recently received information which leads us to say that some country charges are as thoroughly alive and progressive as any to be found in the towns and cities. The Shiloh circuit in the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, is a case in point. In 1916 the assessment for ministerial support was $800; in 1917 it was $900; this year it is $1327. At the third quarterly conference, held on August 24, $1005.75 was reported on this account. This put the charge $10.50 ahead, to that time. Rev. C. H. Strait is the happy pastor of this group of aggressive country churches. We feel sure that a large part of the credit for this fine showing is due to his careful leadership. It goes almost without saying that every penny of the Conference collections will be paid. Doubtless there are other charges that have done as well, but we happen to have specific knowledge of this one.

DEATH OF BROTHER W. COKE HAWKINS.

Dear Brother Carley: Mr. W. Coke Hawkins died at his home near Pass Christian on August 16, and was buried in Hattiesburg the following day. The funeral was held in the Main Street Church and conducted by the writer.

Brother Hawkins was the son of the lamented Gabriel Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference. He leaves a wife and six children, an aged mother, three brothers, Rev. Ira L. Hawkins, of the North Alabama Conference, Rev. Henry G. Hawkins, of the Memphis Conference, and Geo. L. Hawkins, of Hattiesburg, Miss.; three sisters, Mrs. W. B. Jones, wife of Rev. W. B. Jones, P. E., Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference; Mrs. J. J. Golden, wife of Rev. J. J. Golden, of the New Mexico Conference, and Mrs. S. L. Heidelberg, Hattiesburg, Miss. Brother Hawkins was fifty-one years old and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

CHARLES EBEN MIXER was born in St. Landry Parish, La., on January 11, 1871, and died at the old home near Richard, La., on August 10, 1918. His parents were Charles Mixer and Mary Ann Robinett. His was a Christian home, and he was religious from childhood, and united with the Church at the age of sixteen. He attended Centenary College, and graduated with honors from the Dental Department of Tulane. Life seemed full of promise, when the death of a brother so affected him, that he appeared to lose interest in everything, and became pensive and sad, and that bright, happy life was blighted. The shadow lifted at the close. He said, "my life has been a failure, but God can and will forgive me." "I am trusting in Jesus."

His father and two brothers died some years ago. He is survived by his aged mother and four sisters, who, in their loneliness and sorrow, look toward the day when loved but severed friends shall meet in that land where snows do not fall and there is "no more death."

Miss SADIE WELSH, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Welsh, of Philadelphia, Miss., was born on November 27, 1896, and passed from this life on February 27, 1917. She was a member of the Sunday school from her infancy. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of six years. It was the writer's pleasure to know Miss Sadie the last eight years of her life. A more devoted daughter, a more loyal member of church and Sunday school, a more agreeable and painstaking pupil, it has never been my lot to meet. Her life was a sermon to every one associated with her. Her classmates and teachers were constantly reminded of their duty by her unselfish devotion to her own duties. We can't understand now why she was taken away from us in the bloom of youth, with all her accomplishments, but we know God knows best. We will understand when we see clearly—not as in a glass, darkly. She showed her faith and confidence in her God in her last days. She met death unafraid. Heaven will be brighter by her being there. She is calling her friends, by her life and by her death, to a higher and better life. May the Lord sustain her parents and relatives in this sad hour and may He help her associates and friends to follow the example of this sweet, Christian life. Her teacher,

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, by an inscrutable decree of our all-wise Father, Mrs. W. W. Simmons has been called to the great beyond; and

Whereas, In the death of Mrs. Simmons, the Louisville Methodist Missionary Society has lost its most loyal, consecrated member, one who ever lived in the spirit of charity and love, who ever obeyed the teachings of the great Missionary;

Therefore, be it resolved, That in the untimely death of our dearly loved member our Missionary Society is deeply bereaved, and that each member does condole and truly sympathize with the husband, sisters and brothers; that we commend them in this hour of trial to our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

Be it resolved further, That we, the members of the Missionary Society, shall be more faithful in our daily duties and shall receive an inspiration from the beautiful life of our friend who has gone before us.

Be it resolved finally, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the husband of our deceased friend, a copy be spread upon the minutes of our Society, and that copies be sent to the Winston County Journal and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. R. H. McGraw, Mrs. W. O. Butler, Mrs. G. W. Patty, Committee.

A BEAUTIFUL SERVICE.

While at Oxford, Miss., recently upon a little vacation, I had the great pleasure of attending the Methodist Church upon the occasion of the dedication of their service flag. Twenty-three stars bedeck that beautiful flag, representing that number of loyal, patriotic sons who marched forth to strike down the Hun in his career of frightfulness and outlawry. Several families furnished as many as two each of these twenty-three, and one family three. It was a touching service. Mrs. J. C. Fant, of the University, made the presentation speech, Dr. D. H. Bishop made the speech of acceptance, and Mrs. A. F. Calloway spoke in behalf of the parents. Rev. W. W. Woollard, the pastor, made a few appropriate remarks concerning the significance of the service. The choir rendered a choice musical program, which was greatly appreciated by the large audience in attendance.

Such services have a wholesome effect, both in a religious and patriotic way. It ties the community on to the Church and makes the Church the medium through which it gives expression to our patriotic pride and our religious interest in our soldier boys.

AN INVITATION.

We have received the following communication, with the request that we publish it. We do so without further knowledge than is contained in the communication itself.

Dear Editor:

Please let me say a few words to those who are suffering from tuberculosis: I was nearly dead with the disease. I did not want to die and leave my wife and large family of young children. The Lord gave us a 160-acre homestead here in a little valley in the mountains of Southern California. We have trimmed up many trees, and cleared away brush, making it, possibly, the best place in the United States for you. We want to share its use with the friends of Jesus as freely as we have received it, and help you. Bring your bed, small tent, little stove, groceries to cook, and a little money to live on. I will meet you at the train with wagon. Select your garden spot here, with big tree for tent shade; drink the pure water, breathe the ozone; eat, rest, sleep, exercise, and get well. All as free as the pure air that you breathe here. We do this in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

A GREAT MEETING.

Dear Mr. Editor: I desire to give you a few dots concerning my meeting which closed Sunday night. The church is known as Strange. It was until last year a Methodist Protestant church, but at the close of last year it came over to us. It is composed of many very fine people, such as Bishop, Weaver, Speires, Barnhart, Dobson, Rushing, Williams, Mayfield, who is cashier at Saline, Berry, and in fact many others whose names I have not at hand. The interest seemed good from the first service, and it continued through until the last. They have a splendid choir and this added much to the success of the meeting.

I must confess that when right in the heart of a revival as this, I feel a strong desire to enter the field, and give my whole time and entire life to such work; it gets upon my heart, and I sometimes ask myself the question, "Am I called to that field?" Oh, Lord, lead and guide me.

In connection with the above, I will say that at the close of the meeting I ordered a nice record and the names of all the Church members will be placed on it in proper order.

I thank you, Brother Editor, for the splendid paper you are giving us; I will make an extra effort in the near future to prove it to you.

I ask that God bless our great Church, and give us victory in His name.

C. B. POWELL.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The Teacher-training Drive is to begin September 15, and last one month. Some of us are under orders and others can volunteer to do the driving.

This drive will enlist the best men and women of thirty great churches in North America. Let us not look too long upon the bigness of the task, but rather let us behold the mighty forces that are to undertake the task.

The one church among these twenty-nine others that can command the intelligent and hearty co-operation of the largest number of her leaders in this matter of training religious leaders will reap the greatest results now and extend her influence farther.

What is it the thirty evangelical denominations propose to do?

1. At least one teacher-training class in every Sunday school of North America, meeting at the Sunday school hour.

2. A monthly workers' conference in every Sunday school, meeting at least ten months out of each year.

3. A mid-week training class for present Sunday school teachers in every school where such a class is needed.

4. A co-operative community training school of religious education for every community where desired and practicable. This school shall have three functions: (a) To do graduate and specialization work, (b) to train leaders for classes in local churches, and (c) to provide central training class facilities for those churches unable to maintain their own classes.

5. A definite effort to be made toward helping every Sunday school of North America to a right selection and use of current literature and books on religious psychology, pedagogy, and Sunday school organization and management.

In addition, the following should be added as objectives for the Sunday schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

1. A director of teacher-training for every school.

2. A committee on teacher-training under the chairmanship of the director of teacher-training in each school.

3. Training classes using the Standard Training Course and all students properly enrolled with the Department of Teacher-training.

This is a big undertaking, but we are living in a day of events that stagger the imagination. Let us thank God that we are called to do the seemingly impossible. If this is too large a task for the Methodist Church to lay hold upon, we may be sure that there are others that will not fail. One thing certain, we will not grow any larger by neglecting this opportunity. There is no school so far back but that it is possible to enlist one or more people in the study of one of the books in the course for leadership.

The superintendent is the man the Church has honored with the leadership of religious education in the local school. The least that is expected of this leader is to present honestly this matter of trained leadership to his school and trust God to move the teachers to help in carrying out the program. We can put in five per cent of the work necessary to success and God will put in the other ninety-five; but the man that fails to put in his five per cent keeps God from doing the big thing for us he desires to do. Here is our promise: "If you ask anything in my name, I will do it."

TEACHER-TRAINING DRIVE.

Dr. George T. Webb, of Winnipeg, Canada, Secretary of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, writes as follows concerning the simultaneous drive for teacher-training that is being put on this fall by the Sunday school forces of North America: "The Teacher - Training Drive is taking hold in the life of the Sunday schools of America in a way that is exceedingly gratifying. It is impossible to communicate to you all the words of encouragement that I have received in my office in Cincinnati, but you ought to know that all the denominations are taking hold of it in a good spirit and with great enthusiasm." Our Teacher-training headquarters at Nashville has just sent out a beautiful drive poster, lithographed in colors, and much literature concerning the drive has been distributed. Every Southern Methodist Sunday school should take part in the drive.

POWER IN PRAYER.

A woman came to a missionary at Bengalore, India, asking him to interfere and prevent a certain native Christian from praying for her any more. When asked how she knew that the Christian was praying for her, she replied, "I used to perform my worship to the idols quite comfortably, but for some time past I have not been able to do so. Besides, he told me at the time that he was praying for my family, and now my son and two daughters have become Christians, too. He is always bringing things to pass with his prayers. Somebody must make him stop."

A Godsend to Rheumatics.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold, rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system by the very simple treatment of taking Renwar Salts, which neutralizes the uric acid in the blood. The cause of rheumatism is uric acid in the blood, and Renwar attacks the very cause of this malady and expells the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way injure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of your rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial and you will never regret it. Mr. Benagh, of the Nashville Railway and Light Company, says: "Within two or three days after using Renwar my rheumatism disappeared." Price 50c. Ask your druggist for it, or write WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

Mothers of the South Prepare for Trouble!

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, and when a woman passes through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe organic disturbances. It is the best medicine for nervousness and for prospective mothers that I ever saw."—MRS. MARY L. WALKER.

She had practically no suffering, where before she had suffered intensely. No one can tell in words the good the 'Prescription' did my wife; it is simply a wonderful medicine. Every woman in the land ought to use it."—A. HUDGINS.

WAR PROFITS TAX AND EXCESS PROFITS TAX—THE DIFFERENCE.

"By a war-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of those realized before the war.

"By an excess-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of a given return upon capitai.

"The theory of a war-profits tax is to tax profits due to the war.

"The theory of an excess-profits tax is to tax profits over and above a given return on capitai. The excess-profits tax falls less heavlly on big business than on small business, because big business is generally overcapitalized and small businesses are often undercapltalized.

"The war-profits tax would tax all war profits at one high rate; the excess-profits tax does and for safety must tax all excess profits at lower and graduated rates."

The above extract from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee gives his differentiation between war-profits and excess-profits taxes and explains his position in urging upon Congress an excess-profits tax with an alternative war-profits tax in the forthcoming revenue legislation.

To the average citizen Secretary McAdoo's positlon seems well taken. Most small and local corporations are capitalized at an actual valuation. Many of the very large corporations are greatly overcapitalized; the stock of some of them has been repeatedly watered. With only an excess-profits tax a corporation earning 10 per cent on grossly watered capltal will pay the same tax as another corporation not overcapitalized earning 10 per cent on the real, actual valuation of the money and property invested in its business. The profits of the first corporatlon might be 30 per cent on its actual valuation, and it is to cover such cases that a war-profits tax is urged.

As many of these large corporations are engaged in Government work and drawing huge sums from the United States, it seems particularly just that they should pay taxes on the same actual basis as corporations not overcapltalized. A tax that taxes equally a 10 per cent profit on watered capital and a 10 per cent profit on unwatered capital is not equal and uniform and scarcely just.—Government Buiietin.

A LETTER HOME.

By Gipsy Smith.

In the middle of my taik I stopped and said, "Boys"—for there is nothing conventlonal about me; I was born in the woods—and so I stopped in the middle of my talk and said, "Boys, have you written home this week?" They sat up and took notice. It's the surprise question that gets over. And I said: "The boys who have written home this week stand up, and those who haven't, you dare to stand up!" After a few had stood I said: "I'll C.B. (meaning confine to barracks) anyone who doesn't write home before the night is over." And you know I was kept busy for one solid hour handing out letter paper and enveiopes. One Sunday afternoon I distributed 850 sheets of letter paper. It was a beautiful piece of work, for I knew that we were providing the boys with the wherewithai to keep them in touch with home, and that's rellgion. And so I stood there, and I always know when the boys are going to write to their mothers. I always know when a boy is writing to his wife and I know when he is writing to the other one. If it's his wife, "One sheet, sir, please, or a post card;" if it's his sweetheart, it's "Two sheets, sir."

As I was giving out this paper and envelopes the leader of the hut came to me and said, "Gipsy, there is a man behind my counter who wants to see you." I went over and found a fine feilow who was crying like a baby. He threw a letter down on the tabie and asked me to read it. It was to his mother and was as follows:

"My Dear Mother: It is seven years since I wrote you last. I did my best to break your heart. I have turned your hair gray. I have gone the pace, but I have got to the end of that journey. Yesterday and to-day I have heard Gipsy Smith and I have given my heart to God. I don't ask you to forgive me for I don't deserve your forgiveness, but give me time and I will prove it. Your boy still, Jack."

"Will that do?" he asked. And I answered. "It is splendid; it is magnificent. But there is room for a postscript—suppose you let me write it." "Yes, go on, she'll believe you." So I wrote: "Mother, Jack's all right. You believe him. God has accepted him." And I signed my name in a big hand that day and believe me for once I was proud of my name.—Exchange.

An Unsolicited Testimonial To Whitworth

The following correspondence, which speaks for itself, was received by the President of Whitworth College, July 31, 1918:

Mr. J. H. Kellogg,

Dear Sir:—I am thinking of sending my daughter to Whitworth College and notice your name as reference. Would thank you to write me what is your honest opinion of this school. Your early reply will be appreciated. I am enclosing stamped envelope for reply.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your letter 25th inst, in regard to Whitworth College, which was forwarded to me.

My daughter attended Whitworth College four years, graduating with the class of '16. She entered at the age of fourteen and I am pleased to say that the care of her health and her ethical and moral training were all that could be expected or desired. The educational advantages afforded by Whitworth College are very liberal and thorough.

I am personally acquainted with the President and share in the general opinion held throughout central Mississippi that besides being a ripe scholar and accomplished educator, he is a fine type of Christian gentleman with a high order of executive ability and rare judgment in selecting the faculty for his institution of the best talent available, which has resulted in the large prestige that it enjoys and the fine personnel of its alumnae.

I regard Whitworth College in all respects the equal of any educational institution in the State and in some important respects the best place in the State for the education of young ladies.

Trusting this answers fully your inquiry,

Yours very truly,

J. H. KELLOGG.

MISSIONARY OFFERINGS INCREASING.

Entire Christendom is giving less than $50,000,000 a year to missions, a sum roughly estimated at between two cents and three cents a member. In the mission fields the amount per capita is much larger than in Christian lands. African Christians, only a decade out of savagery, gave last year $5 for each communicant. In Korea they give $3.50 a member. In Persia they contribute $6.25 a member; yet in Africa wages are only ten cents a day and in Korea from fifteen to twenty-five cents.

Yet it is encouraging to note that missionary offerings are increasing. Taking the country over, since the advent of the Laymen's Missionary Movement there has been an increase of about six and a half million dollars in the annual receipts for missions, not to include three millions given in large bequests and donations.

Still, with the war cutting down benevolences, this is a crisis in missions which will require every giver to strain to his utmost.—The Expositor.

MINISTERING TO THE WORLD'S WORKERS.

The social ministry of the Church is being emphasized to-day more than ever before. To some this means less attention to individuals and more attention to industrial laws, home environment and recreations; to others it means more emphasis on physical, industrial and home betterment, and less attention to spiritual regeneration. Still others see the primary need for leading individuals to "get right with God," but believe that true and whole-souled Christianity must lead to the regeneration of the whole man, with altruistic treatment of employees by employers and vice versa, with better industrial laws, better housing conditions and better amusements. The new life of God that works a change in an individual must also work out a change in that individual's relationship to his fellows, in the laws which govern his community and in all the conditions that surround him and his children.

The greatest, if not the only, social service movement in the history of the world is Christianity and the largest example of this social service is the work that the Red Cross and Christian Associations are doing for the fighting forces in the present war. Money and men and women have been flowing in endless streams to help relieve suffering and to make war less horrible and demoralizing. The results are seen in the morals of the soldiers and sailors, and in the improved conditions around camps and cantonments.

But more is needed. There are hundreds of thousands of workers engaged in war work in industrial centers. Whole cities have sprung up in what were recently empty fields; men and women have left home to work at higher wages than they have ever before received. The stress and the strain of hard work and long hours incline them to seek extreme relaxation. Temptations are many and restraints are few. Without churches and other Christian influences in these new industrial centers they might become a more deadly menace to the nation than the devastations caused by the enemy in Europe.

It is cause for thanksgiving, therefore, that the Young Men's and Young Women's Associations are establishing and extending a "War Camp Community Service" to take to these industrial centers similar benefits to those they are taking to the soldiers and sailors. Wherever munition factories and other war industries have sprung up, bringing large numbers of men and women together, there the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. are going to establish cafeterias, recreation centers, educational classes, and religious meetings. Not only is there a call for 4000 Y. M. C. A. workers for Europe, but there is need for at least 1000 workers for these industrial centers. Now is the time to establish the work—in the beginning—before evils become entrenched.—The Missionary Review of the World.

THE RESIGNATION OF MRS. E. R. KENNEDY.

It is with much sorrow that we learn of the resignation of Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, our consecrated and efficient Conference (Louisiana) Superintendent of Social Service.

In a letter from her daughter, Mrs. Crow Girard, we learn something of the circumstances leading to this decision. Mrs. Girard writes: "About six weeks ago mother was taken ill, and was confined to her bed for nearly four weeks. We felt very anxious about her, for it was so unusual for her to be sick. She is well again now, but her physician has urged her to give up some of the many duties and responsibilities that have kept her so busy. He urged especially that she resign the State work on account of the responsibility entailed."

It is a great loss to our work to have this servant of the Lord relinquish her duties, but we know how it hurts her to give up a work which she passionately loves, and we will not dwell upon our loss but pray God's blessing upon her, and may the love and loyalty of the women throughout Louisiana, whom she has served long and faithfully, be a comfort to her heart at this time.

Mrs. Kennedy has been a Conference officer for many years; first as recording secretary, then as corresponding secretary, and then president, during which time the two great bodies, Home and Foreign, were united, she being the first president of the united Woman's Missionary Society.

When she voluntarily gave up the presidency, she accepted the office of Superintendent of Social Service, because of the urgent need of a worker in this department. She has given of her best to this branch of the missionary work and she says the women have responded loyally and heartily, and that the department is in a healthy condition.

SAFETY FIRST.

It is mighty easy to make little of every scratch, cut, burn, and sting. Sometimes you can neglect them and luckily get by without any serious infection. If you do, don't think you are fotunate. The next case of neglect may prove fatal. Blood poison is likely to set in unexpectedly and the result may be fatal. Don't play with fate. Take care of your body. In every case of broken skin apply Gray's Ointment immediately and freely. It is healing and antiseptic. For nearly a century one of nature's greatest methods of insurance against infection. Telephone your druggist, or write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Adv.

Do not let your heart grow cold, and you may carry cheerfulness and love with you into the teens of your second century, if you can last so long.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The other, to the altar's God.

WHEN THE BOYS COME HOME.

By Mrs. L. M. Lipscomb.

Oh, won't it be a joyful time,
When the boys come home once more;
When war shall cease and a righteous peace
Shall stop the cannon's roar!

Oh, we will laugh and we will sing
When our laddies brave and true,
Come back once more to their native shore
'Neath the dear old red, white and blue.

Oh, how our hearts will swell with pride
As our boys relate the story
Of the victories won o'er the cruel Hun,
In defense of grand "Old Glory!"

Thousands of lads will ne'er come back—
For these our tears will fall,
We will honor their name and deathless fame;
To their country they gave their all.

Oh, God of peace and God of love,
Stop this awful strife and pain;
Give victory to liberty,
And send our brave boys home again.
Winona, Miss.

GOOD MEETING AT BEULAH, LA. CONF.

Dear Mr. Editor: We closed a series of revival services at Beulah, Sunday, August 25. Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of Greenwood, La., did the preaching except two sermons. Rev. P. O. Lowry and our presiding elder, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, came down and each preached a great sermon. Brother Lipscomb is a good gospel preacher. He lives close to the Lord and is burdened for lost souls. The messages were searching and inspiring. The rainy weather prevented large attendance at a few of the services, yet the interest was good. At least forty persons professed either conversion or reclamation; we received twenty-one into the Church and baptized six infants. Many believers were strengthened and testified to the refreshing of the Spirit. We pray and trust that the revival fire may keep burning.

Beulah is on the Pleasant Hill Circuit, of which Rev. P. O. Lowry is pastor; the writer is serving as junior pastor. The first congregation at this place was organized in 1860, under the ministry of Rev. B. F. Alexander, so there is much history connected with it. About this time, a tabernacle was built and it became known far and wide as the Beulah Camp Ground. It is said that fifty or more families used to camp on the grounds each year during the revival meeting. In course of time, the tabernacle went down and for twenty or more years was not used, but it has been lately rebuilt and is again being used for revival purposes. This place possesses many features that contribute to the making of it an ideal place for a camp meeting. The locality is healthful, the land well drained and there is a copious supply of spring water, clear and cool. One will scarcely find a rural church more favorably situated. We have begun preparations for the meeting next year and shall encourage people to come and camp on the grounds. We do not know what the future holds, but the prospect at this place is, indeed, encouraging.

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

Acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver and you lose a day's work.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

VIKINGS OF THE FUTURE.

"American boys must begin again to think of the sea and look to it for their careers. These ships which we are building are no temporary make-shift, to be thrown on the scrap-heap when the war is over. Long after peace has come they will be making the Seven Seas bright with the Stars and Stripes, carrying American products to the farthest corners of the earth, and winning a great destiny for this nation.

"Our ambition for ships and then more ships is boundless. If our hopes are realized, by the end of the coming year our merchant fleet will weigh twenty million tons, which means that it will be the size of the British merchant marine at the time the war broke out. And Great Britain was then the greatest maritime nation on earth, the Mistress of the Seas.

"But our ambition does not stop there. In fact, we have set no limit to the ship-building undertaking, but will build more and more vessels until the need for additional ones is gone. We have every reason to expect that the United States, in turn, will take her place as the greatest of seafaring countries. The time has come for this advance.

"Tens of thousands of new American ships mean hundreds of thousands of officers for those ships—all of them Americans, for an alien is forbidden by law to hold an executive position on an American ship. American boys of today will be the vikings of the future who will command these vessels. Our boys must show that in their blood is still the salt that made America pre-eminent at sea before the Civil War, when the Baltimore clipper-ships were the fastest vessels that had ever floated.

"Here in this new merchant navy of ours there will be—there are now—opportunities for individual advancement such as the young manhood of other nations was never fortunate enough to meet. The average boy in thinking about his future cannot afford now to overlook these opportunities."
—Ex-Governor R. P. Bass, in the August "St. Nicholas."

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Presidential nominee, Chas. A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

"CAN YOU DRINK OF THE CUP?"

To attain eminence in any worthy enterprise, the main and sane question is not "Can you get a pull?" but "Have you the push?"

The acquirement of any desired good is preceded and accomplished by the payment of the appropriate price. If it costs little, it is worth little. If it is worth much, it costs much.

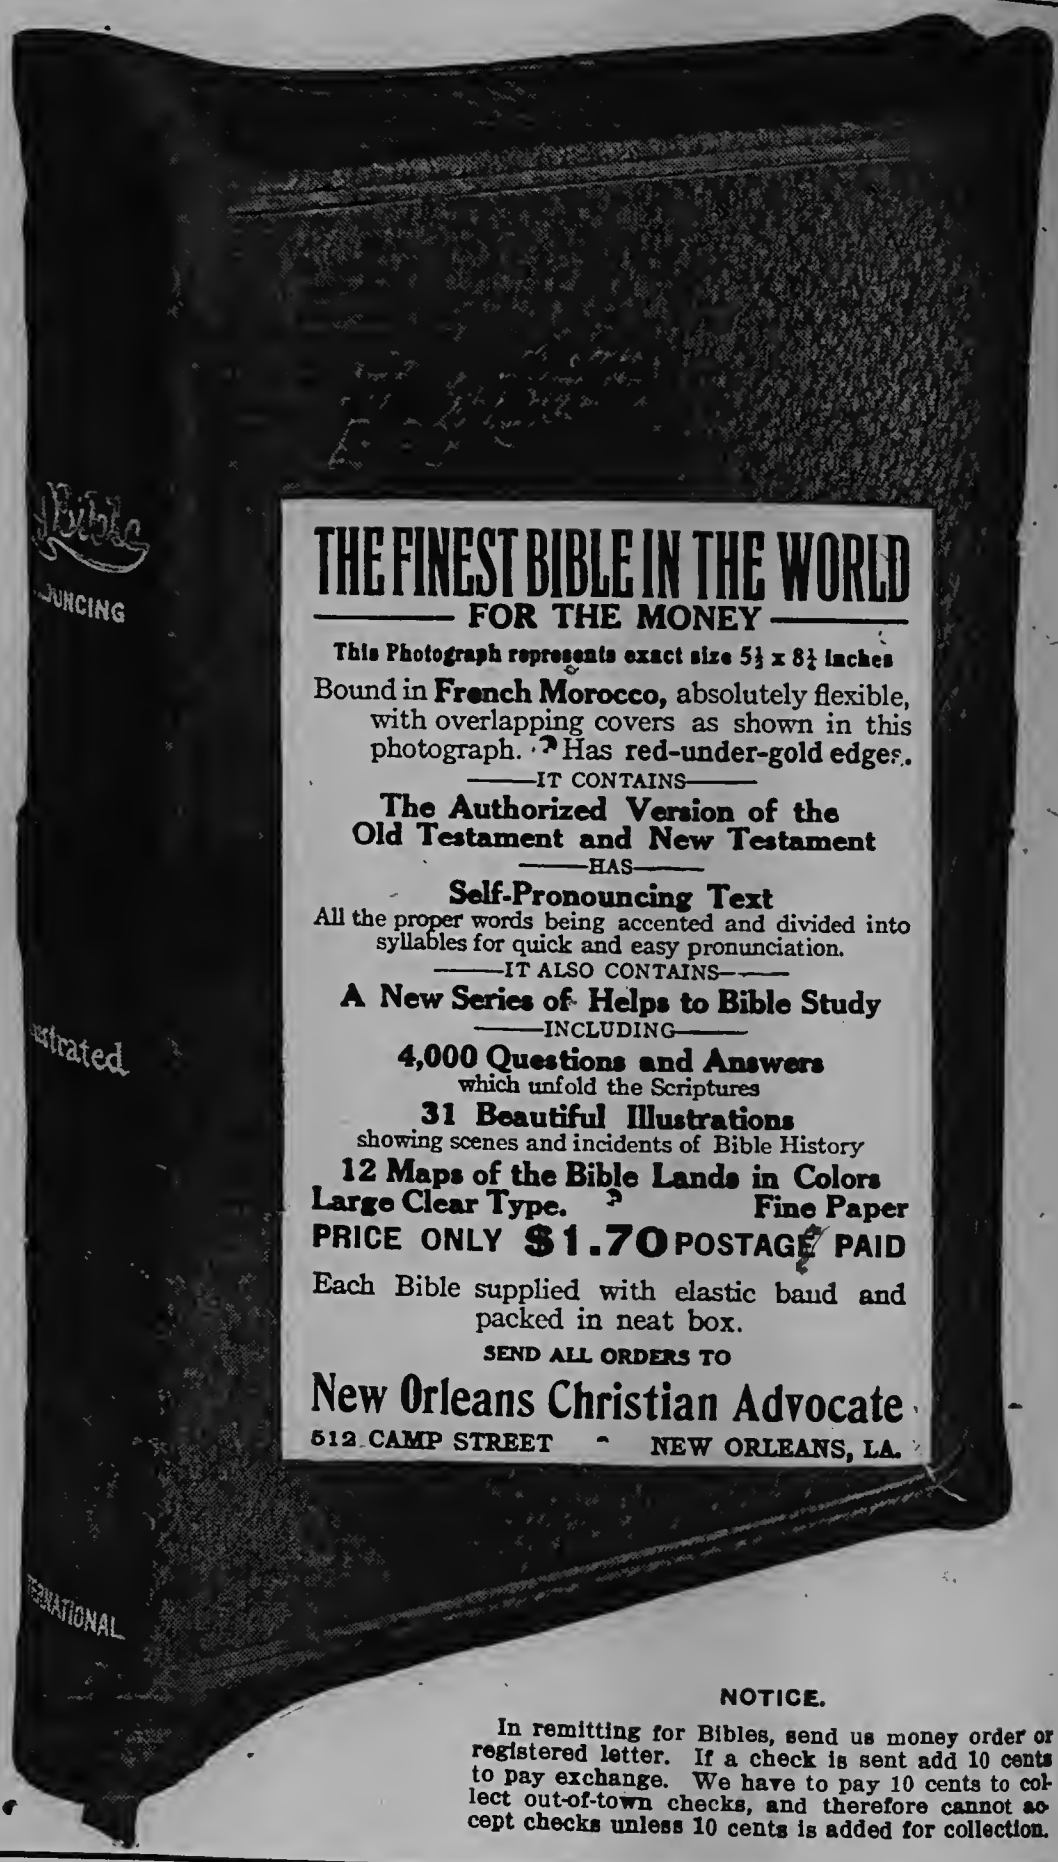
Many people are constantly seeking something for nothing, but in the high realms of character and destiny it is the vaguest fancy.

What it does not cost us it has cost some one else. That which is bestowed upon us because it is too great for us to purchase is nevertheless conserved by us, if conserved at all, by obedience, self-obligation, endurance, and suffering. Determination and sacrifice is the rational emblem of all worthy achievement. By this sign we conquer, if we conquer at all.

New elements are not introduced into the universe by the sacrificial plan of human redemption. Everywhere it is evident that eminence and success are not obtained by ease and indolence, not by preference and favoritism, but by intense action and endurance, by going the distance and bearing the load.

If you ask me why these conditions of achievement exist, I must frankly answer, I do not know. If you ask me if it is so, then I must answer, It is not necesary that I explain, for everything that lives makes answer in the affirmative. Endurance is not only a test of strength: it is a means of acquiring strength. It is a law of life. Nowhere is there a known exception.

The tree that grows in the thick forest, protected from storms and dividing the insects that bore into it with a hundred of its neighbors, grows straight and develops rapidly. When it is felled by the woodman's ax its grain is straight, but its fiber is coarse. A wedge will split it from end to end. It is easily sawed, but it takes no polish. It may do for a telephone pole, form a sleeper for some small bridge over which herds of cattle tramp, or possibly be cut into dimension lumber for the out-of-sight places in a building.



But there is another tree whose beginnings are formed on the lone sands. No forest about it. The winds from all directions bend it. As it waves its roots creep deeper into the soil, until they drink the pure waters below the sand. It is battered by passing herds. The winds break its boughs and nature makes knots in healing the wounds. The wild boar whets his tusks on its sandy and protruding roots. Insects bore into its very heart. It braces against the north wind and is bent in that direction, and bends to the south as it braces against the south winds. In a hundred years it is not a thing of beauty and has attained no mammoth bigness. But when the woodman's ax fells it, no wedge can divide its fine-grained tissue. Only a keen saw can sever it. Its fibers are closely knit, and it will take polish. The knots have formed designs of changeless beauty. The insects that bored into its heart and perished have become nuclei about which fine-spun fibers have curled in clusters of rare and delicate tinted elegance. This tree in power and beauty adorns the drawing-room of palaces and bridal chambers of queens. It paid the price. It drank the cup.

Man—body, mind, and spirit—becomes strong and pure by diligent, patient endurance and suffering.

Worthy ideas and laudable ambitions are not attained by wrong methods. Neither are they attained by favoritism, but by ability and willingness to pay the price.

Many ambitious aspirants who would attain eminence "know not what they ask." Many would have the emoluments without the responsibilities, the honors without the sacrifices, the achievements without endurance and sufferings that lie between. Such are irrational, expecting the effect without the cause—the consequence without the antecedents. There is no royal road to eminence. —Frank W. Luce, D.D., in Western Christian Advocate.

TEN WIN-THE-WAR RULES.

Many persons are still of the opinion that the war will be won or lost in France. This is not at all true. The determining factor in the war is over here. A mobilization of all our resources at home, backed by an unconquerable determination to win at all hazards, will make the American army across the water invincible. This being true, what is the duty of each one of us here at home? The following ten win-the-war rules apply to all Americans without exception:

1. Keep in good health. Health is an asset; sickness a liability.

2. Observe the government rules regarding food, and eat no more than is necessary to keep the body in good condition.

3. Operate home and business on a budget basis. This will force you to discriminate between essentials and non-essentials.

4. Travel as little as possible because of the transportation facilities of the nation being taxed to the utmost.

5. Relate yourself intimately to one or more war activities, undertaking the work you can do best.

6. Invest as much money as possible in government obligations and contribute liberally to all recommended war activities. But in so doing do not reduce your bank account to a minimum, since the liquid assets of the nation must be increased rather than reduced in order that ample loanable funds may be on hand to maintain the nation's business.

7. Keep well informed on the progress of the war, and smite all false propaganda to death.

8. Make yourself a shining example of true patriotism.

9. Keep in intimate touch with one or more of the boys overseas, since the army with the highest morale, other things being equal, is the strongest.

10. Do your full part in maintaining on a high plane of efficiency the home church. The gulf of barbarism is yawning at our feet. The Church is the only institution that can prevent civilization from toppling in.—E. I. Antrim, in Western Christian Advocate.

IF WE FAINT NOT.

It is not enough to sow; we must also reap. The harvest is the culmination of the crop. The abandoned field is a dreary spot in the landscape. It speaks of energies spent but not utilized, of labor bestowed but not rewarded. The husbandman has grown weary, the harvest has gone to waste. We shall reap; yes, in due season—if we faint not.

THE DAY'S WORK.

This day we dedicate to work. Early in the morning we will take up our tasks with the determination to do our best. On other days we have been slow and careless. We have thought of other things and have not cared how we got through the day, if only we got through it. The joy of living was not making our blood tingle, and there was no song in our heart. But to-day the high call of service is ringing in our ears, and we are looking out upon a world that needs even our little. Yesterday has written its record of failures and successes, of hopes and disappointments. To-morrow we know not of; to-day is ours, with its apportioned tasks; without repining and without fear, we will do our best. This is the day's work.

THE RAINY SUNDAY.

The weather has a strange influence upon our actions—at certain times. During the business days of the week, we manage to control ourselves, to the extent, at least, of continuing our ordinary activities. The skies may be lowering, or the rain may be descending in torrents, but somehow or other we find a way to reach the place where we are accustomed to work. But it is often altogether different on Sunday. We watch the clouds gather with the feeling that we shall have to stay at home perhaps all day. If a gentle shower begins to fall, we settle down comfortably to look over the paper, or to take a nap. If the floodgates are opened, we thank our stars that we can stay at home. But the church doors will be open, and the preacher will be in his place and the faithful will gather for the preaching of the Word. What would not make us late at our places of business, has kept us away altogether from the House of God. The weather has a strange influence upon our actions—at certain times.

WE MUST EDUCATE.

We are presenting this week statements of educational interest by the presidents of a number of our educationl institutions in the patronizing territory of the Advocate. These articles were written at our request, because we wished to give our readers some inspiring messages on a vital subject at a time when our boys and girls are just beginning their work for another year in our schools and colleges. We feel sure that every one of these articles will be read with interest.

One of our strongest convictions is that the paramount duty of the Church, apart from its mission of evangelization by gospel preaching, is to lay such stress, consistently and continuously, upon its educational policy as will make it inevitable that our people shall be thoroughly equipped for all the duties and responsibilities that the times lay upon them. In a general way, we have come to feel that education is essential to the highest form of success in life, and through the Church press and through the activities of those who are specifically charged with its advocacy, we are emphasizing the importance of the subject. But there is still lacking, on the part of tens of thousands of our people, a deep personal conviction as to the necessity of our maintaining adequately endowed and equipped institutions of the highest possible grade, and of patronizing them whole-heartedly and persistently, as the condition of our highest usefulness.

The changes have been rung in every conceivable way upon the demand for an educated leadership. We ourselves have had occasion, more than once, to lay stress upon this phase of the needs of our times, and with what emphasis we could command, we have urged our young people to fit themselves for positions of greatest opportunity and responsibility. But we might as well realize, once for all, that all of us cannot be outstanding leaders. The very fact of leadership implies a following; the one cannot be divorced from the other. It is tremendously important that those who do become leaders should be thoroughly qualified for their great work; but it is equally important that the rank and file of our people should have that training that will make them worthy followers of worthy leaders. The noblest form of leadership is not that which inspires the enthusiastic but uninformed allegiance of a mass of people, but that enlists the intelligent co-operation of the many individuals who have been trained to see and think clearly for themselves and act in accordance with the dictates of their own judgment. Effective leadership is as dependent upon a trained constituency as that constituency is dependent upon a competent leadership. There is a mutual relationship that cannot be destroyed.

After all, leadership is purely a relative matter. Every normal human being reacts in some influential way upon every other normal human being who comes within his reach. While we may not all attain to positions of outstanding leadership, we all do, in a very real sense, influence the thoughts and actions of our associates. And the character of that influence is determined by the character of our own mental attitudes and processes.

It is highly important, therefore, that the benefits of a Christian education should be enjoyed by all our people, from the highest to the lowest. We have not at all done our duty when we have led merely a few to see the necessity of education and have made it possible for only a few to secure its blessings. Our mission is to all, not to some. We need educated day-laborers and farmers and artisans as well as educated lawyers and preachers and doctors. All men are workers, trying to make a life as well as a living. Education helps them to do both, irrespective of the particular form of work in which they happen to be engaged. The Church is fundamentally concerned about the life and the living. It must do all it can to elevate both. We must educate.

THE PROHIBITION SITUATION.

The war time prohibition measure has not yet been passed by Congress, though its friends confidently predict that it will soon be enacted into law. Efforts to amend it in the Senate were unavailing and it passed that body by a large majority without a roll-call. There seems to be no doubt that the House will act likewise.

But the Food Administration, exercising its authority to protect the welfare of the nation by direct order, has prohibited the manufacture of beer after December 1. This order was not unexpected, since the breweries had previously been required to reduce their output 50 per cent as a fuel and food conservation measure, with the warning than in all probability they would soon be required to cease operation altogether.

Already the stock-worn statement that the Government will be embarrassed by the loss of revenue from the tax on beer, is being made in a way that is evidently intended to discourage further agitation of prohibition legislation. It has been pointed out that a huge deficit in internal revenue receipts will have to be made up from other sources. And the implication is that the great mass of the people will have to pay largely increased taxes on necessary articles of consumption.

There may be some little difficulty in readjusting immediately the financial program of the Government to provide for the reduced revenue from beer. But that is an exceedingly small matter when the gains of the Government are taken into consideration. The immense amount of fuel that the breweries consumed will be saved for productive purposes. The food values that were destroyed in the manufacture of beer will be preserved in forms available for human consumption; the thousands of cars that were required to transport brewery products will be released for the use of essential industry; thousands of men will be turned into the ranks of productive labor. But there is an additional gain that is greater than all these, great though they are: the efficiency of tens of thousands of men engaged in shipbuilding plants and munitions factories will be increased to a degree that will offset many times over the loss in revenues from the manufacture of beer.

We are looking at the matter purely from the economic point of view; the moral value of prohibition cannot be overestimated. The battle is practically won. The manufacture of beer after December 1 has been prohibited; the war time prohibition measure will undoubtedly soon be a law; and every indication points to the ratification of the constitutional amendment for national prohibition before the war time measure ceases to operate. We thank God and look to the future with the utmost courage and hope.

WHEN I GO HOME.

A little while and then the summer day,
When I go home.
'Tis lonesome winter now, but 'twill be May
When I go home.
Beyond the gloom of moor and fen I see
The welcome warm of those who wait for me.

Work ceases not in sunshine or in shower
Till I go home.
But in the stillness of the twilight hour
I dream of home.
And when the night wind moans across the wold,
I feel nor dread of dark nor chill of cold.

All will be well and all be happiness
When I go home—
The wanderings all o'er and loneliness,
When I go home.
There will be light at eventide for me—
The light that never was on land or sea.

THE OUTREACH OF A MOTHER'S LOVE.

By Wm. C. Allen.

In the great Finnish epic, "Kalevala," some of the poems of which are 3000 years old, we are told of a certain Kullerwoinen, the Son of Evil, who, after committing a heinous crime, decided to leave his home forever. His family see him depart without regret, but nothing can destroy the love of his mother for her son. In her agony she exclaims:

"Bitterly I'll mourn thy downfall,
I would weep if thou shouldst perish,
I would weep in court or cabin,
Sprinkle all these fields with tear-drops,
Weep great rivers of the ocean,
Weep to melt the snows of Northland,
Make the hillsides green with weeping,
Weep at morning, weep at evening."

How expressive is this beautiful poetry of a pagan mother's sorrow over her willful child! Anguish is depicted, but where is the hope? How different the confident language of the Christian mother of the brilliant, guilty Augustine in the fifth century! When he left her loving arms she is said to have exclaimed:

"Go thy ways and God bless thee, for it is not possible that the son of these tears should perish."

We know the sequel. Her trust was rewarded—his heart was changed. He subsequently became a powerful defender of the Faith he had previously mistrusted and defied.

So has it since been with many an anxious Christian parent. So will it be with some who read these lines. Can we sound the depth of maternal tenderness? Does it not compass sea and land and, if necesary, would it not reach beyond the stars? In the secret chambers of the heart it is poured forth and becomes a pure oblation at the Savior's feet. The loving touch of a mother's hand is as nothing compared with the outreach of her soul after the child for whom she desires the comradeship of Jesus.

Will not our children be influenced by blessed memories of parental affection just as some of us have been by ties of the past? How often has a wandering boy stopped short at the threshold of temptation when the thought of a pure mother flashed into his mind and quieted his hot young heart?

Think for a moment of what our God-fearing mothers have been to us. They laughed when we laughed, sang when we sang, watched over us in slumber, comforted us in trouble, prepared us for life's hurricanes while yet our little sea was calm. They prayed for us when we were careless and told us of wondrous things above. We recollect their tremulous lips, their mirth, their tears. We recall the fragrance of their lives—even their chastisements were love. Their words are written deep into our hearts—their blessed memories are garnered as our rarest treasures. Shall business anxieties or domestic interests cause us to forget the God they served and the Christ they adored? Have not many of them already gone to the wonderful mansions? Are we not glad because the sacred love learned in a mother's eye is revered amidst the passions of life and will be held in fond recollection to the gates of eternity?

Even so, O anxious mothers, may it be with the children of your prayers. Never falter in devotion to your sons and daughters after the flesh. The eternal guidance or leading will follow them as it has followed you. Do they sometimes seem to forsake the God of their fathers? Never cease to pray for them—never despair. Perchance long years after your petitions have been uttered God will send you the answer—your wet lashes will precede their finding peace in Christ!

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

By President Wynn.

Dating from the centenary of Methodism, this time-honored institution will begin her eightieth year on September 18.

The Methodist Church seems to have an exclusive claim on the word Centenary; and rightly understood, it should ever be an inspirational name for churches and colleges, as well as for forward movements.

Our school is about to begin the thirteenth year of her life in its new habitat. My aversion to superstition inclines me to hope that the approaching session will prove in some respects the best of all.

The name of the school has been variously spelled by persons unfamiliar with Methodist nomenclature — Centenary, Seminary, Century, Central, St. Henry, and (may the fates forbid) Cemetery.

More and more as time passes will the Methodists of Shreveport and the State of Louisiana realize what a splendid property they possess in the forty-acre campus located in the corporate limits of the city. It compares favorably in natural beauty with that of much more renowned institutions. Asphalt pavement will soon be completed on Kingshighway to its intersection with Wesley Street, thus giving continuous pavement to the heart of the city. There are many beautiful residence sites adjacent to Centenary, and any parent looking for a place to educate his children would do well to invest, and at the same time aid in building up a college community—a thing greatly to be desired.

Another desirable thing would be the erection of some cottages for rental on easy terms to married preachers who desire to complete their education.

Centenary is proud of her many representatives in army service. The following is an extract from a letter just received from a preacher's son enlisted as a marine:

"I have been elected teacher or director of the Company Bible class. It is a very difficult job but one I'm tackling whole-heartedly. I'm making it (so far as I am concerned) absolutely non-sectarian and not a word has been said about different religious beliefs. It is a great sight to see Jews, Gentiles, Protestants, Catholics, Americans, Belgians—all kinds of men coming together for discussion and searching for the truth—that is what they crave and is what they are nearing. The true values of life are learned here. As for myself, I feel it is the greatest honor to try so to live that my actions and words will make purity and honesty appear as things to be desired and obtained by my fellow-men."

On the very day when some Centenary boys landed on the other side, the Germans began to retreat, and have been on the run ever since.

As to our prospects for the fall term, we cannot quite forecast. The new draft law will unquestionably reduce very greatly the number of older students unless, as may be possible, we can comply with the Government conditions for organizing a unit of the Student Army Training Corps; but we are counting on at least a good number of younger boys. In connection with the opening of the school, a special sermon will be delivered at Noel Memorial Church.

THE SOLDIER AND HIS CHURCH.

By Rev. A. A. Bernard.

The objective credential of the Church of Jesus Christ lies in the fact of its potential adaptability to any possible universal environment. Her followers are found in every clime and nation, among all sorts and kinds of human beings. The most profound scholar has never sounded the profundity of her oracle; neither have the most ignorant come away from it without a message. Not only is this true at the present time, but, wherever presented, the message of His Church has been understood and accepted in every age from the beginning, as is proven by the fact of her present existence.

Occasionally her children have been shepherded by over-zealous leaders, who, standing with wonder and admiration before the spray, have lost sight of the fountain. Frequently these have led her children into grievous error and moulded their conceptions of the Church, and these conceptions have determined their theology. It is not an unfrequent thing nowadays to read after one of these leaders, the most strenuous arguments for a new apologia. They have become dazed at the wonderful momentum, efficacy and efficiency of the Church and her unlimited possibilities. So it has come about, in these moments of their dizziness, like the sight-seers on the great mountain railroads, that their souls begin to cry out against the rails—the only things that have made these ecstasies possible. They have taken the great resultants of Christianity and interpreted them in the room of the sources. They would advance upon a world with a company of blood-bought souls, and their appeal for justification for their demands for righteousness would be grounded in the deeds that they would be doing. The old dogma of the acquisition of righteousness in the doing of a deed, all men know, has been exploded long ago; and even now may be dealt a death-blow by the reading of the 13th Chapter of I Corinthians. Faith is the only determining factor in the spiritual life, and its resultant issue is a disposition and heart of love out of which all deeds of charity find their virtue.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of some to exult in the fact that the men in the trenches know no discriminating marks or tenets in the economy of grace: that all such limits are only impositions inflicted upon a long suffering public; but that now in one night these men of the trenches have awakened from the thralldom of deceived leaders' leadership, and the places that knew these services and ceremonies of age-long Christianity shall know them no more. A statement of this kind grows out of nothing but a loose, general conception, or definition of sectarianism. Sectarianism is the embodiment of the expression of one's conception of Christ, without which Christ would be impossible of interpretation to the world.

Sectarianism and individual characteristics have to do with normal conditions of civil development in the Church and social life, and not abnormal and often chaotic social conditions in the midst of a great warfare such as we are experiencing. Only the man devoid of ability to interpret the real message of the Church in such a time as ours will say that the Church is losing her grasp, because he sees none of the rails—only the beauty of the Way.

What reconciliation or regeneration are we going to offer to the soldier? Is it that which comes in justification of our services for them? Then they are eminently justified in expecting a regeneration, on their part, that comes in turn, in response to their act of service and prospect of sacrifice. Some are teaching "that the most religious thing in the universe"—surely not the most Christian—"is to lay down one's life for somebody or something aside from self." They are predicating this false doctrine as being a primary truth of the teachings of Jesus. It is a primary truth of the teaching of Mohammed, but not of the Christ of God. Do not tell these noble boys of ours that they are to win heaven by an act of service in behalf of our beloved country—they know better. For the Church that upholds such doctrine, history will record a day of derision and scorn.

The whole realm of the inner spiritual self has to be sustained before the outward act can be considered. Heaven is promised on the development and instillment of the "What" and not the "How," recent statements I saw in a contributed article in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to the contrary notwithstanding. The "What" determines the everlasting status of the individual soul, even though the "How" may never have occasion to enter. It is a source of constant amazement to me to see how some fall upon the sayings of our Lord, "In as much as ye did it," without seeming to understand their real meaning. Why, the only ones who did anyhing were the sheep—his children! They did what they did because of their relation to him. The doing of the deed is the act of a Christian: the fruit of his faith. The Christian is not doing these deeds in order to get some one else to do similar beautiful deeds, thereby and through which to become Christians also. The only ones who did nothing were the goats—the sinners. The reason they did nothing was because of their relation to him also. The Lord did not address two crowds of Christians and say to one crowd, "The result of your doing is Heaven evermore," and then say to the other crowd, "I am sorry, my children; you too could have inherited Heaven but you did nothing." It is not written that the doing of deeds by men is to make them the servants of Christ. Such a philosophy of the Christian religion is at fault because it presupposes an element of needy ones in perpetual continuity, and predicates the love of God on the misery of men.

It is inconcelvable that men should synonymize worship and patriotism. It may serve for us if we confine ourselves to a narrow horizon of national existence. But should we transpose ourselves into Germany and ask ourselves if these words are synonymous for the Allies, what would keep them from being synonymous for the Germans? No, these words are not synonymous. Among the intensely patriotic of the struggling nations, in all probability, we could find men and women who have no place for, and very little thought of, God in their lives. What they do is done for love of the cause, and if God is worshiped by them in such a deed or attitude, they know not that they are thus worshiping him.

Is it not strange that this class of writers, with the spectacle of modern Japan, dressed in full armor of modern civilization, do not understand that she is yet at heart lacking the great "What" of the Christian philosophy and life germ? You may plow with a new plow, cook with a new cooker, can with a new canner and feed them at a new table; but the spots of the leopard will still be there, and the putrifaction of the leper still will be startling and unclean until the great "What" of the Christ is known, and the carnal nature is swept out by the power of His blood and the soul reborn into a life of good works.

PRESENT DAY NEED OF EDUCATION FOR WOMEN.

By President Cooper, Whitworth.

Among the many changes resultant from the present war and general chaos, none is more apparent than the change in the attitude of the public toward the education of women. From a smattering knowledge of a few subjects, formerly expected of a woman, either idle or in business, a deep insight into more than one specialized subject is required for the manifold duties laid upon the woman of to-day. The public demands this intensive study, for it is the public who employs and suffers through a lack of the same.

A few years ago, the only occupation for women requiring any sort of education was that of teaching, and the standard set was not an exalted one. The woman, to occupy her mind and time until matrimony should claim her, announced her purpose to teach. The one who was most apt at bluffing was the one who best held her situation, and not the rare specimen who was prepared. Now the teachers in the most inconspicuous schools are required to furnish statements of unusual scholarship and show records from the very best schools. This change in the demands set upon the schoolteacher has come about more slowly than could be expected from the marvelous changes taking place in the world of business. Some of the system and energy of this business world are entering into the methods practiced by our school superintendents and trustees, and only the best of buildings, furniture, and teachers are employed. Another item, an immediate result of this war, is the exodus of our men to Government positions and to the army. Positions of responsibility are being offered and thrust upon our college graduates, and broad opportunities opened to that one of serious mind and excellent scholarship. This type can most easily be found in the ranks of graduates from our Church schools where the individual is not lost sight of, and where personality and temperament are fostered.

With the growth of feeling for the new sphere of woman, no matter how misled the woman occupying that field may be thought to be, has come a great number of occupations for women—brought about by an invasion of factory and modern efficiency into the home. The very arts once taught at home have been made a subject for texts in all our schools. Thus even the profession of homemaker must needs be studied. But with the replacing of men in offices and professions, long since familiar to a once gasping public, a very thorough education is almost an essential. The woman stenographer must know her English and, in a great number of cases, the languages of our neighbor nations. The ambitious woman who wishes to specialize in the profession of medicine or law needs all the Latin and science one school could possibly teach. The college must be used, even if it to be a stepping-stone and an inconspicuous background.

The newspapers are full of the numerous calls to women for service to the Government and overseas. Examination into the requirements will lead to a realization that education is the point stressed. How many women have left their positions in distress over the unsupposed inability to hold down the "job," taken on in a burst of patriotic fervor! Many girls and women have sacrificed position and comforts with the vain idea of being of service to humanity, vain because of a lack of a thorough and systematic college training. Often the duties are unusual and unexpected, but with a well-trained and well-balanced mentality no applicant is in danger of being turned aside or dismissed, for the habit of schooling never leaves a person and the new task is quickly grasped. Nurses are given preference who have poise and a quick-thinking mind. Those women who are taking their husbands' and brothers' places in factories are quick to recall their science pored over at school and never regarded as of any practical use. No knowledge goes to waste in this wonderful age, and this fact should be an encouragement and incentive to ambitious parents.

Our daughters are our sons and daughters—they are the heirs to our businesses. They will in many cases have their brothers' opportunities, and it is the duty of the present-day parent to see that they grasp these opportunities. I know of no school better fitted to cope with the modern girl than our Church school. It gives the girl her chance for that superior mental development, and holds her to the ideal of womanliness and truth. They are held to their mental drill by the power of personal oversight, and given a true and broad vision of service to humanity.

Educate our women! They are the answers to our problems. Fit them for their tasks. The churches, schools, offices and hospitals are calling for them. But keep in them that ideal which must never perish with American womanhood.

COMMON SENSE IN EDUCATION.

By President Hunt, Mississippi Conference Training School.

I have known a robust negro man to leave the field where he was earning a dollar and a half a day and walk ten miles to collect twenty-five cents. What sort of sense is that?

I have known a white man—backed by his zealous wife, both members of the Methodist Church, to say: "We are going to send our children to school where it costs the least money." The immediate financial outlay outweighed everything else in heaven and earth. What sort of sense is that?

I have known a prosperous farmer to spend a week going back and forth between two high schools, trying to figure out to a penny the difference in cost for a son and a daughter, then let two dollars and a half determine where John and Mary went for a year, regardless of quality and environment. What sort of sense is that?

I have known Methodist parents, who made much ado about religion, to send their children to worldly institutions in preference to the institutions of their own Church, then wonder why their children turned out badly. What sort of sense is that?

I have known zealous church people to refuse to support Christian education, then be forced to pay heavy tribute to Satan in consequence, while hearts broke in their homes. What sort of sense is that?

Look out upon the wide, wide world to-day, with its godless education, forced to lose billions upon billions of dollars in money, loved ones separated from loved ones, homes broken up, fields devastated, crops destroyed, churches and cathedrals sacrilegiously abused and burned, cities in ashes, females ravished, babes mutilated and butchered, and millions of young men maimed and murdered—then tell me whether we have been wise or not. As I see it, it is getting time for us to come to ourselves and begin to estimate values in terms of character and eternity instead of in terms of bits of gold and snatches of pleasure. I think we might thereby display some common sense.

One thing, in conclusion, deserves special consideration. Now and then from honorable sources and good intentions comes the claim that the Christian college is the "backbone" of the educational system and mention is made lightly of elementary schools, high schools and academies operated by the Church and permeated by Christian spirit and training. Far be it from me to antagonize or underestimate the value of the Christian college. Yet is it not true that the majority of graduates from the high schools go to secular colleges because of the prevailing influences at work in these preparatory years? Is it not true that with better equipped and multiplied church preparatory schools, that the church colleges would be far better fed? Is it not true that more boys and girls are wrecked in morals before they reach the college than are ever wrecked after they reach college? Is it not true that the early years of life are the most important in determining character and fitness for useful living?

Does not common sense teach us, beyond controversy, that Christian education should begin in the home, continue in the kindergarten, go on in the elementary school, then the high school and culminate in the college? A link in the chain may destroy the value of the chain.

Montrose, Miss.

A candle that won't shine in one room is very unlikely to shine in another. If you do not shine at home, if your father and mother, your sister and brother, if the very cat and dog in the house are not the better and happier for your being a Christian, it is a question whether you are really one.—J. Hudson Taylor.

THE RELATION OF THE HOME TO THE CHURCH SCHOOL.

By President O'Neil, Port Gibson.

"And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden," and in this garden He placed the first man and the first woman, and bade them have dominion over all things. To have dominion means to control, and that involves knowledge, for one cannot control that of which he has no knowledge, and the acquisition of knowledge requires research, and ofttimes diligent and continued effort.

We may think at first reading, that the first pair were commanded to have dominion over only the beasts, and the fowls, and the creeping things with which they were immediately surrounded, and that the command to have dominion was intended for this first pair only, but I think a close study of the command will convince us that the command to the first pair, the representatives of the entire race of the genus homo, was not intended for them alone but for their entire posterity, and that the command was not only to control the beasts, etc., with which this first pair were immediately surrounded, but to have knowledge of all things created, and the laws with which God intended they should be controlled, and to become acquainted with all sciences, and to deduce laws by which these sciences may be made servants of man.

The attainment of such knowledge is not the feat of the savage or of the barbarian, or the heathen. Of the higher and nobler and greater facts in the galaxy of beings, the savage or the heathen does not think or write. Disquisitions on these facts are reserved for the Christian scholar, and the Christian scholar usually comes from homes where God is known, and Christian education is emphasized.

There is a law that has obtained from the beginning times that all things produce their kind, and from this law the home is not excused, hence the fact that Christian scholars usually come from Christian homes. This being true, our supreme effort should be to Christianize every home, and this cannot be done without a system of Christian education. This system requires the proper education of both our boys and girls, for while the men are the bread-winners, and the fighters of our race, the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. If we are going to have homes patterned after the model conceived in the Divine mind, and obey the original command to have dominion, we must not only educate the head and the heart of the head of the house, but we must also educate his helpmeet.

The education that is needed to make the home what God intended that it should be is not to be obtained except in the Church schools, for, while the State is doing a great work educationally, because of the heterogeneous patronage, no demand for the Christian element can be made. We conclude then that the home is dependent for its proper maintenance and development on the Church school.

MILITARY INSTRUCTION IN MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

By President Watkins.

I.

Young men should seriously consider this fact: Under the present laws governing the draft age, all men 18 years old will be inducted into the Army within the next 12 months, and trained for military service. It is better that they enter college, where at the expense of the Government they will receive both literary and military instruction, than that they go to the regular cantonments, where only military instruction is given.

II.

Millsaps College has been selected by the United States Government for a unit of the STUDENTS' ARMY TRAINING CORPS.

III.

All able bodied young men, 18 years old, who are prepared for the Freshman class, will be inducted into this corps, and all the expenses will be assumed by the Government. This will include, military instructions, guns, uniforms (including hats, shoes and overcoats), board, lodging, tuition, medical attention, and, in addition, the pay of a private soldier, $30 per month.

IV.

Men 18 years old, but not able to enter the Freshman class, should matriculate in the Preparatory School, where they will receive miitary instruction, while awaiting their call to active service. At present the Government is not prepared to furnish uniforms or assume their tuition or board expenses. The provisions of the plan may later be so broadened as to include this class; but at present no promise of this can be made.

V.

Freshmen less than 18 years old will have the privileges of the military instruction; but for the present, provision has not been made for their board, tuition, uniforms, or other expenses. This may come later, but at this time cannot be promised. Tuition is $20 per term, and it has been estimated that the uniforms will cost about $12.

VI.

The Government establishes these S. A. T. C. units for the purpose of providing a supply of highly efficient commissioned officers for the new army. Every member of the Millsaps S. A. T. C. unit will have the best of chances to win a commission.

VII.

This work will be done at Millsaps College under healthful moral conditions, in which the spiritual needs of the men will not be neglected.

Next session begins September 18, 1918.

BISHOP KILGO AT COLUMBIA.

Dear Brother Carley: I would like to say a few words about Bishop Kilgo's visit to our community. He came Saturday, August 31. On Sunday he preached twice, and dedicated our church.

Sunday at 11 o'clock we had a great congregation, all the churches in our city joining us. The Bishop took for his text Romans 1:16, and he reached "high water mark." He showed clearly that the gospel of Christ is to save sinners and not simply to "raise up" society. His preaching has no uncertain sound. At the close of the service eighteen officials gathered at the altar and presented the church for dedication. For a few minutes the Bishop gave us a strong charge on the sacredness of God's House.

Sunday evening he took for his subject the Parable of the Sower. He did not preach like a man who had been sick. The truth is, he gave us two great revival sermons. One man said, "The Bishop has a case of old-time religion," and another said, "The only thing he left off was singing 'The old-time religion.'"

In the home, Bishop Kilgo is one of the most companionable, helpful men I ever knew. When he comes our way again I think my entire family will meet him at the gate to welcome him.

Several visiting ministers were with us. They were: Presiding Elders J. R. Jones and J. T. Leggett; former pastors, Brothers Sharbrough, Lewis, Featherstun, and Williams; and Rev. S. C. Moody, of Oioh, and Rev. E. M. Allen, of Hub. We were delighted to have them.

Bishop Kilgo is improving rapidly. He will be in fine shape for our Conference, and will come to us full of the Spirit.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS TO CAMP SHELBY PASTOR'S SUPPORT.

You are entitled to the facts in this matter. For one cause or another, there has been considerable shrinkage of the subscription list as taken at the session of the Mississippi Conference for the support of our Camp Shelby pastor.

In addition to this, the subscribers, for reasons perfectly satisfactory to themselves, have been slow about meeting these obligations, which necessitated borrowing nearly every month during the year in order to meet imperative demands of the pastor.

When Rev. R. H. Kleiser left for the army as chaplain there was an unpaid note in the bank against these subscriptions. In order to pay him in full for his services for the time spent at the camp, it was necessary for the treasurer to borrow an additional $333. Of course, these notes are going to be met, either by the original subscribers or the borrower.

Letters continue to come in from subscribers asking if these subscriptions now, since the pastor has given up the work, cannot be diverted to other interests. Brethren, your generous response in pledges at Conference to this worthy cause must continue until these obligations have been discharged.

It may be that the treasurer should not have incurred these obligations. However, had he not done so this work would have had to be abandoned early in the year for want of sufficient funds to pay house rent and support the pastor in his work.

Your treasurer has done the best he knew for the Church, our pastor and the cause of our soldier boys. He is sure that there is going to be no disposition on the part of any of those whose names appear upon this subscription list to embarrass him on the day of final settlement.

Yours fraternally,

CHAS. W. CRISLER, Treasurer.

IMPORTANT NOTICE FROM BISHOP KILGO.

To attend to important matters relating to the Missionary Centenary work I shall meet the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference in New Orleans on October 9. Already they had arranged to hold a meeting in New Orleans at this time and I shall ask them to meet with me at some time during their visit to the city.

I also request the presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference and of the North Mississippi Conference to meet in joint session in Jackson at 2:30 p. m., October 23, to consider matters connected not only with the Missionary Centenary but also some other matters relating to our common interests in Mississippi. JNO. C. KILGO.

NOTICE.

Ministers' Relief Association, North Mississippi Conference.

The Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, who died Aug. 28, was a member of the Conference Relief Association, in good standing. Assessment No. 21 is now due.

The Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, the presiding elder, writes me: "It is one of the most pathetic cases I have ever seen. Brother Brantley has been utterly helpless since January. His wife was in bed when I saw her yesterday with a two-weeks-old baby. With the help of the charge, we have provided for them since January."

If there are others who desire to make contributions through the Ministers' Relief Association, money sent to the Treasurer will be forwarded to the stricken family.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

DAY OF BIG THINGS.

"I thoroughly approve of the program adopted at the Atlanta General Conference for the Centenary of American Methodist Missions. The plan is big, but this is a day of big things if it fulfills its obligations."

HON. H. H. WHITE, Layman Louisiana Conference.

THE DALLAS CONFERENCE.

Five or more Bishops, ninety-nine presiding elders, and a large number of pastors and consecrated laymen and women will attend the Centenary of Missions group meeting of the Southwestern territory, to be held in Dallas, Texas, beginning Tuesday night, September 17. Addresses will be delivered on the first night by Bishop James Atkins, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, and Dr. E. H. Rawlings.

The conference promises to be the largest of its kind ever held in the Southwest. Fifteen Annual Conferences will be represented. Every phase of the Missionary Centenary celebration will be discussed by men thoroughly acquainted with the plan.

Let the entire Church pray for the success of this important meeting, that those attending may receive a larger vision of the needs and opportunities in the home and foreign fields.

GAVE UP LONG CHERISHED DREAM IN ORDER TO TITHE.

There is nothing close-fisted about the Korean. When he has money he gives it, and when he doesn't have money he gives something else. If he doesn't have anything else to give he goes to work and gets something. The Korean works his brain as well as his hands. That's why he gets ahead financially. He gives constructive thought to his every day labor and to his every day religious life. That's why most of the churches in Korea are self supporting.

The Korean is genuinely spiritual, and one of his strong points is generosity to the Church. A man will make a large gift to the Church instead of buying a coveted piece of land to add to his farm. One man who was earning only five dollars a month and wished to start in business for himself was given an unusual opportunity to buy a rice field. He wanted that rice field. It had long been his dream to be an independent farmer and hire others to work for him instead of working for some one else. Out of that five dollars a month which he earned he could easily pay for it on the instaliment plan. The average American, who has acquired the installment habit, wouldn't have hesitated an instant, but the Korean did. He hesitated long, and while he hesitated he thought hard. There was something else he wanted to do, something equally vital. Finally he made his decision, and when he had made it he went to Dr. A. C. Anderson, physician in charge of the hospital at Wonju, and said:

"I think I won't buy that rice field.".

"Why," said Dr. Anderson, "I thought it was the dream of your life to own a farm."

"It has been. But you see I have been thinking a lot lately about tithing. If I buy that rice field I can't tithe. I can't possibly manage both. I want our Church work to prosper. I'm going to tithe and I guess the dear Lord will take care of me some way. Maybe I can buy that rice field later. Anyway, the Church comes first."

That man lives in the Wonju district and he is still giving his tenth to the Church and laying by nothing for his rice field.

"I know a widow," says Dr. Anderson, "who gave [illegible] think him capable [illegible] cents for the building of [illegible] near a settlement is the [illegible] give their wedding [illegible] the old guns in the neighbo[illegible]rnaments—prized [illegible] he is hunted by dogs whenever he is s[illegible]we" as to their sisters in other countries—when they have nothing else to give, and those who have no jewels lay aside a bit of rice each week from their daily living portion, sell it, and bring the money in as a gift to the Church.

"The skilled carpenter, who earns fifty cents a day—which is good pay, not only in Korea but in other Eastern countries—and the unskilled laborer whose highest wage is eighteen cents a day, puts the Church first in his scheme of living and gives a tenth of what he has to the Great Cause."

It is safe to predict that the Koreans will rise to their share in the Centenary World Program.—The Centenary Bulletin.

NOTHING MORE TIMELY THAN THE CENTENARY.

"The Centenary of Methodist Missions suggests considerations of deep import. We are on the threshold of a new era. In a profoundly significant sense, the world must be reconstructed.

"The history of the Church throughout the centuries has been marked by well defined periods—periods signalized by providential indications. Sometimes these periods have been epochal in their nature, but unfortunately they were recognized only in retrospect after it was too late to seize and improve opportunities. Sometimes leaders who were wise to discern the signs of the times have made these periods memorable by advance movements which have created eras of conquest and victory.

"Nothing could be more timely than the celebration just now of our Missionary Centenary. It is full of inspiring possibilities, and should be gloriously fruitful in results.

"Bishop W. B. MURRAH."

FIVE YEARS OF WAITING.

Rev. E. E. Clement in a letter regarding the work for the Cuban congregation at Habana, makes a forceful plea for a new building. He says:

"I ask for a building for Habana. The present quarters are far from being adequate. In the foundry in London, Wesley had a meeting place for the congregation, a department for the school, a book room for Methodist publications and living quarters for himself. Our central mission in Habana is similarly arranged. But the meeting place is so small that the children fill it in the daily assembly, the ordinary congregation crowds it, and on any extraordinary occasion there is no room to accommodate the people.

"The department for the school is crowded to its utmost capacity and we have been turning away children since the second week of school. The play or recreation ground for the 160 children is the patio, or interior court, a place 16x21 feet.

"The living quarters are completely occupied, so that there is not even a vacant chamber for the traveling prophet that might happen along.

"Thus every foot of space is crowded and there is NO ROOM FOR GROWTH.

"The property as it now stands consists of four ancient dwelling houses, partially remodeled to meet as far as possible our present immediate needs. Its condition is such that it does not come up to the standard requirement of the sanitary department. For lack of room we have turned some forty pupils from the school this year, and after enlarging the chapel twice, we still have not room for the congregation. A new building would give fresh impetus to our work. For five years we have been hoping to build—and we still hope."

Habana is one of the strategic points of our work in the plucky little nation whose liberty the United States fought to secure. Having freed these splendid people from the tyranny of Spanish dominion, is it not even more necessary to free them from the iron rule of superstition and Romanism? This little congregation has waited five years for adequate buildings to carry on the work at Habana. Does it not seem providential that the great Centenary of Missions is inaugurating a five year's "Drive" just at this time?

TO AWAKEN JAPAN.

"One thing is needful to awaken Japan to the realities of modern life, and this is to make her open her eyes to the moral dignity of a man," says a writer in a recent number of The New East, published in Tokio.

"This would be her real savior, whatever impending danger may be," he continues, relative to the question as to whether democratic principles will invade Japan after the war. That she enjoys a constitutional government, at least in theory, he admits; and he also contends that, socially, no country has ever been so democratic as Japan. This is evidenced in her uniform educational system where all children of all classes are educated. Even in the one exception, the Peer's school, the common people are not excluded; and in the army where deep social distinctions are almost universally prevalent, Japan proves an exception, there being a spirit of camaraderie throughout the army.

In the Centenary survey a good sum has been settled upon to help fill this gap of the "one thing needful" in order to make Japan safe for democracy.

GOVERNOR OF TAMAULIPAS.

Prof. Andres Osuna, a prominent layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Mexico, and who for some time was connected with the publication of our Spanish literature in Nashville, has been elected by the Mexican Senate Governor of Tamaulipas. At the time of his election Prof. Osuna was serving as Superintendent of Public Instruction for Mexico City and the Federal District.

CHINESE LIBERAL GIVERS.

The fact that the boys in the Anglo-Chinese School at Singapore last year gave over $2200 towards war charities shows that the Chinese are generous contributors to the war fund. Some of them have given airplanes and tanks; some have given large contributions toward the battleship called Malaya which took a very active part in the battle off the Jutland coast. They had fetes of various kinds for the Red Cross, and at one of these they raised $57,000 for war charities.

VALUE OF VISION.

Far more valuable than silver or gold is the value of the vision given to those localities which have been "surveyed" by the Mission Board and Board of Church Extension. Ministers and laymen are seeing their needs and obligations as never before. Practically all of our large cities have similar problems, due to the failure of the Church to take the long look in days gone by.

Notes and Comment

Get a Ladder.

Announcement has been made that the Government will soon establish an airplane mail service between New York and Chicago. Two planes were to be sent over the course last Thursday, leaving New York at 6 a. m. The return from Chicago was planned for Saturday, and mail was to be carried each way. Shall we get a ladder, or will they drop a ietter to us?

Suppose it Were Longer!

A street in Eau Claire, Wis., named Germania, is only two biocks long, but it has sent twenty-three young men into the service of the country. It has its own service flag, as it well deserves. It has issued a challenge to any other street in the nation to show a better record. So far as we know, the challenge has not been taken up. Suppose Germania Street were longer!

Visitors, Take Notice.

The commissioner of public safety in New Orieans has discovered that taxicab drivers are prone to charge passengers more than the iegal fare. As a resuit, he has deprived severai drivers of their licenses, and has issued a warning to the public to look at the rate card before paying the fare. This warning is especialiy vaiuabie to unsuspecting visitors to our fair city; people who iive here are looking for overcharges anyway.

A Bad Year for Mosquitoes.

A favorabie report has been made on the malaria situation in Mlssissippi by Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman, chairman of the subcommittee on statistics of the Natlonal Malaria Committee. He says that at the present time the most satisfactory returns regarding maiarial morbidity are those from Mississippi. We hopefully infer that this has been a bad year for mosquitoes. In Louisiana, however, the crop has been very good.

Purely Temporary.

A London dispatch says that "Adamless" flats are the iatest fad of the girl war-worker. The giri who is working in a munitions factory earns big wages and wants to have her own fireside and a iittie freedom. So, with a chum, she takes a flat. Thousands of such flats are said to have been taken, and agents are swamped with applications for more. It is only a fad; human nature has not changed; let no man become despondent; Miss Eve has not faiien out permanentiy with Mr. Adam.

It Can't.

The New Orieans Railway and Light Company, which controls the street car system of the city, has announced that it wiii soon lnaugurate a new schedule of service that will mean the running of fewer cars and the empioyment of fewer men. It ciaims that a good deal of fuel wiii be saved by the change, and incidentaiiy the expenses of the company will be considerably diminished. The comforting assurance is held out, however, that the service wiii not be affected by the change. We are reasonabiy sure of that; it can't very weli be any worse.

How to Save Expenses.

According to press dispatches from Washington, protests have been fiied with Surgeon-Generai Gorgas and Comptroiier Warwick of the Treasury, against the recent Treasury ruling that army nurses must lose their pay while held prisoners by the enemy. We believe the protests are weil founded. Withholding the pay of captured nurses may be a good way to save an infinitesimai part of the expenses of the Government in carrying on the war, but it is a mighty poor way to show appreciation of the nobie service thousands of good women have rendered our soldiers.

What is Life For?

A man who is reported to have committed suicide a few days ago left this note: "I have at last become despondent at the poor success I have made through life. I have suffered from hay fever and indigestion for seven years, and I do not care to live any ionger." A tragedy! Mentai anguish and physical suffering have wrecked many a life. But what is life for, but to prove our superiority to the triais and disappointments and discouragements that beset us? Cheer up; life is worth iiving, in spite of the worid and the fiesh and the devil.

It May Be Worse.

A disappointed mother is said to have had published recently in a New Orleans dally newspaper a death notice of her daughter who had run away and married. We know nothing of the particulars; probabiy the jokesmiths wiii have their iittie fling. We notice the incident only as an occasion of saying that this country is in need of some serious teaching concerning the whoie question of matrimony. We saw a statement recently to the effect that in New York there is a divorce every eight and one-half hours. What wiii it profit if we whip the Huns and destroy our own homes?

Went Anyway.

A news dispatch from New York recently says that 200 draft evaders were discovered in the sifting of thousands of young men who were suspected of being army siackers, and that, without ceremony, they were immediateiy shipped off to training camps. We saw in a iocai newspaper the other day a statement to the effect that two men who had attempted to evade the draft escaped prison sentences by beIng inducted into service at once. It is the same oid story; men think they can escape the operation of iaw, only to find out that it is inexorabie in its demands. Sinners might weii take warning from these slackers.

Make a Visit Instead.

A statement has been issued by a deputy State attorney-generai of New York in which he says that information is being transmitted to the enemy in apparently harmless letters of a social and personai character, sent by German-owned concerns in this country to home offices in Germany. Doubtless there are many peopie in the United States who have friends and acquaintances in Germany with whom they would like to keep in touch; to avoid suspicion, iet them make a visit, instead of writing ietters. Uncle Sam is arranging to carry over a iarge party of tourists in the near future. We hope they wiii be abie to include Berlin in their itinerancy.

Patriotism Begins At Home.

A dispatch from Washington says that the House leaders are planning for a recess from about September 20 untii after the November eiections, in order that members of aii parties may take part in the congressional campaigns. To carry out the plan, it is stated that speedy action wiii be necessary on revenue biiis carrying appropriations of biiiions of doiiars. There probably are other good reasons for haste in passing these appropriation biils, but we believe a good place for a member of Congress to be about this time is in his piace at Washington. If he is attending to his duty, his constituents wiii probably re-elect him; if he is not doing it, he ought to resign. Our legislators, however, probabiy belleve in the doctrine that patriotism begins at home, and they want to do ail in their power to keep the "home-fires" burning.

"Spugs."

There is an organization known as the "Society for the Prevention of Useless Giving," the members of which are famiiiariy spoken of as "Spugs." Doubtiess, ali such wiii rejoice in the announcement that has been made from Washington that the retail interests of the country have agreed not to increase their working forces or normai working hours for the hoiiday trade, and to urge in newspaper advertisements that Christmas giving, except in the case of children, be confined to useful artlcles. What common sense has not been able, thus far, to accompiish, the war situation may bring about. But until the testimony of our eyes convinces us to the contrary, we expect to see promlnently displayed in department store windows and other piaces many wondrous assortments of unusable toilet articles, vexatious collar bags and handkerchief boxes, and perfectly useless but costly jewelry, ail tagged as exemplifying in the highest degree the spirit of the "give something useful" movement. We are giad, though, that we may stiii give our children gifts that will make their hearts happy, whether they serve them or not. It wiii be a sad day in this world when the announcement goes forth, "Santa Claus is dead."

The War Situation.

The war situation continues to be altogether favorable to the Aliies. The steady retreat of the enemy has enabied our forces to occupy a large amount of territory that had been in the hands of the Huns, and thousands of prisoners and much material have been taken. The German retreat shows more signs of developing into a rout than at any time in the past. The reports of prisoners and the statements of inspired German newspapers seem to indicate that the morale of enemy troops is ebbing. There are some indications that the Germans are beginning a definite peace propaganda. The War Department has announced that we now have more than 1,600,000 men in France. The registration under the new manpower act will take place on Sept. 12. This wiii increase by the millions the reserve force that General Foch is relying upon for the necessary driving power in the finai assault upon the enemy. It is not well to be too optimistic as to immediate resuits, but we may confidently expect from now on increasing success for our arms. We need, above all things, to be on our guard against a peace program instituted by the Teutons that wiii rob us of the full fruits of victory if we yield to it. We must not lay down our arms until all the aims of the Allies have been attained.

DO NOT FORGET GOD.

Dear Brother Cariey: I wish some abler pen than mine could utter a note of warning just now as the news coming from the War Front is more favorabie every day, not to withhold public and private acknowiedgment and gratitude to God for his heip. No one ever doubted that our American boys were brave and would give a good account of themseives. They are spiendid—their share of honor is great, for there is abundance of honor to be shared by all engaged. While papers are full of praise for them, fuliy deserved, let us not forget God's share, nor rob him of the heip he is giving. As your increasingly interesting paper reaches so many charges in our Church, remind pastor and people to be thankfui to Aimighty God for victories gained, and at the same time pray for further help, and He who is first King of Righteousness, and then King of Salem which is King of Peace, will hasten a righteous and lasting peace.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR PLEASURES.

It is said where the most beautiful cacti grow there the most venomous serpents are found at the root of every piant. And so it is with sin. Your fairest pleasures wiii harbor your grossest sins. Take care—take care of your pleasures. Cleopatra's asp was introduced in a basket of flowers; so are our sins often brought to us in the flowers of our pleasures.—C. H. Spurgeon.

WHY JOHNNY FAILED.

Johnny had a little mind;
It was his very own,
And nothing could be put in it
Except by him alone.
It wasn't very big, it's true,
But there was room inside
For lots of things, chosen out
As Johnny should decide.

Mother and father gave to him
All sorts of good advice;
But Johnny never put it in
Or thought about it twice;
But all the ugly things the boys
Upon the corners said,
Why, Johnny picked them at once
And put them in his head.

At school the teacher tried her best
To give him facts and rules
Of every useful sort—but no,
For Johnny hated schools.
He picked up brag and vulgar slang,
Dime novels, too, ten deep,
And filled his mind till it was like
A tainted rubbish heap.

So when the day of manhood came,
When Johnny searched his mind
For skill and power, it played him false,
And nothing could he find,
But worthless trash and ugly thoughts,
And so he failed, alas!
Is any other boy who reads this Coming to Johnny's pass?

THE RED FOX.

This fox has long masqueraded as the four-legged synonym of all that is cunning, cautious, and shrewd. One of his characteristics is the quickness with which he learns by experience. He may make a mistake once, but he will never make the same mistake twice. All manner of tricks for getting out of tight places and escaping dangers he keeps pigeonholed in his memory, right where he can lay his hand on them when needed.

It was an easy matter for the early settlers to shoot or trap the foxes that skulked about their fields and barnyards, but since that time the red fox has learned much by watching man and studying his ways, until to-day man is his plaything, just something to be outwitted and deceived. Sometimes he throws caution to the winds and resorts to pure audacity to carry out some deep-laid plan. Often when the hunters are cheering on the dogs and making all kinds of noise the fox will have circled around and appeared in the rear and at a safe distance will follow in the footsteps of the hunters. When you come to think of it, what place in all that part of the country is as safe as right behind the hunters and the dogs? No one, not even the dogs, would ever think of looking for him there. He has found that out and probably enjoys the sensation of trailing himself. He seems to have a mania for trotting along in the path behind a man and is very seldom caught in the act, as by some uncanny sense the fox seems to know when the man is about to look back, and when he does Mr. Fox is behind a tree or bush, from which position he takes in the details of the situation and remains hidden, while his human flie leader pauses and follows on when the walk is resumed. It is not known why he does this, unless it is that he gets a special thrill when keeping close to his deadly enemy and all the time unseen.

Another thing the red fox has learned: never to go to the same hen roosts twice, for he has noticed that man has a habit of setting a trap after a raid, expecting the fox to have no better sense than to return. The next time he has a yearning for fresh fowl he will visit a farmhouse in another part of the county, where he is sure no trap is awaiting him.

With a strange perversity a fox will leave the thickest timber, where he knows he would be perfectly safe, and deliberately follow a much-used highway with a cool audacity that one would hardly think him capable of. Although his appearance near a settlement is the signal for taking down all the old guns in the neighborhood, and although he is hunted by dogs whenever he is seen, he probably leads a more uneventful life than in the old days when the country was sparsely settled, for the wolves, panthers, and wildcats hunted him day and night the year round.

The first thing an old, experienced fox does when he hears the baying of the hounds is to make certain whether they are on his track or that of some other fox. This he can tell by the course they are following. If his quick ear tells him it is the track of some friend of his that the dogs are trailing, he calmly stretches out on some sunny rock and sleeps the sleep of one whose conscience is clear and whose mind is at rest. But if he finds they are on his track, he trots off in a leisurely manner so as to husband his strength, running over in his mind his assortment of tricks and deciding as he trots which one will suit this particular case. As long as he can keep out of sight of the hunter the dogs do not worry him much, as the average hound will not touch a fox unless he is in full flight. So he jogs along and has been known to turn and drive the dogs back if they came too near. A favorite trick that he often practices to throw the dogs off his trail is to back some distance in his own footsteps, spring far to one side, and then take a new direction.

The red fox is a great believer in fresh air, so he seldom sleeps in his den unless the weather is very rough and cold; at other times he takes his rest on a rock under the stars. If it is too cold for that, he seeks the south side of a hill, away from the wind, and with his nose tucked under the brush of his tail he sleeps as peacefully as if there were not such a thing as a dog in existence. His hours, like his meals, are irregular; sometimes he hunts in the gray of the morning, sometimes at midday, and again on moonlight nights; so he is liable to be glimpsed in any one of the twenty-four hours. His quick grasping of a situation and his ability to decide quickly, even in the face of danger, has had much to do in perpetuating the species. The one place that he religiously avoids is flat, open country; consequently he is unknown on the treeless plains of the West. He likes broken country with hills and gulches, watercourses and wooded stretches, old fields of broom straw and rolling meadows, the tangle of briers and the winding paths through cane brakes. Although the farmer regards him as a pest, he is really a pretty good friend of the "man with a hoe," as he is perfectly willing to pay for an occasional chicken with hundreds of field mice and other small rodents. If other supplies run low, he can manage to Hooverize on frogs, lizards, insects, and small snakes.—C. A. David, in The Visitor.

THE NEW BOY.

"A new boy came into our office to-day," said a wholesale groeery merchant to his wife at the supper table. "He was hired by the firm at the request of the senior member, who thought the boy gave promise of good things. But I feel sure that boy will be out of the office in less than a week."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because the first thing he wanted to know was just exactly how much he was expected to do."

"Perhaps you will change your mind about him."

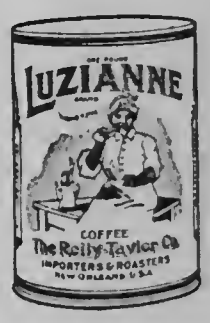
"Perhaps I shall," replied the merchant "but I don't think so."

Three days later the business man said to his wife: "About that boy you remember I mentioned three or four days ago. Well, he is the best boy that ever entered the store."

"How did you find that out?"

"In the easiest way in the world. The first morning after the boy began work he performed very faithfully and systematically the exact duties assigned, which he had been so careful to have explained to him. When he had finished, he came to me and said: 'Mr. H——, I have finished all that work. Now, what can I do?'

"I was greatly surprised, but I gave him a little job of work, and forgot all about him, until he came into my room with the question, 'What next?' That settled it for me. He was the first boy that ever entered our office who was willing, and volunteered to do more than was assigned him. I predict a successful career for that boy as a business man."—The Little Christian.



IN THE MIDST OF THE STORM.

Two artists went out to paint each a picture of peace. One painted a silvery lake embossed deep among the hills, where no storm could ever touch it—calm, sweet, quiet in its shelter. The other painted a wild sea, swept by tempests, strewn with wrecks, but rising out of the sea, a great rock, and in the rock, high up, a cleft with herbage and flowers, amid which, on her nest, a dove was sitting. The latter is the true picture of Christian peace.—J. R. Miller.

Control, give, sympathize: these three must be learned and practiced: self-control, charity and sympathy.—Oriental Saying.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is hereby called to meet in regular annual session on Thursday, October 10, at 11 o'clock a.m., at the Advocate office, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La. The Committee will take up all matters which concern the Advocate at this time. A full meeting is desired.

J. M. HENRY, Chairman.

Ruston, La., Aug. 26.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY.

We trust our readers are not overlooking the full-page articles that have been appearing in the Advocate recently setting forth the aims and plans of the great Centenary Movement. These articles have been prepared by men who are in close touch with the work that has been undertaken, and their statements ought to be read by all the people of Southern Methodism. We cannot afford to fail in the accomplishment of this, the greatest program our Church has ever undertaken; but unless we become fully informed as to what is intended and what is needed, we run great risk of falling short of the goal.

A great meeting is to be held in Dallas, Texas, on October 17-19, for a large area of the Church west of the Mississippi River, for the purpose of imparting information and perfecting plans for the campaign that is to begin in the near future. There will be a large delegation from the Louisiana Conference, we understand; and probably some from Mississippi, who were unable to attend the Lake Junaluska meeting, will be in attendance. Provision is being made to have the cause fully presented at the sessions of our Annual Conferences, and it is hoped that all our people will take advantage of every opportunity to inform themselves fully on this great movement.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE ENTERTAINMENT.

We are sure the members of the Mississippi Conference will read with sympathetic interest the statement in another column by Brothers Deceil and Barry and Brother Bond concerning the entertainment of delegates at the approaching session at McComb City, and that they will act promptly in accordance with the suggestions contained therein.

Under normal conditions, the entertainment of an Annual Conference is no light task; but at the present time it is a serious undertaking. The shortage of food supplies, the high cost of everything that goes on the table and the difficulty of securing servants, lay an unusually heavy burden upon the housekeeper. We are sure the unstinted hospitality of the good people of McComb City and of the other Conference hosts will leave nothing undone that can be done for the comfort and convenience of guests. No suggestion has come to us from any source that the citizens of McComb City, Clarksdale and New Orleans are looking forward to the Conference sessions with any other than the most pleasant anticipations; but we believe some very practical considerations make it expedient for us not to prolong more than is absolutely necessary our sessions. The fuel situation is serious. The supply of coal is limited, and the price is high. A severe spell of weather might work a real hardship upon hosts and guests alike. The food administration is enforcing strictly its regulations concerning the use of sugar, for example. The question is not one of cordial hospitality—we are sure that abounds—but of a situation brought about by war conditions.

We know that all our preachers are thoroughly familiar with these unusual conditions. The good friends who so generously and hospitably throw open their homes to them need feel no embarrassment if their provisions for their entertainment fall below their own desires. The privileges of Christian fellowship, seasoned with the grace of unfeigned kindness, are, after all, the greatest blessing the Conference home can bestow upon the preacher guest.

MRS. HARRELL RESIGNS.

We regret very much to announce that Mrs. R. F. Harrell has found it necessary to resign her position as editor of the Woman's Missionary Department of the Advocate. Every week she has been prompt in sending her material to the office, and in every case it has been in such shape as to make it a delight to Editor and to compositor. The women of the Church who have read the page devoted to their interests will bear testimony to the uniformly high quality of the matter found on that page. Mrs. Harrell has drawn upon authoritative sources for information that has been inspiring to the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, and she has kept in close touch with the work in our own territory. We desire to express our personal appreciation of the great service she has rendered, and to assure her that she will be greatly missed by a wide circle of readers. We pray God's richest blessings upon her.

DEATH OF REV. C. R. A. BRANTLEY.

We have received the following note from Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, which will be read with sorrow by the many friends of the deceased:

"Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, pastor of the Vardaman Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, died in the parsonage at Vardaman, after a lingering illness, on August 29, at 11:30 p. m. He leaves a wife and an infant daughter, two weeks old. Brother Brantley was a consecrated Christian minister, greatly beloved by his flock, and his departure is deeply mourned. Let prayers ascend for the bereaved wife and infant child. A fuller notice will appear later."

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and pray that they may experience God's comforting presence in this time of sorrow.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. A. J. Coburn, of Clinton, La., has our thanks for three new subscriptions, which he recently sent us.

Rev. J. M. Corley, of Lake, Miss., has brought us under obligations by sending us six subscriptions for our files. We thank him sincerely.

Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, of Fernwood, Miss., in sending us a renewal subscription to the Advocate, states that things are going well with them on that delightful charge.

"Everything getting along nicely," is the word that comes from Rev. G. P. McKeown, of Edwards, Miss. A renewal subscription accompanied the message, and gave point to it.

Rev. J. W. Booth, the popular pastor of our Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge, La., reports that things are moving along nicely on his charge. We thank him for three subscriptions.

We have been informed that Rev. V. G. Clifford, our pastor at Union, Miss., in the Newton District, has resigned his charge to enter Y. M. C. A. work. Methodism is giving of her best to the boys on the other side.

The Fuel Administration reports that about fifty thousand gallons of gasoline were saved in New Orleans last Sunday by the operation of the gasoline conservation rule. An automobile on the streets was a rare thing that day.

A daintily engraved card, bearing the inscription, "Edward Cage Brewer, Jr., August 23rd, 1918," has been received at the Advocate office. We congratulate the happy parents, and pray Heaven's richest blessings upon the young son.

Rev. C. A. Northington, of New Albany, Miss., in a recent business communication to the Advocate office, says that he is getting along nicely with his work, and that he enjoys reading the Advocate. Both statements please us very much.

Rev. J. L. Carter, of McHenry, Miss., will give up his work on October 16, to enter the Candler School of Theology, Emory University. An efficient minister is preparing himself for still more efficient service in the days that are to come.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of the New Augusta charge, Mississippi Conference, has just closed a great revival at Cross Roads, one of his churches, during which he baptized 16 infants, and received 13 members into the Church. This is inspiring news.

The monthly meeting of the New Orleans Union Epworth League was held at the Carrollton Avenue Church last Tuesday evening. A feature of the program was an illustrated lecture on Belgium by Rev. Jno. F. Foster, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., our faithful pastor at Homer, La., in writing for a list of subscribers to the Advocate in his charge, took occasion to say that his work was making good progress. He serves a fine people, who are loyal to their Church and pastor.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, the wide-awake presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, continues to show his interest in the welfare of the Advocate and of the people in his territory. He has recently sent us three additional subscriptions, for which he has our hearty thanks.

Rev. J. R. Jones, the presiding elder, requests us to announce that the fourth quarterly conference for Logtown will be held Sunday, October 15, in the morning, and for Bay St. Louis, on the evening of the same day. The full list of his appointments will appear in an early issue of the Advocate.

The Church Extension Handbook for 1918 shows very fully the work of the Board for the fiscal year ending March 31. The Secretary, Dr. H. A. Boaz, has a limited supply of the Handbooks, and he will be glad to send a copy of it to any who will apply for it. The office of the Board is at Louisville, Ky.

Rev. R. A. Davis, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, who has his home in Houston, Texas, is expected to be in New Orleans about the middle of September on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Augusta D. Crichlow, whose husband, Dr. Crichlow, is a professor of anatomy in Tulane University.

We learn from a correspondent that Rev. M. L. Burton, of Kingston, and Rev. L. M. Sharp, of West End, both of these churches in important sections of Laurel, Miss., are doing highly effective work. Brother Burton especially is mentioned as having been very active in all good movements arising from the war situation.

We hope our people will read carefully the Sunday school news as it appears on pages twelve and fourteen. The teacher-training movement is of the utmost importance, and the field secretaries of our three Conferences are thoroughly alive in connection therewith. All our people should keep themselves informed as to this great work.

Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux, the popular pastor of our Epworth Church in this city, spent a few minutes with us one day last week. He stated that the children of his church were interested in the Belgian orphans, and were enthusiastically raising money for their support. He reported also that his Woman's Missionary Society is doing fine work.

Rev. James Madison Smith, the district evangelist of the Port Gibson District, Mississippi Conference, and Mrs. Carrie L. Hill, of Rolling Fork, Miss., were married at the Gibson Memorial parsonage, Vicksburg, Miss., on Monday evening, September 2. Rev. O. S. Lewis, the pastor, performed the ceremony. We pray God's blessings upon the happy couple.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, our pastor at First Church, Corinth, Miss., has sent us all but two of the number of subscribers allotted to his charge by the campaign committee in the beginning of the year, and he writes us that he hopes to complete the number soon. We trust others will do likewise. We appreciate Brother Cunningham's words of commendation of the Advocate.

Rev. W. D. Bennett, pastor of the Sardis circuit, North Mississippi Conference, writes us that he has just finished his round of protracted meetings. There were some good revivals and his work was strengthened. There are three live Woman's Missionary Societies, four Sunday schools and two prayer meetings on his charge. He enclosed with his letter a subscription, for which we thank him.

For the information of several friends who have made inquiries, we desire to state that there are no club rates for subscriptions to the Advocate. The price is $1.50 a year to all except the widows of preachers, who are entitled to the paper for $1.00 a year. We should like to be able to make a club rate, but the heavy cost of getting out the Advocate makes it impracticable to do so at the present time.

Dr. J. S. Chadwick, formerly assistant editor of the Christian Advocate (Nashville), who resigned that position to enter Army Y. M. C. A. work, has been called to Atlanta to handle the publicity work of the Religious Work Department of the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. Mississippi is included in the territory of his department, and we hope to be able to give, from time to time, some interesting matter furnished by Dr. Chadwick.

Rev. H. T. Young, the Louisiana Conference evangelist, has just closed a great meeting at Columbia, La., where he assisted the pastor, Rev. T. J. Warlick. He assisted Brother Warlick also in a meeting at Grayson, La., with good results. As usual, the claims of the Advocate were presented, and sixteen people gave their names as subscribers. Brother Young is assisting Rev. W. R. Harvell in a meeting at Mer Rouge this week.

Rev. Thos H. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, announces that Rev. R. T. Nolen has been appointed pastor of the Vardaman circuit for the remainder of the Conference year, to succeed the late Rev. C. R. A. Brantley. Brother Nolen has recently returned to his native State from Minneapolis. He is well known and highly esteemed throughout Mississippi.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, the gifted pastor of our Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., has our thanks for four subscriptions to the Advocate which he recently sent us. We thank him, also, for sending us Nos. 1 and 2 of Vol. 1, of "The Monthly Messenger," which he is issuing for the benefit of his work. We enjoyed reading it, and we appreciate especially his calling attention to the Advocate in one of his paragraphs and urging his people to subscribe to it.

Rev. C. F. Sheppard, of Dubach, La., serves an appreciative and generous people. At the close of the revival services at Dubach, in which the preaching was done by the pastor, the people presented him with a liberal purse, in addition to other expressions of good will. Brother Sheppard reports that the outlook for a good report at Conference is bright. He has sent us fourteen subscriptions from his charge recently. That is a fine indication of progress.

We regret that President Bobbitt, of Mansfield Female College, was unable to prepare an article for this week's Advocate. Preparations for the opening of his school and the ill-health of his daughter have kept his mind and heart full, and we do not wonder that he has been unable to find time to write. We hope, however, to have a contribution from him later. Louisiana Methodism will always be indebted to Brother Bobbitt for the great work he has done at Mansfield.

Dr. J. M. Henry, the presiding elder, requests us to make the following changes in the announcement of the fourth round of quarterly conferences for the Ruston District, Louisiana Conference: Plain Dealing, at Plain Dealing, Sept. 28-29, instead of Oct. 3; Cotton Valley, at Cotton Valley, Oct. 5-6, instead of Sept. 28-29; Jonesboro, at Jonesboro, Nov. 3, instead of Oct. 6. The request reached us too late to make the change in the round as already published; the corrections will appear next week.

Rev. J. R. Jones, the brotherly presiding elder of the Seashore District, Mississippi Conference, honored the Advocate office with a call on Friday of last week. He had come to the city to accompany Rev. and Mrs. P. H. Grice, of North Gulfport, who brought their desperately ill little daughter to the Touro Infirmary for treatment. As this is written on Monday afternoon, reports from the Infirmary are to the effect that the little one's condition is improving. The many friends of Brother and Sister Grice will remember them in their prayers in this time of stress.

We have received an announcement of the marriage on last Sunday night, at Hattiesburg, Miss., at the residence of Mr. C. Y. Woodward, of Mr. Paul J. Woodward and Miss Lillian White. Rev. Paul D. Hardin performed the ceremony. The groom is a splendid Christian young man of Carriere, Miss., now in training at Camp Shelby. The bride is the accomplished and attractive daughter of Rev. M. L. White, of the Mississippi Conference, and has charge of the music department of the Tate County Agricultural High School, at Senatobia, Miss. We extend hearty congratulations to the happy couple.

A personal note from Rev. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College, informs us that material is being placed on the ground for a building to cost $150,000, which will be the best of its kind in Mississippi. If it were ready, it could easily be filled with students this session. Two large residences by the campus have been rented, and still prospective students are being turned away daily for lack of room. We had hoped to have an article of educational interest by President Countiss in this week's Advocate, but the urgency of his present duties made it impossible for him to prepare it in time. We hope to have it soon, however. Grenada College began its session on Wednesday, Sept. 11.

Here is a record-breaker since the present Editor has been in office: On September 3, Dr. H. F. Tolle, pastor of First Church, Laurel, Miss., sent us a list of 40 subscriptions from his charge, with check to match. He has our hearty thanks. This is merely one item in a record of fine work. In spite of the fact that Dr. Tolle had to undergo two operations in the spring, had the smallpox, three of his children had the smallpox, and one of his sons had to be operated on for appendicitis, the church debt has been paid, the church has been repaired and redecorated at a cost of $5500, and 75 have been received into the Church. The building will be dedicated as soon as Bishop Kilgo can fix a date when he can be present. We would call this a fine record.

In view of the recent announcement that Rev. Theodore Copeland, D.D., of Pine Bluff, Ark., is to assist Rev. Paul D. Hardin in a meeting at Hattiesburg, Miss., this fall, the following, taken from the Arkansas Thomas Cat (Hot Springs), will be of interest: "One thing the writer likes about Copeland is that he is never quarrelsome. Always optimistic. Give us an optimistic man—one who can scatter sunshine and sunlight and make you forget your little troubles, and mebbe give you courage to chase the wolf from gnawing the knob off your door. As a preacher, he is remarkable for his mastery of simplicity in presentation. His sermons are full of light, good cheer, good-fellowship and the betterment of humankind. He is an all-American, and has two sons fighting for the democracy of the world."

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: The people of McComb will extend to you a hearty welcome at the approaching session of the Conference. We confidently expect a great spiritual Conference. It is our purpose to provide amply for your comfort and make such arrangements as will make the best work of the Conference possible. We shall issue to you a bulletin in due time, announcing in detail definite arrangements concerning your entertainment, board anniversaries, and the preaching services. However, we feel even at this early date certain matters should be understood, so that final arrangements can be made to the best advantage.

1. Remember it will be the pleasure of the committees and the two pastors to look after your wishes in the smallest details, if possible. Command us. If you have a request for roommate or anything, write us, enclosing a three cent stamp, and we will reply stating whether we are able to comply with the request or not. All such requests, if complied with, must be in hand on or before October 21, as it will require time for our printer and the mails. Please do not ask us to alter plans after that date.

2. We have no apprehensions but that we can amply and comfortably provide for the Conference. But, as you know, prices are soaring and even the supply is limited in provosions and fuel. Also we shall have increased attendance by reason of the lay leaders being present for the Centenary celebration. Therefore we feel you should know now that we cannot be responsible for the entertainment of any persons except the members, applicants, and lay delegates of the Conference, and those connectional brethren whose duty it is to attend. Of course we except those who may receive personal invitations from the homes.

3. There will be one great Centenary Day of Missions, and the plan is to have the lay leaders present for that day. We urge these brethren to come for that day. There are 563 churches in the Conference, and of course we could not invite these lay leaders to visit us during the entire session, but we guarantee them a glad welcome and genuine hospitality for the Centenary Day. The specific day will be announced later. We only request that we be notified by those who intend to come. Be it known to one and all, our entertainment files close on the 21st day of October, 1918.

We have made these statements not to be rigid, but to be fair with both host and guest. We cannot give you the best by waiting until the last minute to provide for you. Eleventh hour telegrams and letters can receive but secondary consideration, if that much.

Looking forward with pleasant anticipations to the coming of one and all, and praying that we shall all be blessed with the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, we are,

Your brethren,

J. LOYD DECELL,
A. B. BARRY,
Pastors.
W. P. BOND,
Chairman B. S.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

HOW THE BODY IS NOURISHED.

The bodily process known as assimilation is well explained in these words: "As the blood, in its circulation, approaches any organ, the portions that are appropriate for this organ feel its attractive force, obey it, and leaving the others, mingle with the substance of its tissue and are changed into its own true and proper nature."

How important it is that the blood should be pure and rich, not loaded with worn-out and useless matters! Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies and enriches the blood, and does all it is possible for medicine to do in the way of perfecting assimilation and building up the whole system. When you have made up your mind to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, insist on having it—don't accept a substitute, for no substitute acts like it.

DYING AT HIS POST OF DUTY.

By Nolan R. Best.

Rev. Walter Rue Murray, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, of Holmesburg, in the extreme northeastern border of Philadelphia, whose death has been reported from France by cable, was a victim of the terrific artillery fire—said to be the worst barrage of the war—which the Germans laid down when they attempted on July 5 to advance from the line of the Marne. Mr. Murray was serving as a Y. M. C. A. worker with a regiment which included several boys out of his own church, and a still larger number from the membership of his Bible class, which was quite a famous institution in his corner of Philadelphia, drawing attendance not alone from Holmesburg, but from neighboring suburbs as well. He was therefore still quite decidedly "at home" though at work in the heart of France.

Like all other Y men stationed along the American fighting front in France, Mr. Murray chose, when the battle test came, to "stay with the boys." With them in their dugouts he kept watch all through the terrible Sunday night when the Huns were shelling American trenches preparatory to their grand assault. When daylight broke he left shelter and hurried to the dressing station where the wounded were being carried in by the stretcher bearers in numbers decidedly staggering to men who had never been under fire before. But Mr. Murray was not staggered; cheerfully and steadily he lent a hand as men were carried to the operating table and carried away again. If he had been content with this service alone, however, he would probably have escaped with his life, notwithstanding the constant shell-fire falling on the old farmhouse where the surgeons were at work. But Mr. Murray remembered meanwhile that there had been no chance at all of serving any sort of breakfast to the unwounded men still fighting on the front line, and he began to figure how he could get up to these soldiers the stock of cookies and chocolate he had in his canteen. He soon decided to set up an open canteen under an apple tree across the road, where he could pass out to couriers and ammunition drivers as they went up toward the front, packers of these eats for their comrades in the trenches.

After that he divided his time for several hours between the wounded lying in the hovel and the unwounded who stopped by at the apple tree. It was near noon when finally he stepped out of the dressing station door to cross over once more to his stock of "goodies." The shelling seemed to have abated, and he probably regarded himself as being practically safe again after the perils of the night and morning. But as he walked into the road a German shell exploded almost at his feet. The friends who rushed to him as he fell found him wounded only in the arm, and assumed that his injuries were minor. But ten minutes later, as he lay among the boys in the old farm building where he had been serving cheerfully all morning, the pastor's gallant heart suddenly stopped. Shock had killed him.

For tribute to his memory nothing perhaps could be more eloquent than the unconventional eulogy paid Mr. Murray by three soldiers from his unit who hailed an eminent Association leader driving by their camp and asked if he knew their "Y" man who was killed in the last battle. The official replied that he was sorry to say he had not known Mr. Murray. The spokesman of the boys answered with slow emphasis and manifest feeling.

"Well, sir, you surely missed the finest man you ever knew. There was't any religion about him at all; whether you were Protestant or Catholic or a Jew, you were all just the same to him. He took up with everybody just alike. There was something about him that just pulled everybody—made you want to be decent, you know. No, sir, you'll never get another like him for this bunch."

Mr. Murray was buried on the field in the first grave in the officers' row of the improvised cemetery which marks where this division stopped the ambitious drive of the Germans and disappointed their hopes of outflanking Paris. Full military honors were paid to his memory at the interment. Sympathy was expressed throughout the division for the widow and the three orphaned children at home, but their heritage in the husband and father's memory was regarded as unusually enviable.

Permanent Muscular Strength cannot exist where there is not blood strength. Young men giving attention to muscular development should bear this in mind. Hood's Sarsaparilla gives blood strength and builds up the whole system.—Adv.

Why I Believe in Nuxated Iron

A Strength-Builder For The Nation

BY E. SAUER, M. D.

Probably no remedy has ever met with such phenomenal sucecess as has Nuxated Iron. It is conservatively estimated that over three million people annually are taking it in this country alone. It has been highly endorsed and used by Former United States Senators and Members of Congress; Physicians who have been connected with well-known hospitals have prescribed and recommended it; Monseigneur Nannini, a prominent Catholic Clergyman, recommends it to all members of the Catholic Church. Former Health Commissioner Wm. R. Kerr, of Chicago, says it ought to be used in every hospital and prescribed by every physician. Sarah Bernhardt —"the Divine Sarah," the world's most noted actress, has ordered a large quantity sent to the French soldiers to help give them strength, power and endurance.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago, and former House Surgeon Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, says Nuxated Iron has proven through his own tests of it to excel any preparation he has ever used for creating red blood, building up the nerves, strengthening the muscles and correcting digestive disorders.

Dr. H. B. Vail, Medical Examiner and late of the Baltimore and Columbus Hospitals, says: "A physician is often more likely to let himself get run-down from overwork than people of any other class and the fact that I took Nuxated Iron to build myself up after a serious case of nervous exhaustion is the best proof of my confidence in its strength-giving power. The effects were apparent after a few days and within three weeks it had virtually revitalized my whole system and put me in a superb physical condition."

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Note:—Nuxated Iron, which has been used by former Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and other prominent people with such surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians in such a great variety of cases, is not a patent medicine nor secret remedy, but one which is well-known to druggists and whose iron constituents are widely prescribed by eminent physicians everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach; on the contrary it is a most potent remedy in nearly all forms of indigestion as well as for nervous, run-down conditions. The manufacturers have such great confidence in Nuxated Iron, that they offer to forfeit $100 to any charitable institution if they cannot take any man or woman under 60 who lacks iron and increase their strength 100 per cent. or over in four weeks' time, provided they have no serious organic trouble. They also offer to refund your money if it does not at least double your strength and endurance in ten days' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Vigor

SUCCESS IS ACHIEVED by vigorous men and women. When one is lacking in strength and endurance, when good health is wanting, when physical power is at low ebb, it is impossible to accomplish one's work.

One of the causes of ill health and low vitality is the improper functioning of the kidneys. Trouble results when they fail to eliminate waste and poisonous matter from the system, and rheumatic pains, backache, stiff joints, sore muscles, and other symptoms quickly follow.

Foley Kidney Pills

banish effects of kidney and bladder trouble by removing the cause. They are healing and curative. They tone up and strengthen the weakened or diseased organs.

H. D. Castleberry, Marine Engineer, Port Vincent, La., writes: "I consider Foley Kidney Pills the greatest medicine for kidney and bladder trouble I ever used. I recommend them to all who suffer with kidney and bladder trouble." 50c and $1.00 sizes.

A word to the pastors: Look well to the personnel of the official board for the ensuing year. Select stewards with care—do this before Conference. Study well your Sunday school interests. And of vital importance is your charge lay leader. Be sure to get a complete report from Trustees. We are entering a new quadrennium; and great plans are to be set in motion.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

The announcement has come to us of the appointment of Mrs. M. L. Hargrove as Associate Secretary of the Centenary. She was called from her position as teacher in Scarritt to develop the Centenary spirit and plan among the women of Methodism. Her numerous friends in North Mississippi will rejoice that they are thus to be associated with her. She left Mississippi twenty-one years ago, resigning at that time the presidency of the Foreign Missionary Society. She feels that she can rightfully claim the support of North Mississippi in this Centenary movement.

Centenary Plans.

The first part of the Centenary program has been to enlist intercessors. Our Superintendent of Study and Publicity has been endeavoring since the annual meeting to get these prayer circles in every auxiliary. This plan was embodied in the committee reports for the year's work, and stressed and explained from the floor. Yet in the last issue of the Conference Bulletin only seven auxiliaries made any report of what has been accomplished. That is a very bad showing for four months' work when a few hours would suffice to complete it. Now that Mrs. Hargrove is Secretary, she requests that the intercession blanks be sent to her after they have been signed. In some places I have been told that no blanks had been distributed. A supply has been sent to Miss Margaret Leach, Holly Springs. If you have none, send her a request for the number you need. Let every auxiliary set apart a definite time for enrolling those not previously enrolled. Place the responsibility for the work upon the Superintendent of Study and Publicity. After her committee has given each one the opportunity to sign, send the signed promises to Mrs. Hargrove. Report to Miss Leach the number you have enrolled so that the Conference may also know definitely how many of the women are praying for the Centenary. Will you do this immediately?

The financial goal of the Centenary is $35,000,000. The great drive for this amount will not take place until next spring, but you are urged to place in the hands of every woman in the Church "sacrifice-boxes" in which she shall deposit the money she can spare to be turned over to the Centenary authorities at the time it is called for. Each auxiliary has received the "Centenary Dime" chart and has probably used it. One auxiliary reports that mite boxes have already been given to their members. Begin this plan at once.

Co-operative Home.

In a recent letter from our deaconess, Miss Richardson, she told of Miss Peeples' return to the Home. As you know, Miss Richardson has been in charge since Miss Peeples' absence, and is familiar with the most pressing needs, which she gives as follows: Bed sheets 81 inches wide, and dining tablecloths. All that they have on hand of these articles are badly worn and wholly insufficient. Who will heed this call from our Conference? Gladden Miss Peeples' heart with an immediate response.

MRS. J. W. CONGER,
Conference President.

TO THE AUXILIARY PRESIDENTS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Sisters: For several years our Conference has had a Wesley House Special Fund for our Wesley Houses at Meridian and Biloxi, and each auxiliary has been asked to make some special offering for this splendid work. At our last Conference session the appropriation was increased from three hundred to four hundred dollars, to be divided equally between the two institutions. In these days of great sacrifices this increase should not prove any hardship to our women. Giving seems to have become a joyous privilege to many, and will it be less so when the giving is for the advancement of King Immanuel's hosts?

Now, Sisters, we are nearing the close of the third quarter and while our dues and Conference pledge to Council have come in most encouragingly, our Wesley House pledge has not reached $25 at this time. I am sure this is not intentional, for we all realize the importance of this work and our hearts are in it, for has He not said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me?"

Before the third quarter comes to a close will you not bring this matter before your auxiliary and send our Conference Treasurer a liberal offering for these two Wesley Houses?

I cannot close without thanking each one of our dear women for their prompt payment of dues and pledge during the first six months of the year, for amid all the heartaches and many calls from other sources our Conference work has gone forward as never before, and our women have been true to their obligations and to the advancement of our Father's Kingdom. May we be even more diligent during the latter half of 1918.

Sincerely,
Mrs. R. E. JOHNSON,
Conference President.

ST. MARK'S HALL ITEMS.

The success of the Vacation School, which closed on Friday, August 16, was largely due to volunteer teachers: Mrs. Huger, Misses Velma Moody, Leah Cross, De Martini, Laura Smith, Frankie Wood, and to our faithful kindergartners, Misses Bessie Born and Etta Pettigrove. The exhibit of work at the close of the school showed more than one hundred articles, including holders, towels, caps, aprons, handkerchiefs, dresses, raffia mats and baskets, and caned chairs.

Through the kindness of friends the children enjoyed a delightful auto ride to the parks and out to West End. Fourteen cars were loaded and this ride was one of the happiest occasions of the summer school.

The work in the clinic continues to go on nicely. The new physician, Dr. W. E. Graves, is giving splendid service in the general clinic on Tuesday and Friday. Fifteen clinics have been held and sixty-five new cases treated. Total number of treatments and consultations, 179.

A number of donations were received during the month: clothing, books, groceries, cash, furniture, dresser scarfs, and a box of clothing from Romney, West Virginia.

Pyorrhea or Riggs' Disease

And have cured some of the most desperate cases with our prescription, known as McHale's Home Cure for Pyorrhea or Riggs' Disease.

This remedy is called the Home Remedy for Pyorrhea or Riggs' Disease because the patients can treat themselves at home without the assistance of a doctor or a dentist, it being a known fact that Pyorrhea is a germ disease and has never been cured by the use of the instrument.

Testimonial of a Memphis, Tenn., Patient.

Memphis, Tenn.

For several years I was a sufferer from Pyorrhea or Rigg's Disease, and expended large sums in trying to cure same. Finally, McHale's Remedy was brought to my attention, and I tried it, and wish to certify that it will do all McHale claims for it. That is to say, it has great merit and completely cured me many months ago, and the cure has been permanent.

I cheerfully recommend McHale's remedy to everyone suffering from Pyorrhea. Respectfully,

MATT MONAGHAN.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCHES OF AMERICA FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

"The needs for production for the creation of war necessities are forcing an industrial expansion upon the country which must be acomplished in as many weeks sometimes as years would be required under ordinary circumstances.

"Under such circumstances there is a very great responsibility, both upon the Government and upon the people of the communities in which these war industries are developed, that there shall be no lowering of the standards which have been acquired so laboriously through years past, but that rather those ideals toward which we have been working shall be conformed to as promptly as possible. Our thinking for the safeguarding of industrial workers against unnecessary hazards ought to act under as great stimulation as does our thinking in regard to creating new and great industrial processes.

"There is no point at which such thought ought to be applied more carefully than in regard to the responsibilities which attach to the greatly increased number of industrial processes by women, who are thus rendering their war service.

"The Government is doing what it can in regard to all these matters, but no amount of supervisory work can take the place of a genuine community interest in such problems. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will be making a very real contribution if it can give its emphasis to the responsibilities which rest upon individuals and communities in regard to vital matters of this sort."

We may go in peace, if our eyes have seen Him who satisfies our visions, whose bright presence will go with us into the darkness, and whom we shall see more perfectly when we have passed to the home above.—Alexander Maclaren.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The teachers of a nation are the makers of that nation; the man that makes the teachers is the most influential of all leaders.

The Church that makes her teachers is the one that must exercise a commanding influence upon the lives of the people in the future.

It is hard to put a matter on the conscience of another until it is on your own conscience. Enough of the right kind of knowledge will put it on your conscience. What power can make a man want to know?

There are 3500 officers and teachers ministering to 39,000 people, in our Conference, from Sabbath to Sabbath. Who can estimate the vast change that would take place in the lives of the people that are taught if all the teachers knew the secret of teaching?

It has been said again and again that a call to preach implies a call to prepare to preach. It is equally true that when the Church calls men and women to teach it implies a call to prepare to teach.

The gospel preached from the pulpit, taught in the classroom by the teacher, lived by the mother and father at the fireside, is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Preachers, teachers, parents are called to the holy task of making Christ known to the little ones who know him not. This can be done when they know how.

Winning the war is the thought uppermost in the minds of all our people. President Wilson has pledged the resources of our country to this end. The Sunday school is one of the great resources: for as the school becomes more effective the morale of the people rises, they are nerved and steadied for the greater sacrifices that are yet to be made. The trained teacher is the center of this spiritual power.

Letters have been written and literature explaining the nature and scope of the nation-wide teacher-training drive has been mailed to a number of the preachers and superintendents of the Conference with a prayor back of every line, a prayer that an honest effort may be made to enlist 3500 fine people in a more intelligent effort to do a great work better than it has ever been done.

"Our churches have never yet in any large way tried to stir the nation as to the importance of trained teachers of religion. If we go at it each one alone, our voices will be drowned in the multitude of stirring cries for help. United, we can arouse Christian people to see and feel that effective teaching of the Christian religion must underlie all true progress. By training the workers in this field, we can contribute immeasurably toward achieving the ideals which America holds so dear."

All thoughts of ill—all evil needs,
That have their roots in thoughts of ill—
Whatever hinders or impedes
The action of the nobler will—
All these must first be trampled down
Beneath our feet, if we would gain
In the bright fields of fair renown
The right of eminent domain!
—Longfellow.

REPORT FROM PONTOTOC CHARGE.

We had a good meeting. The preaching was done by the Rev. A. C. Holder, the evangelist who lives at Shreveport, La. He was with us ten days and did fine preaching and good work. We had 10 decisions and some conversions, even in the church. Many pledged themselves to tithing. The church was much revived.

Just after the close of the meeting, our people gave the parsonage home a splendid pounding. This came in an opportune time these strenuous war times, and is greatly appreciated by the pastor and family, who pray the good blessing of our Father above to prosper all these good friends in all good things. TO STOP FALLING HAIR.

The cause of baldness, hair falling out, loss of lustre and color is found in the roots of the hair itself. Our hair is but a portion of our body and like the other organs, cannot subsist without food. The hair finds its food in the fat layer of skin next to the skull. When this source of food is stopped or impeded, out comes the hair. The dreaded disease, Dandruff, is a germ. It collects on the bottom of the hair and eats away its life. The hair sack from which the hair comes is embedded in the layer of under skin. When the scalp is diseased and the hair falls out often this small hair sack closes. Eventually, as a result of the dandruff germs, baldness comes. The proper method of restoring the hair and stopping the falling out must necessarily be in the destruction of the dandruff germs and in the reopening of the little hair sacks. Furthermore, in order to rejuvenate the scalp and make the growth of new hair more vigorous it is necessary that the system be able to furnish an abundance of hair food. Many artificial methods have been tried in restoring the hair which were only surface remedies and, failing to reach the small hair sacks, were unsuccessful. Reopening the hair sack allows the new hair to grow. CALVACURA begins at the root of the trouble and its use is therefore advised. Its mission is to feed the new hair as well as the old and rid the scalp of all dandruff germs. By thus cleansing and rejuvenating the entire scalp, a healthy growth of hair is assured. Falling of hair is stopped, new life and color to dead, gray hair is developed, and the hair becomes smooth and velvety. It is not an unpleasant treatment, and takes only a few minutes of time each day for about six weeks. The Union Laboratory, 214-109th St., Binghamton, N. Y., will send you a liberal sample of Calvacura No. 1 FREE, together with a booklet, "The Triumph of Science Over Baldness," if you will send your name and address together with 10c in silver or postage stamps to help pay the distribution expenses.—Adv.

RIPLEY CIRCUIT.

Dear Mr. Editor: Please give space in your paper for a few words from the Ripley charge.

We have heen serving a noble people on this charge. Our reports on the charge have been good throughout the entire year. Our report for the summer quarter, which is sometimes called a bad quarter, was up to the high water mark.

We began our revival campaign on the fourth Sunday in July, the pastor doing the preaching; with the disadvantage of no singing leader or choir, the results were a real good choir of bright boys and girls, and one profession of religion, with no additions to the Church.

We went from there to the second place on August 4, first Sunday, the pastor doing the preaching until Monday night. Then Brother Mason Brownlee came to enjoy the privilege of preaching to the people of his first charge, after which, Rev. Ed. Blizzard did the preaching, which was very ably done indeed. Brethren, Brother Blizzard will do you good work.

On August 11, the second Sunday, we went to Brownfield. We were very happily surprised to find Rev. R. H. B. Gladney with us. We harnessed him up in his Sunday school work; and believe me, brethren, Gladney is a worker. He stayed with me from the 11th to 14th. He then went to another charge, returning late on the 16th and remained with us through the 18th. He did us a very valuable service, indeed. The results of this week's labor are 8 family altars, 8 Home Departments being read, making a total of 19 family altars on the charge.

We have a Wesley Adult Bible Class organized at this place, and other departments of the Sunday school will soon develop into an A-grade school.

We next went to Falkner and labored for a week without any visible results. Thus endeth our summer's work. We feel that the Lord will be glorified in the future by the germination of the good seed sown.

THE NEW FLOUR RULES.

For the information and guidance of our readers, we give the following summary of the new regulations concerning the use of flour. The Food Administration will insist upon their strict observance.

1. All flour rules and regulations now in effect are canceled. This order applies to all regulations and rules issued from this office as well as to all special rules and regulations issued in the several counties, cities and towns.

2. The bread of the Allies, including our own people, will contain 20 per cent of other grains than wheat.

3. The 80-20 formula which takes the place of the 50-50 formula is not intended to displace the use of corn bread. The 80-20 formula is used in addition to our normal consumption of corn bread.

4. Retail dealers selling standard wheat flour must carry in stock either barley flour, corn meal or corn flour, and with every sale of wheat flour shall sell a combination of one or more of these in the proportion of one pound of substitutes to each four pounds of wheat flour.

5. No dealer may force any other substitute in combination upon the consumer, and the substitutes must conform to the standards fixed by the United States Food Administration.

6. The following flours may be sold in combination with standard wheat flour in lieu of all barley flour, corn meal, or corn flour, if the consumer so demands, at the ratio of one pound to each four pounds of wheat flour, namely: rice flour, oat flour, buckwheat flour, potato flour, bean flour, sweet potato flour, kaffir flour, milo flour, feterita flour and meals of the last three named flours.

7. Pure rye flour or meal will be sold as a substitute in the proportion of at least two pounds of rye with three pounds of wheat flour.

8. The foregoing rules apply to all custom and exchange transactions and to the farmer as well as to city and towns-people.

9. The previous rule limiting licensed millers, wholesalers and bakers to a 30-day supply of flour, is changed to permit the stocking of a 60-day supply.

10. The rules limiting the sales by retailers of wheat flour to 1-8 of a bbl. in cities and 1-4 of a bbl. in sparsely settled districts, are rescinded. There are no limitations as to the amount of flour which may he sold to a consumer at a single purchase.

11. Mixed flours prepared for sale of millers, wholesalers and retailers according to the Victory mixed flour formula may he sold without substitutes, but in no case shall the price be greater than in the case of standard wheat flour.

Easiness of desire is a great enemy to the success of a good man's prayer. Our prayers upbraid our spirits when we beg tamely for those things for which we ought to die.—Jeremy Taylor.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Adv.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Last Sunday I had the delightful pleasure of being in McComb City with Brothers Decell and Barry. These brethren are doing good work and are already preparing for our comfort at the coming Conference session. It was a delight to be back among old friends and I feel that it was a profitable as well as pleasant visit.

The Jackson Institute held at Florence I feel was up to high water mark. The brethren were most kind in their expressions of the work done and their responses to the efforts put forth were hearty and happy.

Mrs. Brame gave a fine hour of work. Brother Howie, the President, made a most timely address; Brother Lindsey gave a good account of his work as W. B. C. Superintendent, one of the best reports that I have heard. Mrs. Woods was interesting in her presentation of the Mission work. Brother Morse gave a great presentation of the Centenary. Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, the Field Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, is great. He was worth more to me than I can count.

The Hattiesburg District Institute at Collins was a most happy occasion to me. The folks were most kind, indeed, and we had a great manifestation of interest. Many Teacher-training cards were signed and other work was done. Mrs. Hathaway gave a very fine presentation of the Cradle Roll. Brother Jones gave a most helpful and inspiring message on the "Centenary." Most of the Institute was an open discussion, which accomplished a great deal for the real betterment of the schools represented.

Brother Gladney was with me here also. I wish I could put on paper the impressions he made upon my mind and heart. I feel that God has led him in his work and I pray God to continue to lead and bless him.

I wonder if there is a Sunday school or an individual that would like to buy a bicycle for a preacher in Japan. It will increase his ability to go about like Jesus, doing good an hundred fold. Price of machine, $25. Who will do this for the Lord?

Pray for me and the work.

Through error the Haynesville charge was credited with $12 which should have gone to credit of Homer Sunday school. There is a discrepancy of 34 cents which will go in previous report, October 1.

If you have not observed Children's Day, please order your programs. It is late, but will not be too late as long as there is a Sunday between you and our Annual Conference. We must have $120 in order to go over the top with the $1000 C. D. offering this year, and I know where $40 of that amount is.

Brethren, the two Mississippi Conferences have already had communications in the Advocate pertaining to the teacher-training drive and there has been something in the paper from the Nashville office. I do not feel that it is necessary for me to say anything more than that our Conference is a part of the whole, that there is no Conference in Southern Methodism that needs teacher-training classes any more than we do. Let's put it over.

Write to Rev. Jno. W. Shackford, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., or write to this office and we will furnish you all the information that you want. Let's put a T. T. Class in every school, meeting at the Sunday school hour where it is at all practical. The first book is "Life in the Making," or you can use "The Pupil, the Teacher, and the School."

Have just finished a tour of the Monroe District, and it will suffice to say that the elder, Brother Lutz, and his preachers have things humming up there. We are planning a District Institute for next year to be held at Rayville, La.

GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD ANNOUNCEMENT.

Rev. Emmett Hightower of the Central Texas Conference, who was elected Superintendent of the Department of Young People's and Adult Work by the General Sunday School Board in July, has been temporariiy detached for service in the editorial department of our Sunday school publications. The ever increasing demands upon Dr. E. B. Chappeli made it necessary to relieve him of a part of his onerous work. As pastor and Sunday School Secretary, Brother Hightower has made a careful study of Sunday school work. He is a clear and forceful writer in the realm of religious education, and the Church will find that this rare Christian gentleman carries with him a well-sharpened pencil.

CHARLES D. BULLA,
Corresponding Secretary.

THE INNER SELF.

It is difficult to get a glimpse of a man's soul. So many individuals never purposely reveal their inner selves. They are delicate and sensitive to the scrutiny of other people. The sheath of the soul is always in evidence. How then can we watch for it? We never know another until we really glimpse the soul. Experience reveals this; the soul of some men is not revealed until its life and integrity is attacked, whether of itself or of another. Then when the man is aroused, when his sense of justice is violated, when his feeling of personal integrity is questioned, when his personal honor is attacked, watch for the appearance of his soul. Then the man himself is seen in form and reality, standing in defense of what is dear to him as his own heart.—Exchange.

Take your part with the perfect and abstract right, and trust to God to see that it shall prove the expedient.—Wendell Phillips.

Taken in conjunction, they are the ideal remedy for the blood and nerves. If a laxative is needed take Hood's Pills. All druggists.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY COMMISSION'S REPORT.

The Southern University Commission for the scientific study of race questions, created six years ago by the action of eleven Southern State universities, has just published its first report. Meeting twice a year to plan and discuss its investigations, the Commission has spoken little and studied much. Its only public utterances have been three open letters to the college men of the South, all of which have been widely approved by the Southern press. These letters are embodied in the present report.

The first is not only a strong protest against mob violence, but is an urgent appeal to college men to lead a crusade "for law and civilization."

The second urges college men to work for better schools for white and black as a present necessity for the welfare of the entire South; but it pleads especially for "a larger share (of school funds) for the negro on the ground of the common welfare and common justice. He is the weakest link in our civilization, and our welfare is indissolubly bound up with his."

The latest letter, considering the causes of this migration, admits the South's inability "to compete on a financial basis with other sections," but contends that "the South can easily keep her negroes against all allurements if she will give them a larger measure of those things which human beings hold dearer than material goods * * * fair dealing, sympathy patience, tolerance * * * It pays to be just and kind both spiritually and materially. Surely the South has nothing to lose and much to gain by adopting such an attitude."

The present report makes public the scope of the Commission's study, and the minutes of regular meetings, with their record of discussions of race problems with leading men of both races who have been invited to the various sessions. There are also valuable committee reports of investigations made. Gov. Brough of Arkansas, who was the Commission's chairman while a professor at the State University, outlines the plan of work in an able paper presented at one of the earlier meetings. Dr. Scroggs, of Louisiana, has a careful historical study of the negro's civic status, with present-day applications. Dr. DeLoach, who was, while a member of the faculty of the University of Georgia, chairman of the Commission's Committee on Economics, has a convincing report of the economic results of the university's fine agricultural extension work among negro farmers; a report of interest to all who have the welfare of the South at heart.

Dr. Doster, of the University of Alabama, is the present chairman of the Commission. The other universities represented are those of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Mississippi. Dr. Dillard, of the Jeanes and Slater Boards, Dr. Alderman and Dr. Barrow, presidents of the Universities of Virginia and Georgia, and Dr. Mitchell, former president of the University of South Carolina, act as an advisory board to the Commission. Copies of the report may be had on application to Dr. W. H. Hunley, Lexington, Va.—Southern Publicity Committee.

Calomel Dynamites A Sluggish Liver

Crashes into sour bile, making you sick and you lose a day's work.

Calomel salivates! It's mercury. Calomel acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver. When calomel comes into contact with sour bile it crashes into it, causing cramping and nausea.

If you feel bilious, headachy, constipated and all knocked out, just go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents which is a harmless vegetable substitute for dangerous calomel. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't start your liver and straighten you up better and quicker than nasty calomel and without making you sick, you just go back and get your money.

If you take calomel to-day you'll be sick and nauseated to-morrow; besides, it may salivate you, while if you take Dodson's Liver Tone you will wake up feeling great, full of ambition and ready for work or play. It's harmless, pleasant and safe to give to children; they like it.

Renew Your Health
At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

La Grange, Ga., Nov. 25, 1914.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT,
President Unity Cotton Mills.

Johnston, S. C.

I wish to add my testimony to the wonderful curative powers of the Shivar Mineral Water. For a number of years my wife has been a sufferer from indigestion and nervous debility, and her condition had reached such a stage as to baffle the skill of our most eminent physicians. Her extreme nervousness and heart troubles at times were alarming and she had become almost a nervous wreck. The latter part of last May she began using the Shivar Water, which she has continued to this date with most satisfactory results.

H. C. BAILEY,
Editor Johnston News-Monitor.

DYSPEPSIA

Blaney, S. C.

I have suffered for many years from gastric troubles stomach puffed and food sour. I have tried many remedies and a good many waters. Some have helped, but none have given me such relief as your Spring Water. I use it and recommend it to my patients.

W. L. GRIGGSBY, M. D.

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this county, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

OSCAR T. SMITH,
Vice-Pres. Young & Selden Co., Bank stationers.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D.

Fredericksburg, Va.

Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement.

WM. C. CARTER.

Roper, N. C., Oct. 30, 1914.

I am anxious to get more of the Water. It has done me more good than anything I have ever tried for rheumatism.

MRS. H. C. EDWARDS.

Florence, S. C., Dec. 1, 1911.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

MRS. THEO. KUKER.

Warrenton, Va., Nov. 24, 1914.

It is doing my rheumatism so much good. My limbs are beginning to feel like new ones.

MRS. JAMES R. CARTER.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 26, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX.

Buena Vista, Va., Oct. 2, 1914.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has been a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble.

REV. E. H. ROWE,
Co-President Southern Seminary.

LIVER AND KIDNEY

Ohoopee, Ga., Aug. 21, 1914.

I feel that it is due you that I should give my testimony, unsolicited, as to the benefits derived from the use of your Shivar Springs Water. I was unable to do my work, and had been under the treatment of physicians for six months for kidney and liver troubles when I decided to try your Spring Water, and now after using it for about thirty days I am able to do my work, feel good, and have gained about twenty pounds. I most heartily recommend its use to all who suffer from disorder of the liver and kidneys.

M. L. STEPHENS.

Carlisle, S. C.

It is fine for liver troubles, also for constipation. I cheerfully give you this information as to beneficial results in my case.

REV. A. McA. PITTMAN.

RENAL AND CYSTIC

Columbia, S. C.

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

J. P. D.

Virgilina, Va., March 28, 1914.

Your Water has done me more good than anything I ever tried for bladder trouble.

A. R. F.

Wesley, Ga., May 12, 1914.

I had been down with bladder trouble. Couldn't stand on my feet three minutes at a time. In three days after I commenced drinking your Mineral Water my pain was all gone, could walk where I pleased, and felt like a new man.

S. B. D.

High Point, N. C., Oct. 6, 1914.

My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

W. J. STRAWN.

Williamston, N. C. Oct. 8, 1914

My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been drinking your water I haven't had to have a doctor

W. H. EDWARDS.

Columbia, S. C.

My wife was a chronic sufferer from gallstones. She was stricken critically ill, and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do so without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers

A BALANCED ACCOUNT.

Our undestanding is, that at the close of every day a bank's accounts must be so balanced that there can be no question as to the disposition of its funds according to legal requirements. The examiner might be on hand at the opening of the doors the next morning to ask embarrassing questions, if all were not in proper shape. Sometimes a teller has to work overtime to get his balance; possible errors have to be detected and all inaccuracies straighened up. But the day's work is not done until these things have been attended to. They cannot be left till the morrow. And yet, some of us are content to lie down to sleep with many unperformed duties hanging over our heads. We solace ourselves with the thought, "I will attend to that to-morrow." But in the meantime we may be called upon to render an account of the deeds done in the body.

READING AND THINKING.

The presiding Bishop at an Annual Conference sometimes asks a preacher what books he has read during the year. The question is eminently proper. It certainly ought not to embarrass one who, by the very nature of the case, is expected to be something of an intellectual as well as spiritual leader of his community. And we are glad to say that such answers as we have heard to the question indicate that our preachers, as a rule, keep in touch with the great movements of the age. But if the question should be, "How many books have you thought during the year," answer might not be so quickly forthcoming. And yet it would seem not to be an unreasonable presumption that the thoughts of a preacher, if set down in printed form, would make at least one substantial volume. It is true that we cannot all print books, but we can read them, and think them as well.

PRAYER-MEETING NIGHT.

It comes in the midst of the week's work, when we are weary and worn with the perplexities and problems of life. We fain would rest our tired bodies and renew our weary minds by sitting down quietly in a comfortable chair and forgetting the worries of the day. But it is prayer-meeting night. The light is shining out through the church windows, and the bells are ringing, and pretty soon the music of organ and of voice will unite in the harmony of some grand old hymn and float out on the evening air. The thought of God steals into our hearts; it is rest and peace that we want. So to the place of worship we wend our way. There we bow our heads in humble contrition and lift our hearts in thanksgiving and praise, and are mightily strengthened; for we have eaten of the meat that some know not of—on prayer-meeting night.

THE RURAL CHURCH.

We are presenting this week a somewhat lengthy article, taken from the Western Christian Advocate, giving the results of a country church survey of an entire State. We feel justified, however, in giving the space to the subject because it constitutes one of the problems of modern ecclesiastical polity, and because this particular survey was exhaustive in its scope and scientific in its method. Due allowance must be made for the fact that conditions in Ohio are somewhat different from those in our own territory, but the fundamental situation is largely the same. We trust our readers will give thoughtful attention to the article in question.

The outstanding facts revealed by the survey are the following: 1. There is an oversupply of churches in the rural sections of Ohio; 2. The average attendance at any given church is probably much less than the membership; 3. There is a lack of an adequate number of resident pastors; 4. The average length of the minister's term of service is short. Unfortunately, the survey does not give statistics concerning the salaries of preachers in rural churches, but we may assume, in view of other facts set forth, that they are altogether inadequate.

The conclusions drawn by the writer of the article, based upon his investigations, are as follows: 1. Greater interdenominational co-operation is needed; 2. Ultimately there must be a smaller number of churches; 3. Churches should be led to co-operate in the much-needed work of social service in their respective communities; 4. The church should be more effective as a force for righteousness; 5. Certain sections of the State must be accepted as missionary territory whose demands are second in importance to no other.

We believe the time has come for our own great Church to undertake seriously a movement that will have as its end the strengthening of its work in the country districts. There can be no question but that we are doing a great work to-day. Methodism has not forsaken her task of preaching the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. No settlement is too remote for the faithful itinerant, supported by his intense religious zeal and the authority of his Church, to find his way thither with the message of salvation. Year by year, he is carrying forward his work in spite of difficulties that try men's souls. But in many cases he is called upon to endure hardships that are out of proportion to the results to be obtained. The difficulties have arisen not as the fault of any particular part of our system, but as the result of conditions that have grown out of the changing circumstances of our times. We believe such a movement should include at least the following steps:

1. A careful survey should be made of the division of our Conference territory with a view to discovering whether or not it has been so divided into presiding elders' districts as to secure the maximum of efficiency with a minimum expenditure of time and money and manpower; and along with it, there should be a detailed study of all our country churches to determine whether or not their grouping into circuits has been done in the most effective manner possible. This, of course, would involve consideration of unoccupied territory and extension of the work.

2. A minimum salary should be fixed, without provision for the payment of which no preacher should be assigned to an appointment. This would be no reflection upon the faithfulness of our ministers, and it would involve nothing more than the observance of sound business principles in the management of a great organization. Where a charge is manifestly unable to meet the minimum financial requirement, a sufficient missionary appropriation should be provided.

3. The standards of our ministry, as to educational requirements and practical administrative qualifications, should be maintained at a point where admission to a Conference would be a guarantee of the ability to render efficient service in a large proportion of our charges.

4. There should be such recognition of the value and importance of the work on rural charges that the artificial distinction between city and country appointments would be broken down and men of signal ability would cheerfully devote their lives to the rural work.

It may be that we are not yet ready to grapple with this problem of the rural church in a way that its importance deserves; but at the earliest practicable moment we believe it should be laid hold of in earnest.

SOLDIERS ALL.

We went to the registration booth Thursday morning and registered, as did millions of other patriotic American citizens. In our own precinct, we met a good many men, some just arrived at the age of eighteen and some not quite forty-six. There was somewhat of pleasant bantering as the older ones of us filled out our cards; but underneath the cheerful good nature, there was plainly perceptible a feeling of seriousness that indicated a full realization of the meaning of it all. It was heartening to hear mature, settled business men, with heavy responsibilities resting upon them, express their utter willingness to do any and everything that the Government might require of them in this time of national need. If the Germans, rulers and people, could see with their own eyes what is going on in the United States to-day, and hear with their own ears the expressions of loyalty and determination, they would realize more than ever the hopelessness of their case.

We are soldiers all, in a common cause. Some of us are not going to be called upon to bear arms; but the obligation to render patriotic service rests no less heavily upon us than upon the millions of our sons and brothers who are with the colors. The man who stays at home, who does not do his duty as steadily and as faithfully as the men in the trenches are doing theirs, is unworthy of the sacrifice they are making, and of the country in which he lives. We may not all wear the uniform; but the American people to-day stand together as one for the winning of the war.

CHRIST THE BUILDER.

If I could hold within my hand
The hammer Jesus swung,
Not all the gold in all the land,
Nor jewels countless as the sand,
All in the balance flung,
Could weigh the value of that thing
Round which His fingers once did cling.

If I could have the table He
Once made in Nazareth,
Not all the pearls in all the seas
Nor crowns of kings or kings to be
As long as men have breath
Could buy that thing of wood He made—
The Lord of lords who learned a trade.

Yea, but His hammer still is shown
By honest hands that toil,
And 'round His table men sit down,
And all are equals, with a crown
Nor gold nor pearls can soil;
The shop at Nazareth was bare—
But brotherhood was builded there.

PORTRAITS OF SOME IMPRISONED PATRIOTS.

By Bruce S. Wright.

For months now I have been looking upon and talking with imprisoned patriots. We all have for that matter. You may not have called them by that name, but you are associating with them every day. Or you yourself may be one of them. Let me try and give you the pictures of a few of them.

The Student.

I count among my friends a splendid young man, who is a medical student in the University of Pennsylvania. I have just been privileged to read a letter written to his mother. A part of that letter follows: "I have heard from McKay. He is actually flying down in Florida. I would give a lot to be with him. I count every man fortunate who gets into this matter. If it were the easy thing to do what virtue would there be in it? Moreover, why should we expect to enjoy a safety bought by the lives of others? There is a great feeling of unrest down here in the medical school. Browning was saying this morning that if some one would come along and suggest leaving school for France he would do it. I am too big a piece of cheese to do anything but loll around here until everything is over and then live with a gnawing dissatisfaction all my life. Please don't help make public opinion pity its defenders." Here is a young man, who, soon after the United States entered the war, offered himself for enlistment. The government told him to stay in school, that his services would be of more value if he finished his education. He is waiting, and working, though it is hard for him to see that he also fights who only stands and waits. He feels like a prisoner. He longs to be in the thick of things. But his country says to him: "Your first duty of patriotism is to get your diploma from a medical school. Some day we may need you, but when that day comes we shall want a prepared man." A voice is heard throughout the land. It is not the cry of the slacker; it is our country's voice, speaking to the hundreds of thousands of boys under the army enlistment age: "Enlist in school; go to college; keep step in the march for an education that will enable you to better serve your country in the hour when she shall call you."

Man with a Family.

In these days that call to strong men and true, another who feels the patriotism of restraint is the young man with a family. There he stands, physically fit, alert, loyal, anxious to go to the front and be a soldier for liberty. But he has a wife and two or three children dependent upon him. Or there may be other near relatives who look to him for support. I was talking with one such only yesterday. He is one of the industrious, highly respected young men of the community in which I live. He has a brother in France. He said to me: "Sometimes I can scarcely hold myself. I am so eager to go, but there's my mother and three sisters; they look to me; they need me." His country gladly excuses him, recognizing the higher patriotism of his duty to his family. If he is sensible and unselfish he will abide by his country's decision. But that does not silence the voice within him that cries out for an opportunity to strike a blow for conscience's sake.

Tiller of the Soil.

In a little village in western New York there is a home in which there are two boys of draft age. When the United States entered the war the younger enlisted in the marine corps. The other boy was working on a farm a few miles out from the village. Five or six months passed and one day he came into town and enlisted, saying: "I can't let my kid brother get ahead of me." We admired his grit, yet those who knew him said he made a better farmer than he will a soldier. But he felt himself imprisoned out there in the field while his brother was at the front. And who can blame him? But does not the nation need efficient farmers as truly as brave soldiers? The present war has established this fact—the unquestioned patriotism of the faithful tiller of the soil. He who helps feed the soldier fights for his country.

Toiler.

It is evening in a prosperous, busy city. I stand upon a street of that city and watch the workers as they stream from a factory. Others are going in, for there are three shifts at this plant. Munitions, articles that directly or indirectly aid in the war, are being rushed to completion. Here are strong men who should be in the trenches. Many of them are eager to be there. They would give anything to be able to say to their children after the war is over, "I had a part in it." But are they not having a part in it if they are doing the work Uncle Sam bids them do?

The Religious Leader.

They are going over by the hundreds, Young Men's Christian Association secretaries, chaplains, Red Cross workers and social helpers of every sort. It is a glorious procession. No war in history has seen anything like it. We praise God for the sight of it. It means the strengthening of the morale of our troops. It means keeping their hearts pure, their hands clean and their days glad. But how about the morale of the folks at home? The pastor of a great church in New York city said to me a little while ago: "I have been asked to go across, but the officers of my church say I should not. Our church has adopted the boys of a battleship; we are behind every Liberty Loan, Red Cross and Young Men's Christian Association drive; we are doing so much as a church that the men say that the work here would suffer and the cause across there would suffer if the leader should leave." Let every man go who possibly can. Let the best man go. But some must stay behind. They also may long to go, but sheer patriotism will keep them at home.

Teacher.

Before me is a letter from the principal of a State normal school. It was only a month ago that we were talking together about going across in "Y" service. I quote from his letter: "And so I suddenly found myself without a vice-principal, and, having two other vacancies, I simply can't leave the school for at least six months." How clear is his duty and what conscience and courage he has to recognize it and stay by the stuff!

The Far-Flung Battle Line.

For three years I have been in Manila, P. I. I knew there a young Britisher, as fine and true a lad as I ever met. Away back at the beginning of the war he heard his country call. He wanted to respond. He wrote his uncle in England, a leading man in public life (his father is dead), telling of his longing. His uncle replied on this wise, for I saw the letter: "Great Britain needs soldiers, but she also needs loyal business men. Her interests in the Far East must be maintained. The battle line is far flung; it reaches around the world. Stay where you are for the present, for there is where your country needs you most just now."

Mother, Sister, Wife, Sweetheart.

'Tis not with sword and thundering gun
That alone are heroes' laurels won;
He with a lion's fearless heart,
'Mid screaming shells and wild huzzas
And trumpet's blare,
Plays well his high part;
While silent in the lonely home,
The long, dull ache within her breast,
She bids the phantom laughter come
To ease the pain that will not rest;
While over all the Lord looks down,
And gives her, too, a hero's crown.

Who's to Decide?

If you, who long to be at the front, are kept at home, do not feel imprisoned. Take your country at her word. She is able to decide. If, through her constituted authorities, she says to you: "You belong here, or there, or yonder; in class three, or four, or five," believe her, and in patience and the patriotism of restraint possess ye your soul. If you cannot go over there, be a soldier of the soil, a hero in the home, a fighter at the factory, a guard of the larger good. Dedicate your manhood or your womanhood to the maintenance of the morale of the millions who must stay in America. Save, serve, give, do your best.

P. S.—Just the same, I'd like to be in France. Wouldn't you? But that doesn't keep me from serving my country here. Does it you? Imprisoned? No. Patriots, freemen are we. The bars are broken. The doors are open.—The Christian Advocate (New York).

COUNTRY CHURCH SURVEY.

By C. O. Gill.

Statistics.

This is the first country church survey of an entire State. The area covered is more than forty thousand square miles. Reports were received from every one of Ohio's 1388 townships. If we exclude the townships in which the population is urban, those in which there are villages of more than 2500 inhabitants, and those in which are parts of large town or city parishes, there are in the State about twelve hundred townships which may be classed as rural. In these there are more than 1,750,000 persons and more than 6000 churches. These churches include nearly eighteen hundred of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. For the other denominations the following figures are approximately correct, but are subject to revision: The United Brethren in Christ have 517, the Presbyterian Church 401, the Lutheran 347, the Disciples 344, the Christian 255, the Catholic 238, the Methodist Protestant 198, the Reformed 177, the Evangelical Association 149, the Congregational 137. There are many other smaller denominations, comprising about 1300 churches.

Herewith are given some of the outstanding facts brought to light by the first tabulations of the material gathered.

An Oversupply of Churches.

In each of the twelve hundred rural townships there are on an average 1470 persons, while there are five churches, or a church to every 286 persons.

The fact that these churches are not evenly distributed may be illustrated by Meigs Township, Morgan County, where there are nine churches but only 846 persons, while near the boundary lines in the townships on every side are other churches. In several other townships in the same county the overchurching is nearly as extreme. In seven of these are no resident pastors.

Unlike the conditions in large communities, an excessive number of churches in the rural parish nearly always is a cause of rivalry of an unwholesome sort. It frequently is a cause of social division and often spoils the community life. The rural pastor usually regards the other churches as an effective barrier to carrying out a program of social service and to progress of any sort.

The churches, as a rule, are too small in membership and attendance. According to data gathered by the Ohio Rural Life Survey the majority of the churches whose membership is less than one hundred do not prosper, while the smaller the membership the less is the likelihood that a church will hold its own; yet in rural Ohio it appears that more than 4000 churches have a membership of 100 or less, more than 3000 a membership of 75 or less, more than 2000 a membership of 50 or less.

If it were true that some of the churches in each community would in the near future cease to exist and that their abandonment would be attended or followed by the enlargement and revitalization of the churches left, the condition here discussed might not be regarded as serious. As a matter of fact, however, in the overchurched community the weak and ineffective church continues an intermittent and feeble activity for many years after its existence has ceased to be of value to the community. This too often results in the prolonged existence of all the churches in the community through years of ecclesiastical and religious anemia. Moreover, it is true that churches often die where they are most needed. In one prosperous region of more than one hundred square miles all the churches have given up their activities, while in another region of about 150 square miles nearly all the churches have been abandoned excepting those of a fanatical sect whose influence is decidedly against the conservation of morals and pure religion. While, therefore, the abandonment of a church sometimes is a step toward progress, the reverse is often true. It is unquestionably true in certain sections of Ohio that the churches which survive are not the "fittest."

Attendance.

As it has appeared in surveys of other areas, it is probable that the average attendance is much less than the membership. Judging from the few churches whose congregations I have counted, the attendance is usually not more than half as large as the total number of enrolled members.

An Absentee Ministry.

One of the striking facts brought to light by the survey is the lack of an adequate number of resident pastors. While a reasonable degree of interchurch co-operation should result in the maintenance of a resident minister in nearly every inhabited township, at the present time the church falls far short of realizing this possibility. In fact, nearly 4000 or about two-thirds of the churches in rural Ohio are without resident ministers. In 26 per cent of the townships no church has a resident pastor.

Divided Effort of the Ministry.

More than 5000 of the churches are without the undivided service of a minister. More than 2200 churches have only one-fourth of a minister's service or less, more than 3300 have only one-third of a minister's service or less, while more than 700 have no regular minister. These figures do not take into consideration the fact that a considerable number of the ministers have other occupations than the ministry. I personally have met several ministers who have secular occupations and yet are each serving two or more country churches.

The parish of the minister is not only divided geographically into from two to ten areas more or less widely separated, but in each of these localities his parishioners are mixed up with those of several other ministers. Commonly the country minister really has no community in which he may become effectively interested.

Short-Term Service of the Minister.

One of the striking features of the rural-church life is the minister's short term of service. In this respect conditions in nearly all the denominations are essentially the same. For illustration: in the Methodist Episcopal Church, including both city and country, 41 per cent of the ministers, according to the 1916 reports, were on their first year of service in their charge, 31 per cent on the second year, and 15 per cent on their third, whereas less than 14 per cent had been on their charges for three years or more. In other words, 72 per cent of the ministers had less than two years to get acquainted with their parishes and parishioners and to complete their work. The Presbyterian system is different in theory but is the same in practice. The minister is under the disadvantage of being a stranger, an alien, a transient, in his community. Like the tenant farmer on short lease, it is difficult for him to be deeply interested in the community, its institutions and its welfare, and he has little opportunity to become an influence in it. For this reason dwellers in the country do not ordinarily receive many pastoral calls. Ministers frequently find homes which have not been entered by a pastor for four, five, ten, and even twenty years. The entire ecclesiastical system now in vogue discounts and discourages pastoral work. The only kind of success open to the minister is in acquitting himself as an acceptable preacher and in holding a successful series of evangelistic services once each year. The system encourages him to specialize in this work. To the man who so specializes large audiences are desirable. Country congregations are too small to satisfy a red-blooded man whose chief work is to prepare and deliver pulpit addresses. Consequently the field for the enlargement of his opportunity is in the city only. He naturally wants a city church. He does not fix his attention on country life and its needs, nor does he learn how they can be met.

Increased Efficiency Possible.

The data here given indicate that from the point of view of efficiency the church is in need of readjustment. That it is falling far short of its possibilities as a force for righteousness, the conditions of many rural fields indicate. A striking illustration of the failure of the church may be found in a county in the southern part of the State where the ministers generally stay but a year, where each serves from three to ten churches and devotes his energies to preaching, to evangelistic services, and to adding members to the particular churches he serves.

In 1883 there were 96 churches in this county. In the thirty years following there were 1500 revivals, but in this time 34 churches were abandoned. Church membership declined more than 500 in number. In this county the selling of votes is common, ignorance and superstition are rife, while petty crimes abound. Deaths from tuberculosis are more numerous than in any other equal area of the State or nation, while moral conditions are deplorable. The activities of a fanatical sect have caused the abandonment of nearly all the other churches in a section comprising nearly one-third of the area of the county. In this section are sixteen hundred boys and girls between the ages of six and twenty, for most of whom no good religious influences are available. Nowhere is the service of a pastor more greatly needed, and yet both young and old are without any such service.

Exact data are not available bearing on the moral conditions in the more prosperous sections of the State. Doubtless we may assume that in the larger proportion of the communities the influences are good, but the reports from many ministers lead us to believe that even in these sections there are many villages where the moral tone is low and where the young are not supplied with opportunities which will encourage and enable them to live a normal and wholesome life. It is frequently assumed by the ministers who report this condition that it is due to the frailty or depravity of human nature, and that it is therefore inevitable. We believe, however, that reasonably good, long-term service on the part of a resident minister would greatly improve the conditions. The results which may be found in communities where the better method has been tried afford evidence in favor of this contention.

For example, in one rural parish in the State the Methodist Episcopal Church has permitted a pastor to remain nine years. When he began his service, morals were at a low ebb. Religion was in disrepute. Four small churches in rivalry feebly struggled for existence. This pastor, seeking to serve his community rather than his church alone, has succeeded in bringing to pass a great improvement until now there is Christian unity, a general respect for religion and the church, while the young people have higher ideals of manhood and womanhood, and as citizens will be an asset to the commonwealth. Other notable instances may be found where the minister had had an opportunity to lead in community service and to exert a personal influence as well as to preach. In such cases the minister and church are enabled to make manifest the fact that they may be a strong force for righteousness.

Doubtless these successful ministers in training, vision, and ideals are men of superior quality; but if more opportunities were offered for such service the rural ministry would have stronger attraction for conscientious young men of ability.

Federation.

There seems to be a common agreement among church officials that the number of churches should be diminished. Probably the most commonly advocated method for bringing this about is the trading off of churches among the various denominational bodies. This expedient is the one advocated by the majority of denominational officials, rather than the formation of federated churches. By a federated church is meant a church composed of two or more denominational churches, preserving their denominational affiliations but co-operating in the directing of all local religious affairs, and employing a common pastor. A study of the churches of various communities has caused it to appear that there is difficulty in the way of bringing to pass the trading off of churches on a large scale. The Methodist Episcopal Church has an organization which seems to be favorable to this form of procedure. The authority and influence of the Bishop make it entirely possible. But in many of the denominations the local church organizations do not recognize their officials or conferences as having authority over them. For this reason the denomination itself apparently is without sufficient authority for the consummation of the exchange of churches. Independency is strong in a large proportion of the churches. Missionary superintendents who dispense funds among the smaller churches have a certain amount of control because, if they will, they can withhold the money needed. For them, therefore, the "trading off" method is feasible. It is douhtless for this reason that they advocate it. However, very little home missionary money is distributed in Ohio. The method that will appeal to the local rural churches is the one that seems to affect alike all the churches of the community. Each will be willing to sacrifice if the sacrifice of each of the other churches is equal. For this reason the easiest method of securing church unity in the average community will be through the formation of the federated church. The experience of more than thirty churches of this kind furnishes evidence of a most convincing character that they are not only workable, but that, on the whole, they are more successful than the ordinary denominational country church.

It is apparent, therefore, that the line of least local resistance will lead to the formation of federated churches. This procedure will be welcomed in large numbers of the communities. Whether a considerable number of such churches are to be formed will depend entirely upon the degree of approval or disapproval given by the overhead church officials. The leading officials who supervise the country churches of eleven of the larger denominations have already given their approval. If the other officials also join heartily in this the immediate solution of the rural-church problems in Ohio will be very much simplified. * * *

Defective Organization.

One of the most striking features of the situation is the fact that, whereas there are superintendents who are responsible for the supervision of churches of their own denominations, there is no superintendent, or official, who accepts responsibility for the general moral and spiritual conditions in any considerable area. However bad conditions in a county or region may be, there is no organization or person whose business it is to know about it. Consequently decadence and degeneration may go on in an extensive territory without any responsible body or responsible person becoming aware of it. The defectiveness of the organization of the church, as a whole, therefore, demands our serious consideration and the application of a remedy. On the other hand, the promise in a movement such as is now on foot under the auspices of the Ohio Rural Life Association and its Committee on Interchurch Co-operation is a cause for congratulation. It may be presumed that in some areas conditions existing today would never have come to pass had the church itself, as a whole, been aware of what was going on.

Interchurch Co-operation.

Every indication points to the co-operation of the higher officials of the churches and, therefore, to the bettering of the religious and moral conditions in the rural districts in the State, both in the open country and in the villages. There are indications also that the missionary boards of some of the stronger denominations are ready to accept the southern and southeastern sections of the State as missionary territory. On the whole, therefore, there is good reason to believe that we are at the beginning of an era of progress. This progress will affect not only the general moral, social, and religious conditions, but ultimately the economic conditions in the rural districts and, doubtless, the church life of our cities.

Conclusions.

1. Whatever may happen in the immediate future, we may draw the conclusion that interdenominational co-operation must figure more largely in ecclesiastical councils of the State. 2. Ultimately there must be a smaller number of churches. This may be brought about by the trading off of churches or by the forming of federated community churches or denominational union churches. 3. The churches now active should be led to co-operate in the much-needed work of social service in their respective communities. 4. The church should be more effective as a force for righteousness. By creating for the ministers parishes more compact, and by giving them longer terms of service, it should be made posible for them to do more intensive pastoral work, to exert a stronger personal influence, and to be effective in leadership. 5. Parts of southern and southeastern Ohio must be accepted as missionary territory, whose demands upon the Ohio churches are second in importance to no other.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

Dear Brother Carley: I have read the kindly words of Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, Editor of the Central Christian Advocate, one of the official organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which you generously reproduced in your issue of September 5. So far as they relate to me personally, Dr. Spencer's brotherly references are much appreciated, and are reciprocated in full measure. In all my correspondence with him, I have found him to be quite considerate and fair, his spirit ever being that of a courteous and high-minded Christian gentleman.

But in referring to what occurred at the last session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the representations of Dr. Spencer are somewhat erroneous, as have been those of a number of others who have had occasion to allude to the proceedings of that memorable assembly. To state that Dr. Meek and other members of the North Mississippi delegation "were the only ones who voted against the report favoring a continuation of the Commission on Unification, every other vote in the General Conference being solidly for it," by no means gives a clear and accurate account of what took place in Atlanta. The following are the facts in the case:

All matters pertaining to the unification of American Methodism brought to the attention of the General Conference were first referred to the Committee on Church Relations. From that Committee came a Majority and a Minority Report, which concurred in many respects, but which differed in two leading particulars. The Majority Report declared (1) for the appointment of a new Commission on Unification, the members of which were not announced; and (2) it practically left with the unnamed Commissioners the determination as to what should be the immediate future course concerning further negotiations. The Minority Report provided (1) for the retention of the same Commission which had served for the past four years, contending that its members were better informed as to the situation than new men could possibly be, and that it should be allowed to complete its work; and (2) that the negotiations should remain in statu quo until the General Conference of the Church, North, should be heard from concerning its deliberations. This second proposal of the minority was deemed proper because the Northern Commissioners had submitted terms at Savannah from which they felt compelled to recede at the subsequent meeting in St. Louis, stating that the sentiment in their Church would not allow them to act otherwise, and in view of the further facts that the sittings of the Commission were expensive, each of them costing thousands of dollars, and that the Church, South, had been forced to define its position first ever since the initial report of the original Joint Commission was formulated in 1911, though the conclusions of that body went first to the Northern General Conference. This further consideration also carried much weight in the matter: the obstructions to an agreement by the two Commissions were admittedly such as only the General Conference of the Church, North, could take effective steps to remove.

It should be noted that both the Majority and Minority Reports of the Committee on Church Relations to our General Conference proposed to continue a Commission on Unification and provided for further negotiations. On this point it should be sufficient to quote Dr. James Cannon, Jr., the able chairman of the Committee, who prepared the report of the majority. In addressing the General Conference on this subject, he said: "We both reaffirm the Oklahoma declaration. We both want a Commission, or the Commission continued." (See Daily Christian Advocate, Page 97.)

I supported the Minority Report, as also did Judge J. G. McGowen, the other representative of the North Mississippi Conference on the Committee on Church Relations, and as also did the representatives of the Mississippi Conference on that Committee and many others. Now what took place on the Conference floor was this: After the two reports were submitted there was a spirited and somewhat extended debate as to their relative merits. Finally, after he had interrogated Dr. Cannon, who had written the Majority Report, and had been positively assured by him that it reaffirmed the position that our General Conference at Oklahoma City had taken concerning the Negro Methodists, Judge John S. Candler, the author of the Minority Report, withdrew it. A vote was then taken on the Majority Report, and I, together with five or six other delegates from North Mississippi, voted against it. But to affirm because we did not support that measure, in view of what we conceived to be its objectionable features, that we stood against continuing a Commission on Unification, is to state what the facts do not at all warrant.

Nor is it true that the North Mississippi delegates were the only ones who voted against the Majority Report when it was adopted, though the record as it is given in the Daily Advocate seems so to indicate. When the vote was taken (a rising one), it was obvious that a large majority had supported the affirmative, and when the negative was put, there was much confusion and many persons were moving about, so that the Bishop who was presiding inadvertently declared that the paper had been "unanimously adopted." His attention was called to his error, and in his courteous apology for having made this mistake, he referred only to the North Mississippi delegation, and his words as they stand in the record are calculated to mislead. The truth is, there were delegates in various sections of the house who voted against the final pasage of the Majority Report, but amid the disorder then prevailing they were overlooked by the Chair. Exactly how many there were in opposition I will not undertake to state definitely, but in my judgment there were not less than twenty-five or thirty, and there may have been considerably more. If the accuracy of this statement is called in question, I feel sure that there are others who were present who will bear witness to the substantial correctness of what I have said.

I have not written this statement in a spirit of controversy, but only to correct an error which has appeared in print a number of times, and which has hitherto been ignored, but which I think perhaps in justice to my fellow-delegates from the North Mississippi Conference and the cause of truth should not be permitted to go unnoticed longer. I desire, however, to be understood as not in any sense chiding Dr. Spencer for his erroneous reference to me and my colleagues, which I feel sure was made in all kindness and good faith. He was not in Atlanta, and, as I have said, the record in the Daily Christian Advocate was such as to give him the impression which he voiced in his interesting journal.

Though I do not favor the complete extinguishment of Southern Methodism as an autonomous organization—not believing that such a denouement, in view of the peculiar status of things now existing in the South, would promote the welfare of the Southern Church or of the Kingdom of Christ—I do not yield to Dr. Spencer or any one else in my desire to see a growth of the spirit of brotherly love and Christian co-operation among the Methodists of America and all other true followers of the great Galilean. It is true that the Church, South, has not endorsed what I stood for as an editor concerning unification; nor has it yet endorsed what those holding contrary views have advocated. The questions at issue must yet in definite form be passed upon by the two millions of Southern Methodists before they are settled.

May Heaven's richest blessings rest upon the warm-hearted Editor of the Central Christian Advocate and the large denomination which he so ably represents. I am deeply interested in their work, and I pray that it may go unceasingly forward to larger things.

PAYMENT ON EDUCATIONAL ASSESSMENT.

Dear Brother Carley: Have just received check from Brother A. C. McCorkle, our pastor at Byhalia, to apply on the educational assessment.

In his letter Brother McCorkle says, "Things are going well with us. I am ready for Conference."

Sincerely,

E. NASH BROYLES, Treasurer.

MAKE DEMOCRACY SAFE AT EVERY POINT.

The world must be so arranged that never a gain can the feebleness of weak nations be wrested for a weapon by the strong. The world must be made safe for a democracy of individuals and for a democracy of nations. Implied, though not stated, in this affirmation is the assumption that neither the world nor any part of it can exist half slave and half free. Democracy is not safe at any one point until it is safe at every point. So long as any one unit is out of step, the entire league of nations is imperiled.

HE WAS ON THE MOUNTAIN HEIGHTS.

The annual session of the Northwest Conference held at Milton, Oregon, was unique in many respects. This Conference represents the merging of the Columbia, East Columbia and Montana Conferences and comprises parts of the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho. This was the first meeting of the new Northwest Conference and men and women came together from at least four States for the first time, though they had been working in this territory for years.

Bishop H. M. Du Bose was the presiding officer and directed with a masterly hand the work of the merging of the three Conferences as well as the merging of the three Woman's Missionary Societies.

The members and visitors were lodged in Columbia College and in private homes, while all ate in the dining room of the school. Quite a number of Indian members and visitors for both the men's conference and the Woman's Missoinary Society added a picturesque touch to the occasion.

The Centenary program was carried out in full. Dr. O. E. Goddard and Dr. S. A. Neblett, assisted by Bishop Du Bose, Dr. T. N. Ivey, and Brother Squires of San Francisco, Divisional Secretary of the Sunday School Board for that territory, presented to the people the objectives of this great movement. The Conference was enthusiastic in its acceptance of its allotment of $75,000 over and above their regular income as their Centenary offering during the five years, and the women of the Missionary Society showed a like enthusiasm in pledging their full share toward the Centenary.

Probably the success of the Centenary program in this frontier conference could not be better illustrated than by the statement made by one good brother at the close of "Centenary Day." He said, "This Centenary program that you have put on is like mountain climbing. When you got through the first session I felt like we had come a long way up and could see a great deal, but the further along the program got the more I could see, until at the end it seemed I was on the mountain top and really seeing the world as I had never seen it before."

The higher we climb in God's business the broader our vision, and there is no surer, stronger ladder by which we may climb the everlasting heights and get a glimpse of the glory of a redeemed world than by means of the wonderful opportunities afforded by the Missionary Centenary.

MEXICO HAS HAD MUCH RELIGION—TOO MUCH OF ITS KIND.

G. B. Winton.

Mexico is our nearest neighbor. She is nearer than Canada because so much of her is on this side the line. A large segment of our territory was once Mexican. A million or more of Mexicans are in that and other parts of the Southwest.

But, in a general way, we have about as little use for Mexicans as Jews in our Lord's day had for Samaritans. Yet, when he wished to give a correct idea of neighborliness, he illustrated it by Jews and Samaritans, and it was the Samaritan who did the neighborly deed. It is as useless and as wrong and un-Christlike now as then for next door neighbors to hate each other. Those whom God hath joined together let not man put asunder.

Mexicans speak a strange tongue, they have uncouth customs and rotten politics. So we complain. But they can truthfully say all that of us. Their language is as good as ours. Their customs have much that is admirable. Their politics are at least directed to a right goal—the same as ours—political liberty. If we are superior to them—and in many ways we are—that is not a warrant for boasting; rather an obligation.

All worth while elements of that superiority we owe to the evangelical religion, and the institutions that spring out of it. No democracy can succeed, in any part of the world, without emphasis on individual initiative and rights, on education, liberty, social obligation, honesty in office, self-sacrifice. But all these are what Christianity teaches. Mexico's slow progress in democracy is due to her want of instruction in just these things. For that teaching no other instructor known is the equal of the evangelical Churches. The "non-conformist conscience" is a recognized bulwark of British liberties, as it is of our own.

Mexico has had much religion—too much of its kind. A retrograde Catholicism, opposed to republican institutions, including the public school, hostile to science and to industrial progress, empty of spiritual content and concerned only with ritual and the perpetuation of hierarchical power—is it any wonder that Mexicans are at last minded to repudiate such a religion? Many of them think they must repudiate all religion.

We know that is wrong, and would be disastrous. We must prevent it. We must correct their misconceptions of Christianity. We must win their regard. We have their respect. They know our strength and our enterprise. Why should we not have, too, their gratitude and affection? A stricken nation lies bruised beside our roadway. Shall we pretend that we do not know what to do?

THE HOUR HAS STRUCK.

The coming of the Centenary of Missions just at this time is strikingly opportune. The Centenary clock struck twelve at God's time, not ours.

True, the great war is on, but it has brought with it the spirit of self sacrifice, of liberality, and of a new reckoning as to the things which are really worth while. It is showing men as never before that only the things which cannot be shaken shall remain.

The Church of Christ alone is the keeper and dispenser of these unshakable verities. She cannot, she will not prove untrue to the hour and the occasion. On with the Centenary!

Bishop JAMES ATKINS.

OVER THE TOP.

The annual session of the Denver Conference was held at La Veta, Colorado. The Centenary program was put on in full. Dr. O. E. Goddard and Dr. S. A. Neblett were the members of the Centenary team present and were ably assisted in their work by the presiding elder, Rev. T. S. Wheeler, and the Conference Sunday School evangelist, Rev. R. E. Dickinson, as well as by the presiding officer, Bishop W. B. Murrah.

The program met with a hearty reception. The preachers and visiting laymen and women showed much enthusiasm and expressed their warmest sympathy with the movement. The Conference adopted by a standing, unanimous vote, a resolution to the effect that the pastors covenant together to carry out in full the Centenary program in every charge, which includes the acceptance of their allotment. This means that the Denver Conference, which is probably the smallest in the Connection, agrees to raise during the next five years $33,400 in addition to their regular income.

A leading layman of the Church who visited this Conference said, "I have been attending conferences for twenty-five years and I have never seen anything like this." The enthusiasm of those in charge of the program communicated itself to the members and visitors and they simply drank in the story of the needs and the opportunities presented by this, the greatest task ever attempted by the Church.

BURDEN OR BOAT.

Occasionally people are found in the church who look upon the Centenary Program as demanding all and giving nothing. They fail to understand its full potentialities, that is all. They refuse to see beyond their pocketbooks. They will not believe you if you tell them that the Centenary Program can help them as much and more than they are asked to help it.

These people are like the man who had a wagon-box which he must somehow get across the stream. Instead of using it as a raft and letting it carry him across, he hoisted it to his back and, wading laboriously, carried it across. Of course he got it over all right, but it left him with a sore back.

Nobody in the church needs to have a sore back from carrying the Centenary Program across. It will carry itself and us with it, if we get in it instead of under it.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS SPOKEN.

Just how much of the following letter is real sorrow for his sin and how much is an effort to keep his deportment from being cut is a question. This letter was written by a Chinese boy.

"My Dear Teacher:

I am very sorrow for this morning I had to tell a lie, and I know you are my good angel, so I thank you very much. Now I will plead you will excuse me, do not minus my deportment. I know that I had crime, I hope you can excuse me for certain, and I will beg you pray for me, at before I forget to tell a lie do not thought to God then I pray for him, and think a boy deceived his mother story so as to I am very touch from that. I am very sorry that I deceived you this morning, but I hope you can promise my pleading."

THE CENTENARY WORLD PROGRAM MEANS

Bread for the hungry;
Healing for the sick;
Homes for the fatherless;
Cheer for the hopeless;
Life for the dying.

In a world where men are dealing death, shall we not give life?

"LIFE AND SERVICE", DR. POWELL'S BOOK.

When Dr. Lewis Powell gave a title to his book, he very naturally consulted the two most valuable chapters. There is seeming dissonance in the different heads discussed and some reflection is necessary to see the harmony. President Jacob Gould Schurman, in one of his books, groups in the same class Darwin, Shakespeare and Lincoln. It took some time for me to see the harmony in these great names, but it is visible to the mind after proper conception is had of the author's leading thought.

The first half of the book is given to modern heresies, the last half to fundamental truths.

The fox hunter rides to the highest point of the terrain and blows in his dogs when, after striking a cold trail, they cross one another's traeks and grow discordant and quarrelsome; so the author here warns the thinker who has lost his way while championing Evolution as the solvent of the unknowable, or Christian Science as the healer of the nations, to come in from his wanderings and fads and go back to the Inspired and Infallible Word. Dr. Powell adopts the sentiment of the good Quaker poet—

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air,
I only know I can not drift
Beyond his love and care.

What William E. Gladstone wrote in his book, "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture," is in harmony throughout with these essays, though that great book seems not to have been consulted by the author. The book in hand is refreshing and wholesome; it glories in the faith of the fathers, the entire sufficiency of the Word of God—all else is incidental and collateral. The vagaries and mythologies of the heathen, the vain strivings of the evolutionist, the follies of the Christian Scientist are all classed together. The author does not claim for himself originality, but has the better quality of healthy discernment, of knowing the good from the spurious; he stands for the infallibility of the Bible, the sanctity of the home, for love of God and native land. For false and heathen gods in any form he has no tolerance, nor has he consideration for the mouthings of their prophets. Like the author, I long to see the Mark Hopkinses, the John B. Minors, the W. R. Webbs back in the colleges and schools that train our youths, and all the wanderers in the fields of speculation and doubt elsewhere. We need the simple faith and mind, whole-hearted belief of the Word in the school, the home, the heart.

Dr. Powell, thought-provoking in the pulpit, performs a wholesome service in his book. Like the fox hunter, he goes to the mountain top and "blows in" the wanderers and points to the simple fundamentals of life, to the infallible Word and its hero, the man of Galilee, as our all sufficient need. Read the book.

NOTES FROM THE JACKSON DISTRICT.

Our presiding elder, Rev. J. M. Morse, has been busy all summer in his rounds and helping some of the brethren in meetings. He is full of the spirit of the Missionary Centenary and has a stirring and awakening address on the subject. During the first week in September, he assisted in a meeting at his old home church in Kemper county.

Rev. C. W. Crisler and the Galloway Memorial congregation are working well together. Besides many received by letter, 30 have been added to the membership on profession. Brother Crisler is in frequent demand for public and patriotic gatherings, and is making a name as one of the best public speakers and lecturers in the State.

Galloway Memorial is giving of her best to the cause of the great war. Besides the large number of her members in the service of the army and navy, she has given 12 for other lines of war work, eight of these to the "Y."

Four of the professors from Millsaps college, Professors Mitchell, Noble, Burton and Hamilton, have answered the call and entered the service of the army Y. M. C. A.

Capitol Street church has, besides a large service flag, also a Christian service flag displayed within the building, with three crosses on it representing three of her members in the army "Y" work. They are Professor Hamilton, Dr. Clark and J. N. Black.

Rev. W. H. Huntley and wife spent a delightful vacation of nearly two weeks the latter part of August on the coast at Pass Christian.

The district Sunday School Institute held at Florence was up to the high-water mark in quality and interest. Our Sunday school secretary, Rev. J. C. Chambers, is doing a splendid work. Chambers believes in the adage, 'Laugh and the world will laugh with you.' And he has the broadest and loudest laugh in the Mississippi Conference. If you don't laugh at what he has to say when he thinks a laugh should be coming, he will laugh himself. Good for John. We all love him.

Jackson has undoubtedly the best elementary Sunday school teacher in the State. She is a bundle of energy and zeal, thoroughly consecrated to the service of the Church and qualified for efficient leadership. She ought to be employed by the Sunday School Board to give the benefit of her talent to the largest circle possible. She is Mrs. Sue Stevens Brame, dear to the heart of many Millsaps boys.

We are missing from active life some of the old veterans of the Cross. Old age and feebleness are keeping within doors these days Rev. H. P. Lewis and Rev. R. Bradley. We are sorry to know that Brother Bradley is critically ill at his home in Jackson. Let the Church pray that he may be spared to give further service to the Church.

As a result of two meetings held on his charge, Brother Foreman reports 35 accessions to the Church this year.

H. P. Lewis, Jr., at Madison, reports ten accessions on profession as a result of meetings held through the summer.

NEWS FROM NABORTON.

By Rev. A. J. Gearheard.

I have been to Naborton. That statement with my signature and home address, together with a statement that I am a Methodist preacher and have not been on a vacation, would indicate that I have been helping some fellow pastor in a revival meeting. The deduction is correct, and the party involved besides the writer was Rev. Leland Clegg, young, full of a good spirit and endowed with some personal appearance and set in a big field of opportunity. It is a great thing to be young, good looking, well trained and to be surrounded with a chance to work to your limit for the good of hunanity. The happiest man who ever lived should be the young man to-day who has God's love in his heart and God's call ringing in his ears.

Naborton is an oil town. There they cap a gas well with the pipes of a vacuum pump and convert gas into gasoline. I was awestruck with the fact that ordinary gas might be thus reduced to liquid and sold in a tin can. There are great possibilities for the inventor who can cap the flow in front of a Methodist church during a session of an Annual Conference. The people who work at Naborton receive high wages, live in little houses, and have nothing to distract their minds but what to do with their money. No saloon, no moving picture show, very few dances and but one pool hall and one church furnish the setting of a town that boasts some 600 souls. These people are good people, and some of the best wit of the country is bound within the leather of these hard-working oil men. Fooling with oil and gas and tinkering with tanks that hold thousands of gallons of gasoline is a business that demands the service of a man with wits and all of them about him.

I preached in Naborton to goodly numbers a total of fifteen sermons. I was accorded reverent attention, big crowds, delightful sociability and daily spreads that would have made a gormandizing maniac take a relapse. The people were ready for the meeting. The careful leadership of good men and women in Naborton, spurred by the zeal of such a young man as Brother Clegg, had turned every possible stone, and the road was clear for action. Many accepted Christ for the first time, many more renewed their vows to their Master and the church roll was substantially lengthened by the names of the new members.

I enjoyed the trip, the preaching, the results and the sociability. I even enjoyed the fair feasts that tempted an appetite shrunk to the dimensions of a Methodist preacher's purse in war times.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER R. G. MOORE.

My Dear Brother Carley: The Advocate has always been a most welcome visitor and essential to my study, and now in my new and distant field of endeavor, to which I shall soon go, its arrival, bringing with it tidings of the success which has been attained by many whose kind faces and genial and brotherly spirits I shall never forget, together with its characteristic articles of spiritual fervor and inspiration, shall invoke even greater joy and appreciation. Richest blessings upon the Advocate, all of its many friends, all of its numerous interests. And may we, my wife and myself, as we separate from loved ones, friends and homeland, ask to become the grateful objects of your deepest interest and most earnest prayers.

Sincerely, your brother,

GIPSY AND THE DYING BOY.

Gipsy Smith in the story he is giving to his American audiences tells the following touching incident, one of experiences with the men in the trenches:

"Here was a dear boy on a stretcher—I had led him to Christ. He was so broken I took the blanket and lifted it from his face, and then I got down and kissed him, and my lips and hands got covered with his blood. I kissed him for his mother, for I knew she would never kiss him. I thought he was unconscious, but he asked me:

"'Gipsy, Gipsy, does it mean Blighty?' for Blighty means home and mother, 'or does it mean West'—and West means death.

"So I said: 'It means West; you are too far gone for Blighty; you will never see mother again. Can I tell her anything?' and he said to me:

"'Tell her I am not afraid to die; I have found Christ. It is great to die for freedom.' And then he pointed to his head and said to me: 'Yes, it is battered and broken, but it will be all right when I get the crown.'

"That is the kind of boys God has given us, men and women. Your boys are dying for the freedom of the world; don't you fail them—don't you fail them! Put in all you have—consecrate all your power, every hour, every day, every fiber, every dollar, to the good of the world, for the freedom of the race."—Selected.

OUR SERVICE FLAG.

Our star shines now with gleam of gold.
All new it met October's breeze.
Asparkle with the frost and snow,
Its blue shone through the bare-limbed trees.

Our hearts grew bold as sped the months.
Spring sang in full-throat merry thrush.
Life's interest hung on each new word
From out the battle's bloody rush.

And then—the blue blazed golden fire!
(He's buried far across the sea.)
Our star shines now with gleam of gold—
A light for world democracy.

HOW GRACE SPELLED LOVE.

A class of very little girls was learning to spell. "Etta, spell pig, and tell us what kind of noise little pigs make," said the teacher. "P-i-g, pig," answered Etta, "and this is the noise they make, 'Que, que.'"

"You may spell dog, Rosy," said the teacher to the next little girl.

"D-o-g, dog, and our doggie says, 'bow-wow-wow.'"

"Now, cat, Mary."

The next little girl said, "C-a-t, and my kitty says, 'mew-mew.'"

"Grace, you may spell love," were Teacher's next words. Grace didn't stop to give the letters, but ran and threw her arms about the teacher's neck, giving her a kiss on the cheek. "We spell love that way at our house," said she.

How the girls laughed at this queer way of spelling!

"That is a beautiful way," said the teacher, "but do you know another way?"

"Oh, yes," said little Grace. "I spell love this way," and she began putting the books in order on teacher's desk. "I spell love by helping everybody when they need me."

"That's the best way of all to spell love, and now we will have it as the books spell it." Then all of the class said together, "L-o-v-e, love."

God's command is to love God how? And your neighbor?—Exchange.

THE GROWING RABBIT.

A young cotton-tailed rabbit a few days before leaving the nest has well-nigh the equipment of the race. His fear of the unusual is considerable. His leg muscles are strong. He washes his face and all the long fur from his nose to his cotton-tail; he knows how to dig; he turns his long ears or lifts his sensitive nostrils in the direction of sound or odor. He is very silent, seldom using his high-pitched voice and always moving softly on his padded feet. He crouches motionless to escape an enemy without having observed that his coat matches the ground in color. He does all these things without having been taught. He wanders only a little way from the nest. If he attempts even to cross the road, he may find himself in a wheel rut so deep for his diminutive size that he has difficulty in scrambling out.

In his play he practices the simple activities of his later life. It is endless fun to hop and hop, though sometimes the distance covered is so short that he goes up and down like a bobbing mechanical toy wound up. He is continually at the game of jumping with light, high springs over his companions' backs. He tests everything with his nose and then with his teeth. He cautiously pokes his head into every hole he finds. At the slightest sound or near movement an instantaneous spring of the hind legs lands Bunny two or three feet away, where he "freezes," looking remarkably as if made up of several pieces put together—the round body, the head jointed into that and four little pegs set in underneath for legs. He is continuously getting more or less seriously frightened and jumping away in some unexpected direction, crouching on the ground or racing to the nest. If there proves to be no danger he often gives a series of high, short jumps as if he were a rebounding rubber ball, or shakes himself off his feet so that he wavers in the air a moment before regaining his balance. He never goes round anything that he can crawl under and what he cannot go under he tries to climb over. He stretches up beside a stone and after finding that he cannot possibly scale it, he jumps up, and immediately down on the other side. Then he does it all over again, and again, and still again before something else attracts him.

But in a week or ten days more Bunny has changed from babyhood to youth and according to the custom of his race is living an independent existence. He has his own "squat" at the edge of the woods, where he sits and nods with open, sleepy-looking eyes. He is solitary in habit except in the late afternoon and at night when he eats and plays with the other rabbits of the neighborhood and probably has again the warm taken-care-of feeling of the nest as he touches noses with some one of his baby companions.

His teeth have grown so sharp and strong that they urge him to bite every tough twig, lichen and piece of bark. His claws are longer and sharper and with the increased development of his leg muscles give him some slight means of defense. His ears have increased in size. The gray fur of his cotton-tail and about his nostrils has become white. A wild look has taken the place of the baby expression in his wide black eyes (the brown iris wholly contracts at night). He dashes at break-neck speed in curving lines, to stop with alarming suddenness. He makes every movement, if only to turn his head, with startling alertness, an expression of joyousness and freedom.

As to his eating, he disdains ragweed, mustard, amaranth and many other plants; but he often takes a nibble in passing of curled dock, peppergrass and pigweed. He may take more than a nibble of plantain and mallow. But how he does like clover! He hunts for it among the grass and weeds and sits down in contentment when he finds a plant. He buries his head in it and greedily eats the flowers first, sticking out his slim, long tongue at the right, then at the left, and wiggling his expressive mouth and nose with great satisfaction as he finishes. After disposing of a leaf he chews the stem down to the ground. He may even dig up the roots. Sometimes two young rabbits get hold of the same clover and the two heads tug and pull with never an effort to use the hands in the contest. One surprising thing about Bunny is that he never uses his front feet as hands to manage his food but instead awkwardly pulls and pushes it about with his mouth and head.—Our Dumb Animals.

A MOTHER-MADE MAN.

Dr. Lorimer tells this story of one of our most distinguished men, who was introduced at a great public meeting as a "self-made man." Instead of appearing gratified at the tribute, it seemed to throw him for a few moments into a "brown study." Afterwards they asked him the reason for the way in which he received the announcement.

"Well," said the great man, "it set me to thinking that I am not really a self-made man."

"Why," they replied, "did you not begin to work in a store when you were ten or twelve?"

"Yes," said he; "but it was because my mother thought I ought to."

"But then," they urged, "you were always such a great reader, devouring books when you were a boy."

"Yes," he replied; "but it was because my mother led me to it."

"But then," they urged again, "your integrity was your own."

"Well, I don't know about that. One day a barrel of apples had come to me to sell out by the peck, and, after the manner of some storekeepers, I put the speeked ones at the bottom and the best ones at the top. My mother called me and asked me what I was doing. I told her, and she said, 'Tom, if you do that you will be a cheat.' I think my mother had something to do with my integrity; and, on the whole, I doubt whether I am a self-made man. I think my mother had something to do with making me anything I am of any character or usefulness."—Sunday School Visitor.

There is a true heartfelt union with our Lord if in times of activity as well as in repose, in times of trial as in hours of prayer, you cast yourselves upon him. There would then be a growing similarity of your character with his character, of your mind with his mind, your heart with his heart—a result to be realized in time and perfected in eternity, as the living test and sign of your indissoluble union with him, before God and the holy angels. This will be to you a secret treasure between yourself and your God alone.—T. T. Carter.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is hereby called to meet in regular annual session on Thursday, October 10, at 11 o'clock a.m., at the Advocate office, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La. The Committee will take up all matters which concern the Advocate at this time. A full meeting is desired.

J. M. HENRY, Chairman.

Ruston, La., Aug. 26.

COURTESY.

Courtesy has a commercial value that is freely recognized by the heads of big business concerns. Even Mr. McAdoo has thought it worth while to issue a circular letter to the employees of the railroads to call attention to its importance in dealing with the public, though it is not a matter of securing business, since the railroads now have no competition. It is simply a means of avoiding friction and allaying unpleasantness. "I thank you," "If you please," "I beg your pardon," and "With pleasure," are not hard words to say, and they will clear up many difficult situations. They have a place in the sacred precincts of the home and in the circle of religious activities. If we reduce it merely to a matter of policy, we might very well say, "Courtesy is the best policy."

SOME INCIDENTALS OF GOOD PREACHING.

Practically everybody likes to hear good preaching. Once in awhile, somebody has the temerity to suggest that the day of preaching has passed; that the pulpit has lost its power; that newspapers and magazines and books have largely done away with the value of public speaking. It is true that people read more nowadays than they did formerly; but it is our observation that a man who has a message and is able to deliver it effectively, is able to get a hearing. It may be true that the earnest preacher has to face discouraging conditions sometimes; but he need never fear that his calling will be taken away from him.

The real value of preaching is, of course, wrapped up in certain essentials, without which it is but little better than the sounding of brass and the tinking of cymbals. There must be vital gospel truth combined with the compelling influence of a consecrated personality. Preaching that is lacking in the essentials is not worth while.

But there are certain incidentals of good preaching, in addition to the essentials, that very greatly help the sermon in its effectiveness. When they are lacking, the congregation may not always be able to tell exactly what they are, but their absence is invariably felt. Their presence may not always be realized in detail, but they heighten wonderfully the general effect of a discourse. Some of these incidentals are the following:

1. Personal appearance. Not all preachers are good-looking; if that were a requisite of the calling, some of us would have to cease our activities. Not many preachers are financially able to wear the expensive clothes that are associated, in the minds of some people, with the idea of being well-dressed. But there are certain details of a neat appearance that even the homeliest man may observe, though his clothes are not tailor-made. A three days' growth of beard does not predispose a congregation in a man's favor; unkempt hair is not a mark of genius; soiled linen and baggy trousers and unpolished shoes are not exactly inspiring to look upon.

2. Language. Our mother-tongue is a wonderful vehicle for expressing our thoughts. The English vocabulary is large and rich. Our forms of expression are varied enough to suit the most exacting needs. When a preacher forsakes the use of good English to indulge in slang, vulgarisms and uncouth grammatical expressions, he creates a prejudice against himself in the minds of a great many people that more than offsets any gain of immediate attention on the part of the frivolous and unthinking.

3. Voice. The vocal apparatus is a marvellous musical instrument. It may be made to develop volume and force and carrying power, with softness and melody and every pleasing cadence. When a speaker begins with a flat, weak volce, or in harsh, rasping tones, he has created for himself a handicap that must be overcome by marked excellencies in other directions before he can achieve his full aim.

We would not attach too much importance to these and other incidentals of good preaching—for they are incidentals—but the work of preaching is so great and so serious a matter, and it carries with it such a weight of responsibility, that we feel that nothing is too trivial to notice if it will, in the least degree, increase the effectiveness of the preacher. All these things are purely matters of careful attention on the part of a speaker. Even the weakest of us can overcome defects of this kind if we set ourselves to it. The welghtier matters come first, of course; but the smaller things should not be neglected.

SIMPLE LIVING.

It seems to be true that the more complex civilization becomes, the more artificial the standards of living become. Our needs multiply with the extension of our activities and our ability to supply those needs. That is why, perhaps, in certain social circles there has been refinement upon refinement of social habits and customs that is hard for the ordinary, workaday man to understand.

There have always been some people in the world to insist upon a rational scheme of living that would put what have come to be called "necessary luxuries" among the non-essentials. The small requirements of the primitive man have been pointed to as demonstrating how little is really necessary for our welfare. Emerson and Thoreau and Pastor Wagner have been called "apostles of the simple life."

In normal times, perhaps, we do not realize the burden of the more or less artificial standards by which we regulate our living. We take it largely for granted that things must be as we see them around us, and we make no conscious effort to be other than the great majority.

But we are not living in normal times now, and we might very well afford to examine closely and conscientiously the scale of our wants—the things that are necessary for our highest economic efficiency. The campaign for thrift has shown us that we can very well do without many things that we had come to believe were necessary for our happiness; the exigencies of war, which have resulted in a rearrangement of our whole system of production and consumption, have shown us that a large part of our energies have been devoted to non-essentials.

The present, therefore, is a good time for us to readjust our ideas of necessary things to the end that we may eliminate much that is practically useless for our well-being. It will require much of courage and determination for us to disregard such things as styles and fashions and the conventionalized absurdidities of the "new-rich" spirit. But the blessedness of quiet nerves and physical vigor and intellectual and spiritual energy will be worth all it costs.

UNION QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF NEW ORLEANS CHURCHES.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, who is completing this year his full term on the district, has appointed a union quarterly conference of the city churches for next Tuesday evening. The key-note of the meeting will be, "Objectives." The various pastors, in their reports, will give detailed information as to the year's work, and these reports will be followed by a round-table discussion of methods and results yet to be attained. The treasurers' reports will show exactly what has been done in the different churches in a financial way, and what the prospects are for collections in full. Mr. W. H. Black, the district lay leader, will deliver a short address on the subject, "Over the Top." The presiding elder himself will give a general review of the situation. We presume his remarks will be in the nature of an "episcopal address." He has very kindly asked the Editor of the Advocate to say a few words concerning the Conference organ. One of the items of business will be the selection of the church where the sessions of the Annual Conference will be held. The presumption is that First Church will be chosen, though no definite action has yet been taken.

We believe this coming together of the official bodies of a large group of churches for consideration of affairs that are of interest to all, is a most hopeful sign of the growing interest in Church affairs, and of the increasing connectional spirit. We believe that it might be profitably done in a good many of our larger centers.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The pulpit of the Carrollton Avenue Church, of this city, was filled by Dr. J. T. Sawyer last Sunday. He reported having preached to two large congregations.

Mrs. S. V. Bloodworth, of Gulfport, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says, "I don't want to miss a single copy." We are sincerely glad that she finds it interesting and helpful.

Rev. C. T. Barton writes from Horn Lake, Miss.: "I transferred last week from the Western Virginia Conference, after eight years' absence. * * * I closed a great year—100 per cent on all claims."

Rev. J. E. Selfe, our pastor at Covington, La., is attending the Y. M. C. A. Training School at San Antonio, Texas, preparatory to entering the overseas service after the meeting of the Louisiana Annual Conferenee.

A note from Rev. B. T. Crews, of Vivian, La., informs us that Bishop Kilgo will dedicate our church at that place on November 3. Brother Crews says: "We are moving on to the conclusion of the year nicely."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Madison Station, Miss., in addition to giving faithful attention to the general interests of his work, is also mindful of the Advocate. We thank him for two subscriptions which he recently sent us.

The Editor spent last Sunday at Columbia, La., where he preached for Rev. W. M. Sullivan, and on Monday he left for Dallas, Texas, to attend the Missionary Centenary Conference, which convened at that place last Tuesday evening.

"The Church paper ought to be in every home." is an expression that occurs frequently in letters that come to this office. Brother B. C. Lee, of Coushatta, La., uses it in sending us two subscriptions. Needless to say, we agree with him.

Rev. M. E. Scatt, of Black Hawk, Miss., sends us three names for our subscription files, for which we thank him. He says of his work: "The outlook now is that we are going to close out with a very successful year in every respect."

The French Protestant Committee of Paris has announced that it will send Chaplain Daniel Couve to America in September as its representative in the speaking campaign of the National Committee on the Churches and the Moral Aims of the War.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions, recently sent in: Rev. A. B. Barry, McComb, Miss., 2; Rev. J. B. Fulton, Baker, La., 4; Rev. J. A. Poe, Sidon, Miss., 3.

Professor J. E. Carruth, superintendent of the Hazlehurst, Miss., public schools, in extending his subscription to the Advocate to December, 1919, takes occasion to say some very kind things about the paper. We appreciate his interest in the Conference organ.

Rev. T. B. Winstead of Burns, Miss., writing under date of Sept. 14, says: "We are moving along well on the Trenton Circuit. We are having some good meetings." Brother Winstead accompanied his letter with a list of 11 subscriptions, for which we thank him.

Rev. R. T. Nolen, who has recently been appointed to the Vardaman circuit to succeed the lamented Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, has recently sent us two subscriptions, for which he has our thanks. He promises to send us an article for publication soon; we shall be glad to receive it.

Dr. Hoyt M. Dobbs, Dean of the School of Theology at Dallas, Tex., writes: "In compliance with the request of the United States Government, our opening day has been changed to Sept. 27. We expect two hundred cadets in our Students' Army Training Corps. We shall have a larger enrollment in every department than we had anticipated."

Rev. J. L. Cady, pastor of the Olive Branch circuit, Louisiana Conference, reports a fine meeting held recently at Gilead, one of his churches. He was assisted by Rev. E. B. Moll, of whom he speaks in the highest terms. Twenty-five people testified that they received a blessing during the meeting. Brother Cady sent us five subscriptions, for which we thank him.

Last Friday evening at 8 o'clock, the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, Rev. W. W. Holmes, had all the pastors and Sunday school superintendents of the city together to consider the Sunday school work for the fall months. Special attention was given to the subject of teacher-training. We commend such gatherings as being conducive to the highest efficiency in this great work.

Rev. W. L. Doss, our pastor at Homer, La., wrote us a short time ago, asking us to send him the list of subscribers on his charge. We complied with his request promptly. We have just received a list of eight renewals from him, with the encouraging message, "It took only a few minutes to get these renewals." We thank him for his attention to this important matter, and we appreciate the courtesy and loyalty of the friends who made it easy for him.

A beautiful, quiet wedding was solemnized in the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, on the evening of September 12, when the pastor, the Rev. W. H. Coleman, united in the bonds of holy matrimony Col. Howard F. Noble, of Ohio, and Mrs. Sue Nabors Logan, of Mansfield, La. The groom is the Colonel of the 152d Infantry, now stationed at Camp Shelby, but he is expecting an immediate order to report with his division in France. The bride is the amiable and accomplished daughter of Mr. J. M. Nabors, of Mansfield, and has a host of friends throughout this State. Mr. and Mrs. Claude G. Rives, Jr., friends of the bride, having been notified by wire that the happy event was to quietly take place, joined the bridal party at the Grunewald Hotel. After the ceremony the bride and groom returned to the Grunewald and left on an early train the next morning for Hattiesburg. The many friends of this distinguished couple wish them all happiness.

September 14, 44 years ago, was the time when the White League and citizens of New Orleans under General Ogden wrested the government from the carpet baggers and Kellogg rule, and the supremacy of the whites was established in city and State. The Gov. Francis T. Nicholls government came into power. The battle which made the change was fought at the foot of Canal Street, where the people gained a glorious victory. Some of our choicest young men were killed, and Liberty Monument was erected to their memory, and in honor to their glorious fight for freedom. The Era Club of New Orleans, not willing that the day should pass unnoticed, went on Saturday forenoon to the monument and wreathed it with lovely flowers and evergreen, and hung there a beautiful streamer bearing these words: "Lest we forget for what these men died." These elect ladies, whose organization is ever ready to do noble and patriotic deeds, did well to remember the boys who fell in the fight there. Dr. J. T. Sawyer, being present, and who was a participant in the events of that day, was requested by the ladies to offer a prayer, and he gladly did so.

REV. S. L. POPE RESIGNS TO ENTER Y. M. C. A. WORK.

At the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Church, held Wednesday night, Sept. 11, the pastor, Rev. S. L. Pope, was rewarded with the largest attendance witnessed at any similar gathering in years. The members of the congregation all came, out of regard for their pastor, who is soon to sever the pastoral relation here to take up Y. M. C. A. work in France.

The prayer meeting preceded the conference and it was a sweet service with the pastor and his flock. After the prayer service the conference was presided over by Rev. W. L. Duren, the presiding elder of the Columbus District. Brother Pope was presented with a handsome purse as a testimonial of affection from the members of his church, and the following resolution was adopted after the same had been presented by Prof. Dabney Lipscomb:

"Resolved, That the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., and the large number of the membership present, deeply appreciative of the faithful and efficient services of Rev. S. L. Pope, our beloved pastor, who expects soon to sever his relations with us, earnestly pray for him God's blessing, guidance, and protection in the perilous and important new field he is to enter and commend him cordially as a Christian gentleman and minister of the Gospel to the confidence and esteem of any with whom he may have to deal officially or otherwise."—Columbus Dispatch.

IN MEMORY OF MY FATHER, JOHN B. UNDERWOOD.

John B. Underwood was born at Covington, La., on January 23, 1835. In 1851 he came to St. Helena Parish with his parents. For a year or two he worked with his father and elder brother, who were millwrights, in building water mills. He was then sent to Columbia, Miss., and placed under the tutorship of a Professor Roark, where he remained for two and a half years. He then came home and taught school and read law until the outbreak of the Civil War. He joined the 9th La. Regiment, and reached Virginia in time to help bury the dead at the first battle of Bull Run. He participated in many hotly contested fields, including the battle of Harper's Ferry. In the winter of 1864, he came home on furlough, and on February 8, 1865, he was married to Rebecca Ann Hill, one of his former pupils.

About this time he was transferred from the Army of Virginia, made captain of a company and sent to Alabama, where he surrendered with his company in April. In May he resumed teaching in the same school that he had closed to enter his country's service.

It is needless to mention here the deplorable state of affairs that existed at that time. He, with others of that day, had to submit to the humillating ordeal of being examined by their former slaves in order to obtain certificate to teach in the public schools. This was only the first evidence of his love for children—a quality that grew and developed to the end of his life. He taught in the common country schools just fifty years, closing where he had begun, at old Friendship. In his day there was little public money, and patrons were usually unable to pay much tuition. But that did not deter him. He taught on: if the people paid him, all right; if they did not, he seldom sent them a second statement. If they bought books for their children, well and good; if they did not, he bought or borrowed for them. Sometimes a book would go through half a dozen three or four months' schools and then get back to the one from whence it started. If compensation for his services was, in a material way, limited, in appreciation, gratitude, and affection, it was not.

When he taught away from home, he boarded around among his pupils, and was a welcome guest in every home. His genial disposition and affable manner made friends of every one, and he could devise more ways to get boys into school and keep them there than anyone that I have ever known.

He was a man of pure heart and clean lips. His home life was beautiful and sweet. In it six sons and five daughters were born, all of whom lived to be grown but two of the sons, who preceded him to his Heavenly Father's house. The other members of the family expect to follow him as the messenger calls for them, for they are each endeavoring to follow his precepts and example.

He joined the Church at Friendship in 1864 — is it any wonder that we, his children, love to worship there?

His home was the preachers' home. In fact, he kept open house; no one was ever turned away from his door, and if he ever failed to oblige or accommodate any one who called on him, I do not know of it. He often stinted and denied himself, and was often imposed upon, but that did not at all dampen his ardor for doing good and helping others.

But his life work is ended. The passing was as his life had been—calm, peaceful and serene. He lived in perfect faith and trust, and died in perfect peace. His last audible words were the Lord's prayer, and when he repeated the final words, "forever and ever, amen," he gently fell on sleep.

He leaves a wife, nine children, fifty grandchildren, ten great-grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends to cherish his memory while life shall last. He was buried at Live Oak Church, the funeral services being conducted by Rev. C. C. Miller, of Morgan City, Rev. J. S. Rutledge, his pastor, and Rev. H. C. Cornish, Baptist minister of Denham Springs. His eldest son,

W. H. UNDERWOOD.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

Obituaries

The death angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Lewis on August 27, 1918, and took from their embrace their darling little boy, GEORGE. God lent this precious child to them for the space of five years and a few days. While it is hard to give him up, yet we know that God doeth all things for the best. You can never call him back, but you will know where to find him. Everything that fond hearts and loving hands could do, was done to relieve the little sufferer, but it was a task only God could perform. So, dear parents, let this comforting thought rest with you. If you love his Savior, you will meet him by and by. One bright jewel has gone on before to await the coming of papa, mamma and other loved ones.

Thou art gone, their precious darling,
Never more cans't thou return;
Thou shalt sleep a peaceful slumber
Till the resurrection morn.

We shall meet, to part no never,
By and by, by and by;
We shall meet, to part no never,
In that home beyond the skies.

A FRIEND.

THE "EATLESS" VISIT.

While the war is bringing great anxiety and great strain upon the land, it is also bringing real blessings to all classes. People are drawing together as never before and are anxious to do everything possible to lighten labor along all lines. Particularly is this true in the country; for, as never before, the country has problems of production to solve and labor burdens to bear that no other period of our country has seen. Not only are country men and women banding themselves together for mutual helpfulness, but city folks, as well, are doing their utmost to help in rural problems.

There are countless multitudes of town and city people who have definitely pledged themselves to the "eatless visit" in the country, and in consequence the mistresses of country homes have found existence much happier and quieter in these times of greater production. There never was a time when country men and women needed calm, sane, healthful summers as they do now, and there is no time nor strength to waste on useless cooking. Besides, the visit from friends that requires no extra cooking gives both master and mistress time to enjoy a brief breathing spell and quiet conversation that the old-time hospitality never gave.

The habit of sending the children to "grandma's" for the summer is also falling into the oblivion it should have reached years ago. There never was any excuse for unloading a pack of lively youngsters upon a middle-aged or elderly grandmother, as many young mothers did annually; so if the war has done nothing except to break up this custom, it has been a blessing. If any woman has cooked for threshers, hay harvesters, corn cutters, or any other bunch of extra workers on a farm, handicapped by the presence of several children unrestrained by maternal authority, she is in the mood to rejoice that children are included in the eatless visits.

After all, the visit that does not bring extra work upon the hostess is always the most enjoyable one. To spend two or three hours in the evening or late afternoon with country relatives and friends, departing in time for the chores and the necessary early bedtime, is to bring cheer and encouragement to men and women who need every bit of relaxation possible in their hard work. Even a brief call is like a fresh breeze on a sultry day and livens up things on the farm wonderfully. Take your friends the latest news, the magazines you have read that you do not wish to send to the soldiers, the word of encouragement and praise for their great efforts, the breath of busy town life, and the messages great speakers bring from the front. If you are going to the country, call up and ask if there is any errand you can do or any purchase you can make. Make the eatless visit brief and enjoyable and helpful if you possibly can. Do not imagine that by staying away entirely you are doing your friends a great service, but use your best efforts to cheer and lighten their hard summer, for it must be hard with all the extra duties. Then the short stay will be helpful to all and you will have the consciousness that you have lightened the burdens instead of adding to them, and the country people will be refreshed and cheered and made stronger for the tasks that are theirs in saving this country's liberty and honor.—Hilda Richmond, in Western Christian Advocate.

Loss of Vitality is loss of the principle of life, and is early indicated by failing appetite and diminishing strength and endurance. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the greatest vitalizer—it acts on all the organs and functions, and builds up the whole system.—Adv.

IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and awful pains—and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done such good work for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. LIZZIE COURTNEY, 108 8th Ave., West, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as did Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published. Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life should give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

A word to the pastors: Look well to the personnel of the official board for the ensuing year. Select stewards with care—do this before Conference. Study well your Sunday school interests. And of vital importance is your charge lay leader. Be sure to get a complete report from Trustees. We are entering a new quadrennium; and great plans are to be set in motion.

NOTES FROM OUR ORPHANAGE. AT JACKSON, MISS.

The summer months have been busy ones in our Orphans' Home. The entire plant has been renovated; the heating and plumbing have been overhauled and put in good shape for the year; and the coal bin has been filled to the top with our winter's supply of coal.

While carpenters and plumbers have been working the matrons have also been busy, repainting and revarnishing the interior until all the woodwork is shining in a fresh coat of paint, while every bed has been re-enameled and all furniture revarnished.

There has been comparatively no sickness during the summer months, although the hospital, all fresh in pure white from top to bottom, looks really very inviting.

There are at present 183 children in the Home. Some are going out all the time while new ones are constantly arriving to fill their places.

School opened September 10, with a splendidly equipped faculty of six teachers. One of our girls will enter Whitworth this fall.

Mrs. S. F. RILEY,
Field Secretary.

(RIGGS DISEASE)

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 26, 1918.
Dear Sir—I wish to state for the benefit of those that have Rigg's Disease, or receding gums, that your formula will cure and put the mouth in good, healthy condition. I could not chew or clean my teeth. My teeth and mouth hurt me and gave me great pain. I used one bottle of your medicine and now my mouth is in good shape again, and my teeth are healthy, all pain has left them, and I can chew, and I heartily recommend and advocate your medicine.

Deeds are greater than words. Deeds have such a life, mute but undenlable, and grow as living trees and fruit trees do; they people the vasuity of time and make it green and worthy. Why should the oak prove logically that it ought to grow, and will grow? Plant it, try it; what gifts of diligent judiclous assimilation and secretlon it has, of progress and resistence, of force to grow, will then declare themselves.—Carlye.

YOUNG MEN GO TO COLLEGE. Government pays expenses and thirty dollars monthly to those between eighteen and forty-five in college classes who enter Students Army Training Corps. For particulars write Meridian College, Meridian, Miss.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The Port Gibson District Institute was most profitable indeed. We spent most of the time in open discussions, and I feel that the ideas brought out were well worth while.

The Seashore District Institute was hampered by sickness and the absence of the presiding elder, which could not be avoided. Rev. W. B. Jones spoke a word in the interest of the Centenary Drive in his behalf. Rev. B. F. Lewis gave us three strong utterances, which were very helpful. Rev. H. F. Tolle gave two most inspiring and helpful messages, one on the Bible and the other on Tithing.

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough presented the Centenary Drive at the Port Gibson Institute.

Last Sunday I had the happy privilege of preaching the opening sermon for Port Gibson Female College. I was glad to find such a fine spirit in the college and the hopeful air about it. More girls are enrolled than for a long time, and many more are to come.

The Sunday school workers of the local church came out in the afternoon and we had an interesting conference on Sunday school work.

I do appreciate the many kindnesses shown me for the work's sake, and pray God's blessings on each and all.

Make an effort to get all Sunday school teachers to read one new book on their work.

Pray for me and the work.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

TEACHER-TRAINING—A TESTIMONY.

Dear Advocate: Want to report some teacher-training work. At one of the consolidated school buildings where I have a regular appointment a teacher-training class has recently been organized and is doing good work. Miss Chesley Hagan is president, Miss Bernice Hudson is teacher, Mrs. J. F. Riley is treasurer, and Mrs. Johnson is secretary. They have an enrollment of twelve and they are enthusiastic and wide awake. They are using "The Pupil, The Teacher, and The School." If it was not for having "dead oodles" of things that demand my attention every moment, we could push the teacher-training work more successfully, for it's really a facinating work. It grips one's very vitals; but so many things coming the few remaining months before Conference it's impossible to concentrate successfully.

The outlook for a good report, spiritually and financially, at McComb is unusually bright. Having the time of my life, thus far, winding up the year's work. Moving on, to the injured, whether the injury is large or small; Mother's first thought in cases of all burns, scalds, cuts, bruises, stings and other skin infections, is Gray's Ointment. Its constant use for nearly a century has made it a family word in every household. Its instantaneous healing effect and its soothing relief to skin infections make it almost indispenasble in the home. Its effect is immediately soothing as well as healing and its application carefully guards against any chance of blood poison. Telephone your druggist, or write W. F. MATRONS WANTED.

J. A. WELLS.
Oak Ridge, Miss.

We are in need of two good matrons at the Orphanage. We want a good woman to take charge of our dining-room and kitchen work. Also a matron for our sewing department. We pay good salaries, furnish room and board. We want Christian women, preferably members of the Methodist Church. We prefer women that have no children, or family ties, that would interfere with their work. Send references, and write at once. Positions open immediately. ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,

"Who Will Win This Battle?"

Your kidneys are the filters of the body. If they become inactive and fail to eliminate the waste matter, they are apt to throw the whole mechanism of the body out of order, thus toxic poisons can accumulate in the system and be as deadly as snake venom.

Besides causing the minor ailments of rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago and backache, neglect of the kidneys is apt to develop into more serious diseases, such as diabetes or stone in the bladder.

Rid the body of toxic poisons—clean the bladder and kidneys and cure the twinges of rheumatism with Anuric and you win the battle of life.

Anuric was first discovered by Dr. Pierce, and has benefited thousands of sufferers as well as appeased and eliminated the ravages of the more serious kidney diseases. Now procurable at any good drug store, or send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10 cents for trial package.

HARTFORD, ALA.—"When I commenced the treatment of Anuric I was in bad shape. My back ached all the time and oh! how my back would ache at night until I would have to get up. I could never sleep all night. But since I have taken the Anuric Tablets my backache is all gone and I can lie down and sleep good and sound all night. Oh! how much better I do feel—no one knows but myself. My advice to all sufferers of kidney troubles is to give Anuric a trial and they will find relief from their trouble."—MRS. B. G. COKER.

WOMEN WORKERS A NEW CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH.

That probably a million and a half women have entered war work already in the United States, is the statement made in "The Church and Women in Industry," a booklet written by Worth M. Tippy and F. Ernest Johnson, representatives of the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Some of the resulting problems and perils are emphatically presented.

"In replacing men, women are working under conditions designed without reference to their peculiar needs," observe the writers. "The change has come too rapidly to allow of devising safeguards in any ample way or of defining standards. This is being done now and the co-operation of the general public will be invaluable. Where long hours are passed over lightly as a 'war measure' and an indication of patriotism, physical and moral disasters are invited. The manufacture of munitions brings in a new train of occupational diseases. Children neglected at home by working mothers constitute another peril.

"Profiting by the experience of England, the United States Department of Labor instituted inquiries into the condition of women workers and found the same disorders, although on a smaller scale, that were discovered in England. The abuses were not so much due to conscious delinquency and greed as to general ill considered state of industrial affairs. All attention was centered on the product: the perils of the process were passed by. With the declaration of war against Germany, the industrial menace and the necessity of a labor policy called for definite governmental action.

"Many of our churches in these industrial centers would do well to offer rooms in their houses for occupancy by these women who cannot find suitable conditions for accommodation. Homes that would never open except to guests, should, in congested sections, open to render a social service. Investigation has shown congestion so great that one bed was used by three persons successively within twenty-four hours. Housing conditions have much to do with morals as well as the physical welfare of women who work, and with the labor turnover. The opportunity for helpfulness cannot be summed up under the term of 'housing.' More important still is 'homing.'

"Let the churches, especially through their women, join for the social and industrial welfare of women workers, giving attention to their organizations, wages, hours, health, housng, recreation and their protection against vice. Let the women not act heartily and selfishly through membership in these outside organizations, but also as definitely organized church women. People must see the churches at work for their welfare."

A special message to the pastors of the United States from Worth M. Tippy says: "A new day is dawning; a day of reviving spiritual earnestness, of multiplied ministries of kindness, of an enlarged use of church buildings for community purposes, and in general participation in movements for public welfare. This is a rare hour in which to stress these matters."—Centenary Bulletin.

MEETING AT MOUNT HOREB.

The Methodist folks who hold membership at a place called Mount Horeb began with their annual protracted meeting last Sunday, August 25, and ran through until Friday, August 30. It was the greatest and most effective meeting this community has experienced in a good many years; in fact, it was the best. The Holy Ghost was present from the very beginning with His convicting and all-convincing power, despite the busy season. The people just simply let the cotton go and crowded the church so until the building could not accommodate them. They stood up in the aisles and wherever they could find room while a great many remained around the windows and doors, listening to the wonderful messages that proceeded from the heart of Brother N. S. Loftus, pastor of the Woodville circuit in Wilkinson County. He preached in demonstration of the Spirit and with power, condemning sin with all his heart. He is truly uncompromising with sin and directs the messages to the hearts of the people with great effectiveness and convinces them that the divine requisite is purity of heart and life and that the promise is, they shall see God. He is very meek and lowly, always attributing all the praise and glory to God and publicly from the pulpit telling the crowds to worship God alone. Eternity can only tell all the good that was accomplished in that glorious meeting. The people were very responsive; it seems that the preacher could have them to do most anything he wanted to for God, so altogether were they under the power of the Holy Spirit. Sectarianism was laid aside and all the people worked like one for the same purpose and the one objective, to glorify God. Brother Loftus never fails to hold up the blessed Christ and the power of His cleansing blood to save earth's vilest sinners. The people dearly love him and cannot show their appreciation of his worth, because of his deep earnestness and holy yearning for the salvation of the lost. The preaching comes with such power at times that the people cry aloud for mercy and pardon. There were 13 added to the membership. The reclamations and conversions were many, the people promising to do their very best in serving God and keeping His holy laws. The free-will offering was $54.25 and is more than this church paid to any other preacher during its revivals.

May God bless him with heaven's richest blessings and make him a still greater power for Christ in leading souls to Jesus. We shall long remember his earnest and soul-stirring sermons. The meeting he held for us three years ago was of like order. May God bless him again, I say.

A friend and member.

THE GOOD MANNERS OF TO-DAY.

By Mrs. Max West.

When is a child well-behaved?

Children's Year has called attention to many needs of children which are problems for their mothers. Malnutrition and the bearing on the child's health of the relation between the inches of his height and the ounces of his weight are questions just beginning to be understood which Children's Year has brought before millions of mothers. But training her child to wear his good manners as if they belonged to him and were not borrowed for the occasion is a problem of no recent origin. Regard for the feelings and desires of others has always been the basis of good manners, but the expression of such regard and methods of inculcating it are very different today from what they were a generation ago. Then "manners" in children consisted in paying rigid deference to their elders and superiors.

Nowadays children are treated more humanly and given much wider latitude in their relations with grown people. Older standards of conduct have very largely changed. Pessimistic observers are prone to regard the change as not altogether favorable, and to attribute to this same loss of deference to the presence and opinion of parents, teachers and other adults a corresponding loss in manners and behavior, and even a real loss of moral fiber.

It must be remembered that the rule, "other times, other manners" applies generally. Life is a very different thing for most children of to-day from what it was for their parents, certainly for their grandparents. With the wholesome and desirable growth of comradeship and association between growing boys and girls and their elders, the old rules of proper behavior must necessarily have given way to something less formal. The change has probably been in the direction of the development of strength of character and independent judgment in children. But that they have also lost something is perhaps equally certain. To remedy this loss by teaching them the rules of true courtesy is the business of thoughtful parents. Such an achievement may well be one of the valuable by-products of the Children's Year campaign which the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor and the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense are conducting.

Good manners in children as well as grown people are the expression of an innate consideration for the rights, privileges and opinions of other people. Years of experience have crystallized this feeling into certain conventional forms of expression, which every child should be taught. The little habits of courtesy, which should be a part of every day life, are really the "outward and visible sign of inward grace." Few acquisitions are more valuable to anyone than that charm of manner which wins the immediate regard of everyone with whom they come into contact. To teach children good manners must be the work of every day and hour. "Line upon line" they will learn the little courtesies. Children are so imitative that very much of this will be unconsciously acquired through imitation of the habits and manners of their elders. "Thank you," and "If you please," and "Excuse me, please," come easily to the tongue if they are frequently heard, and the boy who sees his father rise when a lady comes into the room will instinctively follow that example, even with very little direct instruction. Good manners at table are so necessary to the comfort of everyone concerned that mothers will hardly neglect to watch and direct their children most carefully in this respect. It is very easy to teach children the right use of the knife and fork, to ask for what they want politely, and to chew their food quietly. To fail to do these things has condemned many a man as a boor and a nuisance. In other words, manners often make the man; certainly the lack of manners may unmake him.

Ruptured?

Throw Away Your Truss.

It is too heavy; too uncomfortable; too binding; too big; and it neither relieves nor cures.

The only truly comfortable and scientific device for holding rupture is the BROOKS RUPTURE APPLIANCE.

FREE TRIAL

If you have been wearing a truss you know too well how burdensome, painful, hard and inconvenient it is. The various metallic and hard rubber devices used are nerve racking, always in the way and often cause sores from rubbing, frequently misfit, doing more injury than good. The Brooks Appliance is not a truss but instead a comfortable little air pad securely but snugly supported in place so that it is never in the way, never slips and is so comfortable and natural that you forget you are wearing it. While the air cushion and supports are resiliant so that the appliance gives with every motion of the body its pressure is uniform at all times and as long as it is on the body keeps you absolutely safe against strangulation. It readily makes itself as near a part of the human body as nature permits, with no salves, no harness, and no inconvenience. Try it at our risk and you will never give it up until you are well. Fill out the coupon below and you will not only get full information about ruptures and the appliance but you will see also what thousands of other users think of it. The appliance doesn't cost you a cent if you are not entirely pleased and you are to be the judge.

The above is C. E. Brooks, inventor of the Appliance. Mr. Brooks cured himself of Rupture over 30 years ago and patented the Appliance from his personal experience. If Ruptured write today to the Brooks Appliance Co., Marshall, Mich.

AVOIDED OPERAT ON.

"Was Sure He Would Be a Cripple."

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir:

Enclosed is a picture of my children, and the little man you see seated on the chair is the one who was cured by your Appliance.

He had been ruptured quite a while before we wrote you and I was sure that he would be a cripple the rest of his life. However, some helping hand showed me an ad. in a newspaper, with the result that he was in perfect health through the wearing of a Brooks Appliance for just three months.

The doctor advised an operation, which I would not consent to. Your advice was to put an Air Cushion Appliance on him, and I must say that it is worth ten times what it cost.

I wish you could have seen him before we used the Appliance and now, when he is fully as sound as he could be.

I cannot thank you too much for what you have done for my boy.

Yours respectfully,
OLIVER HANSON.

RUPTURE HEALED AT THE AGE OF 81.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.
Dear Sir:—

Less than a year ago I sent to you for an appliance which came promptly. I at once put it on and it fitted perfectly. I have worn the appliance not quite ten and a half months. It has cured my rupture.

I tried the other day while the appliance was off, to see if I could force anything out of the opening to make a break there but I could not though I tried hard.

Now I think this remarkable, as I am in my eighty-first year. I am an old veteran of the Civil War, born and raised in the town of New Boston, State of New Hampshire, from which place I enlisted in the 10th N. H. Vol. Inft. in Co. C, commanded by Col. M. T. Donahue.

I cannot feel but that I owe you this testimony for I had never expected to be cured. However, thanks be to God I found a cure through the valuable appliance you made for me.

Your friend,
E. A. RICHARDS.
Holly Hill, Fla.

NO MORE TROUBLE.

Mr. C. E. Brooks,
Marshall, Mich.
Dear Mr. Brooks:

Answering your letter, will say we need no more Appliances, as our son has been completely cured by wearing your Appliance.

We recently had him examined, and the doctor said the opening was entirely closed and that it wasn't necessary to wear it longer.

Thanking you for your kindness, I am,
Yours very truly,
Mrs. H. Tollman.
119 Towle Avenue,
Mishawaka, Ind.

PENNSYLVANIA MAN THANKFUL.

Mr. C. E. Brooks, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sir:—Perhaps it will interest you to know that I have been ruptured six years and have always had trouble with it till I got your Appliance. It is very easy to wear, fits neat and snug, and is not in the way at any time, day or night. In fact, at times I did not know I had it on; it just adapted itself to the shape of the body and seemed to be a part of the body, as it clung to the spot, no matter what position I was in.

It would be a veritable God-send to the unfortunate who suffer from rupture if all could procure the Brooks Rupture Appliance and wear it. They would certainly never regret it.

My rupture is now all healed up and nothing ever did it but your Appliance. Whenever the opportunity presents itself I will say a good word for your Appliance, and also the honorable way in which you deal with ruptured people. It is a pleasure to recommend a good thing among your friends or strangers. I am,

Yours very sincerely,
JAMES A. BRITTON.

Ten Reasons for Superiority of the Brooks Appliance.

1. It is the only Appliance of the kind on the market today and in it are embodied the principles that inventors have sought for years.

2. The Appliance for retaining the rupture cannot be thrown out of position.

3. Being an air cushion of soft rubber it clings closely to the body, yet never blisters or causes irritation.

4. Unlike the ordinary so-called pads, used in other trusses, it is not cumbersome or ungainly.

5. It is small, soft and pliable, and cannot be detected through the clothing.

6. The soft, pliable bands holding the Appliance do not give one the unpleasant sensation of wearing a harness.

7. There is nothing about it to get foul, and when it becomes soiled it can be washed without injuring it in the least.

8. There are no metal springs in the Appliance to torture one by cutting and bruising the flesh.

9. All of the material of which the Appliances are made is of the very best that money can buy, making it a durable and safe Appliance to wear.

10. Our reputation for honesty and fair dealing is so thoroughly established by an experience of over thirty years of dealing with the public, and our prices are so reasonable, our terms so fair that there certainly should be no hesitancy in sending the free coupon today.

COMPLIANCE WITH REQUESTS FOR SPECIAL GIFTS TO SOLDIERS IMPRACTICABLE.

Because of conditions which interfere with the carrying out of the desire, it is urged that persons in the States desist from asking that particular articles be sent to specific soldiers in service abroad.

The headquarters of the American Red Cross in France has been receiving a great many requests from parents in this country to supply such things as manicure sets, scissors, and other non-essential articles—as well as some essential things—to men of the American Expeditionary Forces. The requests in question frequently originate with the soldiers themselves, and are sent home and then back to France, reaching the Red Cross headquarters either through Washington or directly from the man's parents or friends. At any rate, by the time the Red Cross organization receives the request, the men have moved, or it is almost certain that their wants have been supplied.

In a letter received at the Washington Headquarters on this subject the fact is emphasized that the Red Cross does not desire to avoid any responsibility whatever in looking after the welfare of the American soldiers. But it is pointed out that it would be useless and impracticable to attempt to comply with requests of the kind mentioned, and a great deal of annoyance and possibly disappointment would be prevented by a thorough understanding of the situation on the part of the people at home. It is earnestly desired that parents desist from such appeals. They may rest assured that the Red Cross, in its own systematic way, is doing everything imaginable of the practicable sort to supply the wants of the soldiers.—Red Cross Bulletin.

Try It! Substitute For Nasty Calomel

Starts your liver without making you sick and can not salivate.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist—has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.

A TALE THAT SHOULD AVAIL FOR THE INSTRUCTION OF MANY.

(From the Journal of the American Medical Association.)

10 a. m.—Oh, dear! Another warm day. Wonder if I'll be abused as I was yesterday. If I am, I'm going to strike. Just disposed of a half-chewed breakfast. We ran for the train, which meant I was so jiggled about and so tired that it took me twice as long to do my work. Hope she gives me an hour or two of complete rest before anything more comes my way.

10:30 a. m.—Two glasses of ice water have just arrived. It will take all the energy I can pump up in the next hour just to warm me up to normal again.

10:50—Half-chewed breakfast did not satisfy her and she has brought some peanuts and started again.

12 m.—Peanuts have been drifting along steadily ever since. Think she has finished them, though.

12:30 p. m.—Decided she wasn't very hungry, and instead of a good, solid dinner sent me down a cold eggnog heavy with chocolate. Could have managed it all right if it hadn't been so unnaturally cold, but that made it terribly difficult to deal with.

1:10 p. m.—More ice water.

1:40 p. m.—Was mistaken about the peanuts; she found another handful in the bottom of her vanity bag, and now I am getting them again.

2:05 p. m.—More ice water.

3:10 p. m.—She has been lifting some heavy books, and as usual used my muscles instead of her arm muscles. You see, she's never had any proper physical education—soft, flabby, slouchy sort. Tired me almost as much as a six-course dinner.

3:20 p. m.—Furtive fellow has brought us a box of caramels, and she has started right in on them.

4:30 p. m.—Have received something like half a pound of caramels. Just heard her say: "Oh, dear, I don't feel a bit well. The milk in that eggnog must have been sour."

6:30 p. m.—We played a set of tennis before dinner, and here I am all tired out and a lot of work to do.

6:50 p. m.—We were invited by a sissy sport with a belt on his coat to have a soda before going home. Had a lemon phosphate and then had to run for the car.

7 p. m.—Fried taters, cucumbers, veal cutlets, catsup, cookies, and canned blueberries. What do you know about that?

7:45 p. m.—We are strolling down to the corner with a knock-kneed guy in a sport shirt and white pants for a pineapple walnut college ice.

8:20 p. m.—Got home and found somebody had made some iced tea. She drank two glasses. I tried hard to keep the tea and the college ice separated, but they mixed it in spite of me. I go on strike.

8:30 p. m.—Have sent back the college ice and the iced tea.

8:40 p. m.—Returned the blueberries.

8:45 p. m.—And the peanuts.

9 p. m.—Trouble to pay—can't get the doctor.

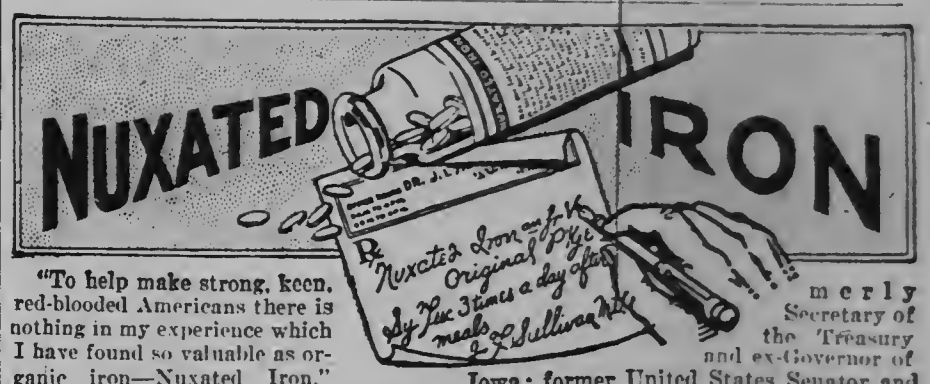
9:17 p. m.—Doctor found at the movies. Mother thinks it is a weak stomach she inherited from her father. Knock-knee suggests it is the beastly weather—the big boob!

9:45 p. m.—Doctor says it is from a bilious temperament. Good-night!

SOLDIER AND SAILOR INSURANCE.

The business of insuring our soldiers and sailors is scarcely a year old, and yet we have written more than $30,000,000,000 of insurance, insuring approximately three and a half million of soldiers and sailors. This gigantic business, employing 10,000 individuals and doing a greater business than the largest insurance company of the world, has all been organized in less than 12 months. Of late the bureau has been doing more than a billion dollar a week business; the total for the month of August will approximate $5,000,000,000 in new insurance. On one day, 92,253 pieces of mail came to the bureau.

It is a great work, an intricate work, a work that every American approves of. More than 90 per cent of the members of our military and naval forces are insured, and this insurance has strengthened the morale of our fighting men and brought comfort and courage to their dependents at home. In addition to the insurance there are added soldier and sailor family allotments and Government allowances to dependents, the disbursement of allotments and allowances already totalling more than $140,000,000.



Rheumatism Back on the Job With its Old-time Fury

No Let-Up In Its Torture.

Pretty soon you will be reaching for the liniment bottle again, for the millions of little pain demons that cause Rheumatism are on the war-path. Winter weather seems to awaken them to renewed fury.

But your Rheumatism cannot be rubbed away, because liniments and lotions cannot reach the disease. It is in the blood, and only a remedy that goes deep down into the circulation, and routs out the disease germs, can rid you of this disabling disease.

S. S. S. has given some wonderful results in treating Rheumatism. Being a purely vegetable blood remedy, it purifies the blood of every germ, and thus removes the cause of Rheumatism. Get a bottle to-day at your drugstore, and start on the right treatment that will get results. Free advice about your case can be had by writing to Medical Director, 26 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Presidential nominee, Chas. A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

NOTICE.

On August 29 the P. E., Rev. G. H. Thompson, had the pastors of the southern portion of the District to meet him for a conference at Waynesboro, Miss. We entered into an organization for this division of the District, this writer being elected director of this division. A motion was adopted to have the best representative possible from the Board of Stewards, W. M. S. and Sunday school on this Missionary Centenary Committee, and that at least one member from each church be appointed by the several pastors on this committee.

This large committee of pastors and laymen is called to meet in the Shubuta Methodist Church, Sept. 24, 1918, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOW A FAMOUS POEM WAS WRITTEN.

Admirers of Sam Walter Foss' poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," are many. The story of his writing it is known to few. He was an enthuiastic traveler, and on one of his trips through England he came, at the top of a long hill, to a little unpainted house set almost in the road, so near it was. Near one side was a queerly constructed signpost finger, pointing to a well-worn path and a sign: "Come in and have a cool drink." Following the path, he found in the side of the bank, some distance from the house, a spring of ice-cold water into which a barrel had been sunk and above which hung an old-fashioned gourd dipper. And on a bench near-by—a wonder—was a basket of fragrant apples, with another sign, "Help yourself."

Scenting a story, he went back to the house, where he found a childless old couple in straitened circumstances, with the rocky farm as their only source of livelihood. But it was rich in the delicious spring water and an abundance of fruit; so the sign was placed guiding to the water, and from the time of the ripening of the first purple plum to the harvesting of the last red apple a basket of whatever fruit might be in season was placed near, that everyone might rest upon the long hill and fresh himself.

The old gentleman explained that they were too poor to give money, so took this way to add their mite to the world's well-doing.

The beautiful thought and its real helpfulness so impressed Foss that he immortalized with his pen the spirit of the ideal home:

"Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish; so am I.
Then why should I sit in a scorner's seat
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man."—Ex.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as an honorable business man and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY MOVEMENT

We are giving, on another page, a full account of the proceedings of the Missionary Centenary Conference held at Dallas, Texas, Sept. 17-19. We desire at this time to state some views based upon careful attention to the program of the daily sessions of that meeting.

In the first place, this is an opportune time for undertaking a great forward movement in our missionary activities. We have previously expressed the opinion that our Church must show itself willing and able to deal intelligently and adequately with the largest questions connected with the evangelization of the world if it would command the allegiance of the men who are freely offering their lives for the preservation of true democracy. The Church is no less charged with the maintenance and extension of the principles of the Kingdom of God than the Government is charged with the establishment and defense of the principles of liberty and justice. In carrying out the specific purpose of each, the two institutions inevitably find themselves in the closest co-operation; but for one of them to neglect its own mission under the mistaken idea that it can thereby best help the other to do its duty, is to lay itself liable to the charge of unfaithfulness and lack of breadth of vision. The Church rightly is actively interested in every detail of the plans to win the war; and it is officially and energetically doing all in its power to re-enforce the activities of the Government. But it must not forget that its peculiar mission is to bring the world to Christ. The turmoil of the times, instead of minimizing that mission, magnifies it, and calls for unusual efforts to carry it out.

The survey of the mission fields of our own Church, at home and abroad, as it was given by carefully prepared maps and charts and in the burning words of those who are most familiar with them, made it plain that this is the time to go forward. We are not unaware of the fact that, in some quarters, the opinion has been expressed that we should delay until after the war the inauguration of a program that calls for so much in the way of the enlistment of time and service and material resources; but the time to meet a critical need is when the need makes itself felt. It is nothing more than common sense to recognize the difficulties that stand in the way of meeting the need, but it is not common sense to become discouraged and dismayed. An optimistic faith will not overlook difficulties; but it will not balk at them.

In the second place, the success of the Centenary Movement is conditioned upon a campaign of education that will not only acquaint our people with the urgent needs of the fields as they exist to-day, but that will also develop the idea that faithfulness to God involves the performance of every known duty upon the basis of a genuine personal consecration. In other words, the Movement must go forward as the result of a great spiritual impulse growing out of a definite religious experience. There is possible a kind of mechanical stimulation of our people into a form of religious activity that will result in large financial returns, but that will be lacking in the essential thing of spiritual life. We are glad, therefore, that the leaders of the Movement are laying due emphasis upon the development of the prayer-life, and are stressing the fact that any permanent growth of the spirit of liberality is dependent upon growth in grace. We might conceivably raise the sum of thirty-five million dollars without a corresponding enrichment of our religious life; even so, we would have done a pitiably small thing. The end of the campaign would be followed by an impoverishment of spirit and drying up of the springs of liberality that would require, possibly, decades to overcome. If first things are put first, other things will follow in due course; and the first thing in all the work of the Church is to bring the individual into a consciousness of his personal acceptance with God. In its essence, the Centenary Movement is a great revival campaign that is intended to reach the remotest bounds of Methodism.

A third conclusion we have reached is this: The financial goal of the Movement will be attained in proportion to the extent to which our people can be brought to adopt a systematic plan of giving such as is involved in tithing. Doubtless many liberal-hearted men of large means will contribute splendid sums for the causes included in the call that is being made upon the Church; but these in the aggregate will fall short of the amount set unless there is a corresponding liberality on the part of those who are not so richly blessed with this world's goods. We cannot afford to assume that the obligation does not rest upon us all equally to give according to our means. The preachers must set the example; and then they must instruct the people in the fundamental principles of stewardship. Only by so doing can we hope to measure up to our full responsibility.

Our fourth conclusion is this: The Centenary Movement, great though it is—and we believe it is the greatest single movement ever instituted by our Church—should not be allowed to interfere with the contemporary success of the other great branches of our service. By action of the General Conference, the Centenary Campaign has right of way for two years; but we must not lose our sense of proportion to the extent of allowing other essential departments of our work to suffer. The one we must do—the other we will not leave undone. In all the discussions that took place, we did not detect any suggestion that it should be otherwise.

That was a great meeting at Dallas. It was largely attended; the program was thoroughly worked out and each speaker was master of his subject; the discussions were kept within reasonable time-limits; the spirit was fine, the association was inspiring, and the whole atmosphere was deeply religious. Its results will, we believe, be altogether gratifying in the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was held.

Where does your duty lie? You alone can determine that in the last analysis. And you fail to find it and do it at the risk of happiness here and hereafter.

TITHING AS A BUSINESS PRINCIPLE.

From the very beginning it has been recognized that money is an essential in carrying on the work of an ecclesiastical organization. At first thought, it might seem that it would have been a better arrangement to make religious activities altogether independent of financial resources. A little reflection, however, enables us to see that this would have made it impossible for religious forces to dominate the whole life of man. Religion and business would have been divorced in fact, and men's love of money would have been unrestrained by any higher motive.

Since money is essential in carrying on the work of an ecclesiastical organization, it becomes necessary to devise some means by which the requisite amount may be secured in a way that involves the recognition of God's claim upon our substance and at the same time makes sufficient allowance for our own temporal needs. This problem, arising in the beginning of organized worship and service, was solved by the institution of the tithe.

We have before expressed our conviction that the Old Testament tithing system is not a mandatory rule under the Christian dispensation. Christ so completely did away with the letter of the law that full allegiance to him recognizes no arithmetical limitations upon his claims. Keeping books with the Lord, in the sense that he is entitled to so much and no more, is entirely contrary to the whole spirit of his teachings. All we have belongs unreservedly to him.

But we cannot ignore the fact that the normal needs of men in their family and social and business relations require a considerable amount of money for their satisfaction. The same obligation that rests upon men to provide for the maintenance of religious activities rests upon them also to provide for their personal needs. It is out of this double obligation that various systems have arisen for providing adequately for the needs of both.

We do not hesitate to affirm that the tithing system is, by all odds, the most equitable and the most satisfactory that has ever been devised. We base our conviction upon the following facts:

1. Experience has shown that the tithe is sufficient to provide for all the normal needs of organized religious work. It was so in Old Testament times, and it is so now. So long as the tithe was paid promptly and fully, the services of the sanctuary were adequately provided for. It was only when the people failed to pay the tenth that difficulty arose and they had to be rebuked for withholding their due. And to-day, in those churches where tithing is largely practiced, the unfailing testimony is that all financial obligations are fully and promptly met.

2. Experience has proved that the ability of the individual who practices tithing as a matter of principle, to meet his personal obligations is undiminished. There seems to be something of a mystery in this—like the cruse of oil that failed not—but the testimony of thousands of conscientious people cannot be overthrown. In fact, this testimony goes to prove that increased pros-

THINGS SPIRITUAL.

Not iong ago a letter came to our office asking that the Christian Guardian go no more to the home of the writer, and the reason assigned was one well known to most editors and familiar to many preachers, that the paper did not devote sufficient space to spiritual things. The good brother wanted a paper which he could read and possibly sleep over on Sunday, but one at which his children would refuse to iook, and one which would hardly dare to recognize that man has a body as well as a soul. We believe in a religion that recognizes and provides for both.

We do not think that God made a mistake in giving man a body, and we do not think that the Church of Jesus Christ makes any mistake in recognizing the fact and acting upon it. On the other hand, we think that one of the gravest of modern ecclesiastical blunders lies in failing to relate the gospel message properly to the ordinary everyday life of the people to whom we appeal. One of the most certain methods of alienating our people from our Church is to assume that that Church has no interest in the life of the people other than the salvation of their souls. This is not only bad theology, it is also directly contrary to facts. If the Church is to represent God to man it must be careful not to misrepresent Him, and this it certainly does whenever it leaves the impression that God is not concerned about the physical well-being of men.

When we look at farm-life we find that the farmer is a "laborer together with God." Never a blade of grass grows, never a grain matures, never one smallest section of any branch of farming prospers without the help of the Almighty, and the most successful farming is simply the story of most complete human adaptation to the divine plans. And there is never a meal prepared without the help of the Most High. All the laws of heat and chemical affinity, all that goes to prepare a meal that shall be pleasant and healthful, are but other phases of the divine power working along with intelligent human skill. And never a house was built, never a railway laid, never a ship constructed without man "working together with God." Why should we deem it "spiritual" to tell the story of creation and to record the healing of the lepers and the raising of Lazarus, and esteem it "worldly" or "carnal" to teli the story of God's work in modern days and to chronicle the wonders of medical science? Surely "God is in this piace," even if some of us know it not.

And in the great world of thought we can trace just as surely the hand of God. The man who cannot see God in the struggle for freedom that has linked together twenty-five nations against the menace of German autocracy is surely lacking in spiritual vision. The faith that sees God in the emergence of Israel from Egypt and that rejoices in Israel's triumphant entry into the promised land, ought surely to see God still more plainly in these tremendous modern movements. The struggle against Egypt and against Canaan's tribes was but child's play compared with the present contest, and surely the man who can feed his soul on the old record, and yet turn from the modern one as something totally different and wholly "unspiritual" has need to pray earnestly for clearer vision.

In discussing this matter we cannot lose sight of the fact that only too often the cry for "spiritual food," the "pure gospel," etc., comes from men who grow restless under the application of the gospel to modern life. Sometimes, when the sermon throws the searchlight upon family iife and exposes meanness, and stinginess, and even cruelty in the home, some religious sinner whose praying covers a world of meanness in his home will breathe out an emphatic protest against such "unspiritual" preaching. We cannot get away from the fact that sometimes the cry for "pure gospel preaching" comes from sanctimonious sinners whose inconsistencies are as patent as their religious observances. In all such cases "spirituality" means simply a state of spirituai ease wholly divorced from spirituai progress.

Let us not blunder into thinking that "spiritual things" are the things of the spirit only and all other things are earthiy or temporal. Let us rather remember that all that God does is "spirituai," and if we are working together with Him we aiso are engaged in spiritual toii. And iet us never for one moment imagine that reiigion is too good a thing, or too sacred a thing for the ordinary everyday life of the ordinary everyday people.—The Christian Guardian.

SIGNIFICANT FORWARD MOVEMENTS IN MEXICO.

By Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield.

A significant fact in the life of Mexico is the establishment of the Union Theological Seminary in Mexico City. Even here in "Our Next Door Neighbor" the same spirit of catholicity face to face with a vast unchristainized peopie is evident, just as obtains in our foreign fields. It promises to be a vital and vigorous factor in the future missionary work of the Republic.

My recent visit to the session of our Conference held in Mexico City furnished me opportunity for meeting the faculty; for observing the student body; and examining the rather impressive building that has been secured for the Seminary. The faculty representing the several denominations is made up of youngeriy, alert and well equipped men trained in the theological seminaries of the several denominations in the States. No serious difficulties have been encountered in this united work. It is evident that possibie theoiogical differences dwindle face to face with an eager student body preparing to carry the Word of Life to a people, four-fifths of whom cannot read and to whom the Bible is a sealed book. The iate Dr. John Butler showed a Bible that he rescued from the flames kindled by superstition and ignorance. How this truly statesmanlike leader rejoiced in the opening of this Union Seminary as the consummation of a larger hope!

It was interesting to sit in council with this leader and the representatives of other Mission interests in the final adjustment of territory between the several denominations that promises to give intensive power and permanent strength to the work of each Church.

A movement on the Puebia District for the training of lay workers, more especially for rural work, under the direction of the Rev. F. F. Woife, district superintendent, has already given definite results. I have just had a report of the recent Institute for exhorters and local preachers, the program for which gained my ready co-operation at the Conference session held last February. A limited sum to cover expenses made possible the gathering of a class of twenty, tweive of whom were picked men from their native viiiages, and eight youngerly men who were studying for the ministry in our Puebla School. The faculty, under the direction of Mr. Wolfe, included three of our most aiert and capable native ministers, the Reverend Messrs. Chageyan, Zapata and Cora. Miss Ayers, our very devoted and successful mission worker, "also did work with the men which they will never forget." Aside from the definite work in Bible training. Mr. Wolfe reports "that the spirit developed among the men who were here is a good investment of the money spent, to say nothing of the work they wiii do on the district which they could not have done without these ciasses." It was serious work—seven hours in the classroom daily, and the young men gave themselves to their task with an eagerness and devotion worthy of ali praise.

Who can estimate the influence of these lay workers as they go back to their villages reinforced in their spiritual life and with a new and larger knowledge of the Word? One of the inspiring things in the Conference session was to hear the story of the sowing of seed by iay workers in viiiages up in tiie mountains resulting in significant growth and fruitage. A singie worker would read the Word and teii the story of the Master to a group to whom the Word had not been revealed. This would result in a group of faithfui people calling for the trained mission worker to instruct and lead them out into the larger things of the spiritual iife.

Our Mexico Conference took hold of the Centenary program with enthusiasm. The mass meeting that fiiied our great central church was addressed by Bishop Denny of the Church, South, and the writer. I am just in receipt of the first copy of the "Boiotin del Centenario" publiished in the interest of the movement.

This reveais the inteiligence and earnest purpose with which our pastors are setting up and carrying out their Centenary plans. It would have sent a thriii through the entire Church if it could have witnessed the genuine enthusiasm with which the Conference adopted its great Centenary program, inciuding the gaining of one hundred new Christian workers, 15,000 new members and a total contribution for the native Church of one million pesos, the latter amount just doubling the sum that has been raised annualiy for the support of the Church. What a chaiienge is this to the Home Church!

Although our dear Dr. Butier passed to his reward the very week the Conference closed, he had gathered about him a group of strong, well equipped men, who with singuiar adaptation and gracious power are giving themselves to carrying out his plans. Although Dr. Butler was feebie, yet he was present at every session of the Conference, and the adoption of the Centenary program gave him joy unspeakabie. I should have said that while the provisions of the new constitution are the most drastic ever written into such a document as reiated to the foreign priesthood, our native workers are utterly untrammeled in their work, and the presiding Bishop had entire freedom in the puipit and on the platform. A cordial interview with President Carranza revealed his sympathetic attitude toward the general program of Christian Missions, in which he has shown in other years a warm interest. This is a source of encouragement and hope to aii Mission workers in the Republic.

My interpreter was Mr. Andres Osuna, then Superintendent of Primary Education for the Republic. He has since been appointed by President Carranza as Provisional Governor of Tamaulipas. Mr. Osuna is the outstanding lay Methodist in the Republiic, an honored and very useful and active member of the Church, South. He is a leader in church work and a most efficient Bible teacher. He bravely shows his colors as a Protestant Christian. Whiie I was in Mexico City, the opposition daiiy newspaper taunted him with being a Methodist "preacher." I had the priviiege of meeting him and his cuitured wife at dinner, together with Bishop Denny. His appointment as governor of the border State of Tamauiipas seems providential in view of the subdivision of the Republic into zones, now assigned to the severai denominations. This State forms an important sector of the zone under the charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Being directly on the border, it links up with the important and prosperous educational and religious program of this Church. I am convinced that the Church, South, has chosen a position of immense strategic importance. In its Christian schools in the border States of our country it can train native workers who shali be equipped to reach and redeem not only the thousands of Mexicans who practically dominate our border towns, but also who shail go over into the neighboring Mexican Sates to carry in their life and word a message of life to their brothers who sit in darkness.

With such a Christian governor as Mr. Andres Osuna, strong and active reinforcement is given to the already vigorous work of Southern Methodism in a zone to which it is bringing the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE MAKING OF AN ARMY.

By Rev. J. B. Gambrell, D.D.,
President Southern Baptist Convention.

I repeat it over and over, few greater things have been said in my day than the following by President Wilson: "Christianity is the most inspiring force in human life." That sentence has in it the explanation of history, from the crucifixion of Jesus down to the present hour. Wherever Christianity has been introduced, men, families, tribes, and nations have taken the upward way, and nations have gone up according as Christianity has been pure. The corruptions of Christianity have made for corruptions in society. The inspiring force of Christianity in individual human lives has made the great people who have made the great States.

It was the gradual substitution of a formal and materialistic faith for the living spirit of Christianity that hardened Germany, and prepared Germany for what has been developed in these latter years. If there had been free religion in Germany, if there had been Christian schools, the present war would never have occurred. Because vital Christianity ceased to dominate the life of the German people, they turned all of their scientific knowledge into channels leading to destruction.

It has come to pass, that the nations of the earth have been compelled to take up arms to defeat a highly developed, scientific, specialized barbarism. I have not a shadow of doubt as to the rightness of the course pursued by the allied nations. My thinking does not run with that of the pacifist who can look on, hands down, while nations are destroyed and civilization is wrecked. The very existence of government carries with it the doctrine of force. There is just as much reason for the war we are in now as there is for the constabulary of the country to resist outlaws, for Germany is an outlaw nation, made so by false teaching.

I haven't any doubt, either, that it is the duty of America to put into the war whatever is necessary to wreck the German military machine and to make it impossible for the ruthless spirit of Kaiserism to project itself into the future. It is a religious duty, or, it may be better to say that it is a patriotic duty, re-enforced by all the sanctions of Christianity. What I have just said implies that every one of us must be in the war, full length and full strength until the huge task we have in hand is finished and finished right.

There have not been lacking indications that in military circles, and even in religious circles, an opinion prevails that the highest type of the soldier can be developed out of the spirit of mere revenge. I have seen, with deep regret, in some of the great publications of the country, expressions about exterminating the Germans. I am perfectly aware of the fact that some military men regard Christianity in its highest expression as having a softening effort on the morale of the army.

Christianity, "the most inspiring force in human life," will make the best soldiers. The best soldier is a man with a clear vision, with a firm grip on eternal verities, committed by all of the sanctions of Christianity to the full discharge of his duty. And he is a gentleman always considerate of the weak and helpless, but terrible in battle.

By the consent of history, General R. E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia was one of the most efficient armies the world ever saw. General Lee, himself, was a devout Christian, and, perhaps since the days of Cromwell's invincible prayers, there never was a more religious army. It was religious, in the real sense. Christianity was free. Preaching at suitable times and places was as free in the army as out in the country. Great preachers of all denominations came and poured out their souls to men. There were great revivals; hundreds were converted; there was no attempt to restrain the emotions of men; hundreds were baptized, and not a few of them became preachers. Many dissolute, disorderly soldiers were converted under the free preaching of men who poured out their souls to their fellow-men, and these dissolute men became orderly. The morale of the army was helped; the order of the army was helped. There was not a thing that goes to make up a great army that was not helped by these free, spontaneous, religious services. These services had the sanction of the great generals.

I, myself, was in a prayer-meeting with General Stonewall Jackson. It was spontaneous. My division was resting by the side of the road. Some one began to sing; others joined in; then there were other songs, and some soldier was called on to pray. There were more songs and more prayers. General Jackson, riding by, took in the situation, rolled off of his horse (he never dismounted, he just rolled off), came and sat down on the ground with the common soldiers and waited with bowed head until the services were concluded. Nobody was hurt; everybody was helped.

The true policy for our army is to open it just as wide as military order and discipline will allow for the greatest preaching that can be done. Leave men free. They will take care of their religious convictions and emotions a great deal better than any set of men out of the camp can do it. Only look after the military order and discipline and then let the religion be free. Religion that is not free is never effective.

I have it from many sources that the light and frivolous entertainments for the soldiers are entirely overdone. The men are in serious business; they are manly; they want to hear the best preaching and they are entitled to hear it, and it is not the government's business what they believe and what they do with the Lord's message when they do hear it. A governmentally managed Christianity will never be powerful. This has been tried in all State churches. The principle is wrong.

That was the strangest reason anybody ever heard given by Secretary Keppel for removing camp pastors. In many cases they are stronger preachers than the chaplains, and when the soldiers hear them they will not hear the chaplains. According to my thinking, the soldiers have a right to hear the best preaching, and it does not belong to the Government to regulate it. My belief is that the Christian people of this country ought to express themselves as favoring the freest possible preaching in the camps. I mean preaching limited only by the necessities of military order and discipline. Nothing will do so much to make a great army as to put a sense of God and of righteousness in the souls of men. Napoleon, the world's greatest master of the arts of war, said, "Soldiers march on their stomachs, but they fight with their souls." Nothing will so strengthen the souls of men as the power of the Gospel.

The people who are sending their sons to the army and are doing so much for the war ought to have every chance to re-enforce them. When I say the people, I mean all of the people—Catholics, Lutherans, Methodists, all sorts equally and alike. This is a sound doctrine and it will prove as good in practice as it is sound in principle.

FILL UP THE HIGH SCHOOLS.

Every year witnesses the strange spectacle in the Province of Ontario of thousands of children dropping out of school life just at the entrance to the high school. Somehow or other the impression has gone abroad that the high school is only for those who purpose to enter professional life, and all others are supposed to complete their education in our public schools. To many of us this seems to be a most unfortunate and costly mistake, and we should like to see it remedied at once. When England is preparing to extend the age of compulsory education to sixteen years, it is surely time that Canada took action in this matter.

The fact that in the past men got along fairly well with two or three years' education is no excuse for allowing the children of to-day to enter life so similarly handicapped, for there can be no doubt that lack of a good education is a handicap, and a serious one, and no one realizes it quite so clearly as the man who has been successful in spite of it. Many a man who is deservedly honored and trusted by his fellows, and who is serving them in some public capacity, even while he knows that he is doing good work for the public, smarts under the sting of the fact that he is an uneducated man, with an uneducated pen and an uneducated tongue. And if this is true to-day, it will be still more true to-morrow. There is no need of our boys and girls being thus handicapped; and parents should see to it that they are not.

In some cases the difficulties in the way are very great, but in most cases they are only very trivial. The Western Christian Advocate puts it this way. It says: "It is positively shocking how trivial have been the circumstances deciding the high school non-attendance. Distance is no longer a sufficient reason, except in rare cases. Farmers have failed to allow their sons to start in September, and then the boy wouldn't go after two or three weeks have passed. Girls have felt their dress was not good enough, and so sentenced themselves to wear poor clothes all their lives. Horses have had a lame leg; trains go an hour too early or too late; the baby sister was sick, or the weather was too hot in September."

Such excuses may seem sufficient now, but they will look pretty small when the boy grows up and begins to realize his handicap. It seems to us that every parent who has suffered from the disadvantage of a meagre education should see to it that his boys and girls are not placed in the same situation, while the parent who has had the advantages of a good education will surely be content with nothing less for his children. It may be that the boy or girl does not realize the need of a high school education, and it should be the parents' business to make that need plain to them; and preacher and teacher can help in the matter. Canada is entering upon a new era of national development, and that development will be helped or hindered as our citizens are intelligent or unintelligent. If you believe that education assists intelligence, see to it that your boys and girls get all the education that it is reasonably possible for them to acquire!—The Christian Guardian.

OUR TRIUMPH IN CHRIST'S TRIUMPH.

In His exaltation to the throne a new hope dawns on humanity. If we believe that the man Jesus sits on the throne of the universe, we have a new conception of what is possible for his brethren. If a perfect human nature has entered into the participation of the divine, our natures, too, may be perfect, and what he is and where he is, there, too, we may hope to come. So this epistle in the second chapter, quoting the grand words of the psalm, which sometimes and in some moods seem more like irony than revelation, "Thou hast crowned Him with glory and honor; thou hast put all things under his feet," comments: "We see not yet all things put under him." Nay, much the contrary. Look at all this weary world, with its miseries and its cares. What has become of the grand dream of the psalm? Has it all gone into moonshine and vapor? "We see not yet all things put under him." Weary centuries have rolled away, and it does not seem a bit nearer. "But we see Jesus crowned with glory and honor." He, and not all these failures and abortions of existing manhood—he is the type of what God means us to be, and of what we all may one day become. This crowned Jesus has "tasted death for every man." And so, brethren, sad, and mad, and bad as men may be, the conquering Captain at the right hand of God's throne is the measure and the pattern of what the worst of us may hope to be.—Alexander Maclaren.

THE CENTENARY CONFERENCE IN DALLAS.

(The following article was prepared at the request of Mr. H. H. Ahrens, Publicity Manager of the Centenary Movement, by his friend, Mr. A. G. Fegert, for many years religious editor of the Chicago Herald.)

Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, laymen and women in attendance on the great Centenary Conference held in Dallas, September 17-19, all attested that it was perhaps one of the most inspiring meetings ever held in the Southwest and that never before had the world's needs and the Church's opportunity been so ably presented. The Dallas papers estimated that there were one thousand visitors present.

The proverbial hospitality of the Southern Methodists of Dallas was a delight to every minister and layman present and one presiding elder was heard to say that he would not mind accepting the eldership of the district to succeed the efficient Dr. Hay, who goes to the Memphis Conference. The Dallas press and the Texas Christian Advocate devoted large space and presented most accurate accounts of the proceedings of the Conference.

As a compliment to the members of the Conference, the Methodist choirs of Dallas united in a great song service on Monday night preceding the opening of the meeting and it was estimated that 2000 people were packed in the City Hall auditorium to listen to the excellently prepared program.

During the Conference, views were presented which left the impression that the world can be conquered for Jesus Christ by a prayerful continued drive both in this country and in the missionary countries of the world. Repeatedly during the Conference the speakers showed that the world war has taught them to think in big terms. Compared to the needs of the mission fields, the opportunities and responsibilities devolving upon the Church for extension of work in mission fields, the sum of thirty-five millions was made to look like an inadequate amount. This view was expressed by Bishop James Atkins in his address on the first evening of the Conference.

Three big objectives were held before the Conference by the Bishop. These were the conversion of the heathen world, the subjugation of the Mohammedan world and the regeneration of the Catholic world. Possibility of being called upon to do evangelistic and missionary work on a broad scale in Germany, France and Russia was referred to not only in the speech of Bishop Atkins, but also by Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, D.D., secretary of the Centenary Movement.

It was explained in one of the many impromptu speeches given by Dr. Beauchamp that "Protestantism must be ready to do reconstruction work in France, Italy, Germany and Russia. The voice of God must be heard in these countries through the Protestant Church. I think we are coming to the place where we may not be able to go into some of these countries as a denomination, but we must give them Jesus Christ. Denominationalism is not the first part of a Christian program, but Jesus Christ must be carried to these people for the reconstruction of the nations."

Prayer as a big factor of the Centenary campaign was referred to by many of the speakers, but the Rev. S. A. Neblett, a missionary to Cuba, who has charge of the fellowship of intercession of the Centenary movement and is mobilizing the spiritual resources of the Church for its success, explained it thus: "If we could get this $35,000,000 and make it as a prayerless offering, our God would spurn it and say, 'thy money perish with thee.'"

A graphic survey of the missionary fields in which the Methodists of the South did work was given by Dr. E. H. Rawlings, the secretary of the foreign department of the Board of Missions. The address was illustrated by stereopticon slides which visualized the work done in Africa, China, Korea, Japan, Brazil, Cuba and Mexico.

The next morning at the session of the Conference in the Adolphus Hotel, representative missionaries from these fields told of work done in these lands. The walls of the room were covered with charts and maps intended to further visualize the opportunities of the fields and the responsibilities for doing the work.

Dr. W. G. Cram, of Korea, was the first missionary to speak. He said that politically Korea was an unfortunate nation, but that the Koreans were adapting themselves to conditions and that spiritually their condition was most gratifying. The people came into the churches by the thousands. Nothing, he said, was effective there except the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ. What the people wanted was not education or philosophy, primarily, but a knowedge of the saving and transforming power of the gospel.

In his introduction of Rev. J. L. Hendry, who for the last thirty years has been a missionary in Huchow, China, Dr. Rawlings said that the letters of Mr. Hendry from the mission field were always hopeful, happy and full of evangelistic zeal and that he was in very truth an apostolic missionary. He, the missionary, referred with great earnestness to the opportunities for aggressive work in China and urged that means be provided to teach the boys of that country to learn trades by which they might earn a livelihood. He cited several instances of the conversion of Chinamen and their subsequent usefulness in the ministry. Other views of the work done by missionaries in China during the past forty years and the possibilities of the future development of China were given at one of the evening sessions of the Conference in the Municipal auditorium by Dr. A. P. Parker, who for forty-three years has been a missionary there. The staying qualities of the Chinese Christians during the Boxer uprising were feelingly referred to by him.

Conditions in Mexico and work among Mexicans were described by the Rev. F. S. Onderdonk. He criticized the attitude of intolerance shown by many Americans towards Mexicans and urged that a spirit of helpful sympathy be shown these people. "The Mexicans are being taught," said Mr. Onderdonk, "that gambling, lying and stealing are right provided they do not carry it to excess." He urged not only more aggressive work from an evangelistic standpoint, but made an earnest plea for a better system of education.

Dr. G. B. Winton, both in his address at the day session of the Conference at which the problems of Latin-American were considered and at the Wednesday night session in the auditorium, referred to the big opportunities for service in Brazil, responsibility for whose redemption rests upon the Southern Methodists. His addresses were of a historic and analytical nature and gave those in attendance sidelights on South American life which explained why this country heretofore has not paid more attention to their neighbors to the south. The present war and the great statemanship of President Wilson have developed a better understanding, so that the missionary's opportunities were largely increased. Dr. Winton is perhaps the best posted man in the Church in matters pertaining to affairs in Latin-America.

Thursday morning's session was devoted to the consideration of home mission problems and askings in connection with the Centenary. One of the big ideas at this session was when the home mission work was described as the evangelization of all the unchurched people in this country.

"Christianize the whole country to make available our whole resources for the world program," urged Dr. O. E. Goddard, secretary of the home department of the Board of Missions. Continuing he said: "If we relate our resources to the spiritual program as we have related our resources to the war program of this nation, there will not be any home mission problem." He said that the great unchurched, unreached multitude of 50,000,000 persons in this country could be transferred into the column of assets instead of remaining in the liability column. More evangelists and more evangelistic efforts were called for in the address. He urged the establishment of night schools in the churches of Southern Methodism.

Most excellent addresses were made by Mrs. M. L. Hargrove, Mrs. Hume R. Steele and Mrs. Downs. Mrs. Hargrove, who is representing the women of the Church in the Centenary program, begged of the pastors not to think too much only in the masculine gender. She and Mrs. Steele and Mrs. Downs pledged the hearty support of the women of the Church to the great undertaking of the magnificent plan. Rev. J. L. Neill, representing the Sunday schools in the Centenary, ably presented the work that the consecrated young manhood and womanhood of the Church expected to do for the redemption of the world. Mr. Neill was given several assurances by Sunday school superintendents present that they would give him their heartiest support in the great work he had undertaken.

Unfortunately on the last night of the Conference it rained, but notwithstanding a heavy downpour, several hundred gathered to hear excellent addresses by Bishop E. D. Mouzon, Dr. W. W. Pinson, secretary of the Board of Missions and president of the Joint Commission of the Centenary, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth and Bishop James Cannon. The messages delivered were helpful and inspiring. One of the fine utterances of Dr. Pinson was: "The Church must keep pace with the times in the spirit of daring. We have been suffering from our littleness. One has said, 'The Centenary has come to save us.' It is set before us as a task that challenges our strength. Our pettiness has well-nigh strangled us. Now by one audacious venture we are to break away and catch the pace of the hour. It is not a question of choice. It is one of necessity. We must meet the challenge of the big world in this big hour, or resign our place of leadership to institutions that are awake."

Viewed from every standpoint, the Centenary Conference was a great success, and there is not the least doubt but that the great Southern Methodist Church will go beyond what is required of it if the enthusiasm of the Dallas Conference is an index.

THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN.

The campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan begins September 28 and closes October 19. While the amount has not yet been announced, it is generally conceded it will be for a larger amount than any of the preceding loans. The American people, therefore, are called upon to raise a larger sum of money in a shorter length of time than ever before. There is need, therefore, for prompt action —prompt and efficient work and prompt and liberal subscriptions.

We have a great inspiration for a great effort. The news from the battle front inspires every American heart, not only with pride and patriotism but with a great incentive to do his or her part. There is no shirking, no shifting of the individual burden, no selfishness by American soldiers in France; there should be none here. We are both supporting the same country and the same cause—our Army in one way, ourselves in another. Theirs is the harder part, but at least we can do our part as promptly and loyally and efficiently as they do theirs.

"What we emphasize forms the character."

A STATEMENT CONCERNING THE ALGIERS CHURCH.

On September 29, 1918, the Algiers Methodist Church was destroyed by a cyclone. The congregation took the wreck and built a temporary church, which is wholly inadequate, and, as you will observe, is very unattractive—but it is what we have.

The location is one of strategic importance, being the only Methodist Church near the U. S. Naval Station. Every one familiar with the situation knows we cannot build adequate quarters unaided. Within the last two years, outside aid has come to the amount of $950. This amount and various other offerings and sacrifices give us $6000, and a beautiful building lot, located between the Naval Station and Canal Street Ferry.

The Church Extension Board has offered to assist us quite liberally, but they insist that our church shall first have a minimum of $10.000 in available cash.

On September 29, 1918, we will commemorate the anniversary of the destruction of our church. We will hold special services and get final reports on our big September DRIVE for building funds. We are asking for Liberty Loan Bonds, War Saving Stamps and Thrift Stamps. In buying these you serve your Country; in GIVING them you will serve the Church. It is imperative for us to get into a place where we can not only house our membership, but also provide for the sailors from the U. S. Naval Station, soldiers and other strangers. The number of sailors varies; sometimes there are between 1200 and 1500 in the U. S. Naval barracks at Algiers—many of these are Methodists.

Algiers has suddenly become a national center, and we want you to help us meet the situation. Help us get into adequate quarters, where Methodism will stand for something—where we can do a great work. The building we have planned will cost about $50,000—war prices. There is no place on the continent where your money will make a better showing in a church building than right here.

Help us, we beg you in Jesus' name, and for His honor and glory. Fraternally,

C. C. WIER, Pastor.

A WORD FROM BISHOP LAMBUTH.

The following extract is taken from a letter to Dr. E. O. Watson, Secretary of War Work, written by Bishop Lambuth under date of August 20, from "overthere":

"It is customary, I believe, to wait a few days after landing to write back to the U. S. We made a safe and swift voyage and had opportunity on the way to hold services with both the officers and the soldiers. Dr. Selecman and Brother Emmons both spoke, as well as myself, and the conviction has grown upon us that the opportunity for service among our boys is unlimited. The field of opportunity is unparalleled in the history of Christian effort. Already we have had the privilege of hearing from their own lips that a number of men have given themselves to Christ, and a few have determined to offer for Christian service and for the Christian ministry at the close of the war.

"I have met a number of North and South Carolina boys. We grow daily in our admiration of the high ideals among our men and thank God for the Christian sentiment which prevails in the communities from which they come."

PREACHER VERSUS KAISER

No class of men has done more than the preachers to create a national consciousness strong enough to make possible the entry of the United States into the universal war with ideals so high that our country has become the marvel of the world. Through the years these Christian advocates have faithfully toiled until a spirit and purpose of "I am my brother's keeper" has possessed the nation. While all preachers are entitled to this credit, it belongs chiefly to those who are now deceased and to those who are superannuated by reason of age and physical impairment.

The past failure of the Church to provide an adequate support for its preachers, who are retired from active work because of age and physical infirmity, has created conditions of want and deprivation among them that should shame clear-thinking and warm-hearted people into action that will free the Church from the stigma of neglect, and relieve the distress it has unwittingly caused.

Millions of Liberty Bonds have been and will be purchased to win the war. What better investment can beneficent owners make of these bonds, than to donate part of their holdings to an endowment fund for the support of superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers?

The Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., urgently requests every member and friend of said Church to donate at least one Liberty Bond for the purpose stated. If you want a part in this splendid work, write

The Missionary Centenary an Adequate Program.

Rev. J. B. Adams, presiding elder of the Bowling Green District, Louisville Conference, says:

"The Church has had the Gospel of Christ, but not His vision. His standards have been theories unapplied. The world war has brought the Church face to face with new world tasks, and the answer of our Christian citizenship is expressed in the Y. M. C. A., and the Red Cross.

"The pulpit has had no program, outside of these by-products of the Church, big enough to appeal to the people in these days of sacrificial consecration. The Missionary Centenary offers to the ministry an adequate theme, fraught with world interest, pitched to the highest key. It promises a new forward-looking evangelism and an awakened, rebaptized Church, come again to its proper place of leadership among the institutions of men."

HOW IT WAS DONE IN THE WESTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The Western Virginia Conference met in Logan, West Virginia, September 4, 1918. The second day of the session was devoted to the Centenary Movement. Dr. W. G. Cram, Dr. J. L. Neill, and Mrs. J. W. Downs, of Nashville, Tenn., had charge of the program which was carried out in full. Bishop Hendrix, the presiding officer, rendered excellent service, and Rev. F. S. Pollitt, who has just closed a successful quadrennium on the Fairmount District, was chosen as Conference Missionary Secretary.

The Conference Board of Missions recommended the acceptance of the allotment of $367,625 and it was unanimously adopted by the Conference.

A feature of the night service was the stereopticon lecture by Dr. Cram, after which Bishop Hendrix spoke for half an hour, dwelling on the needs and opportunities in home and foreign fields.

W. B. Smith, a prominent layman of the Conference, gave a pointed and forceful address on "Can We Put It Over?" and when he had finished every one agreed that it could and would be done in the bounds of the Western Virginia Conference.

The spirit of the Conference was fine, and members and visitors alike agreed that the Missionary Centenary was a most worthy enterprise, calling forth the faith and sacrifice of the people of Western Virginia.

GREAT DAY FOR THE KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.

"Centenary Day" as observed in the Kentucky Conference, which met at Cynthiana, was an unqualified success. Doctors E. H. Rawlings, J. J. Stowe, J. T. Meyers, members of the team from the General Board, were present, while Miss Belle H. Bennett, President, and Mrs. R. W. MacDonell, Secretary of Deaconess and City Mission work of the Woman's Missionary Council, added much to the effectiveness of the program and insured its enthusiastic reception on the part of the women present.

The various fields were reviewed, the departments of Stewardship and Intercession were thoroughly discussed and the entire program was carried out as outlined. Rev. O. B. Crockitt, one of the most progressive men of the Conference, was made Conference Missionary Secretary and the allotment of $669,678.42 was heartily accepted. Many expressed themselves as being profoundly interested in the Movement and deeply impressed by the day's work. The opinion seemed to prevail that this "Centenary Day" was the greatest day the Kentucky Conference had ever known.

"FROM MISSOURI."

"Resolved, That the Missouri Annual Conference hereby accepts the allotment of $795,533.70 as its share of the Centenary Missionary financial obligation, and pledges to the General Board of Missions its hearty support in carrying out the details of the campaign."

Thus, in brief, is told the result of "Centenary Day" in the Missouri Conference, a day full of interest and enthusiasm, from the opening address in the morning until the last picture of the striking stereopticon lecture, and the last impressive word of the evening address by Bishop Murrah told the immense crowd of preachers, laymen and women of the great need in home and foreign fields and of the wonderful opportunity for loyal Methodists to do a great work in a great way. Running true to traditions, these Missourians but needed to be "showed" before accepting in a fine, splendid way their part in this great forward movement of the Church. Doctors A. P. Parker, C. G. Hounshell, and Mr. B. W. Lipscomb, of Centenary Team No. 3, were present and had charge of the program.

ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT WORLD.

The "Centenary Movement" will doubtless produce three results.

FIRST—It will expand the thinking of the Church at large. The idea of a world-work will produce a world-thought, which has never before grasped the multitudes. That world-view will produce a sense of world-obligation in those whose ideas of obligation have hitherto been only local.

SECOND—This broader view, and expanded sense of obligation, will open the avenues of liberality, and raise the flood-gates for the outflow of money, to meet the outcry of heathenism, and bring the "water of life" to refresh the long-famished millions of the pagan world.

THIRD—The Centenary Movement, together with the present world-war, will bring the world to feel its need of Christ as never before.

Christ will be more real, both to the darling son as he dies on the battlefield, and to the broken-hearted parents receiving the cablegram, "Killed in action." Christ in the future, will be recognized in his true relation as the one and only absolute need of humanity.

This will make our world another and different world from what it has ever been since the tragic death of the Son of God.

BISHOP H. C. MORRISON.

HOW MISSION SCHOOLS CONTRIBUTE TO THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL. PEOPLE DO NOT WANT CANDLES BUT CHRIST.

Rev. G. D. Parker, of Brazil, gives a most interesting account of the conversion of a prominent Brazilian and the turning of a whole family to Christ through the efforts of a Christian missionary teacher.

Dr. Parker says:

"Jose Vinente Godinho, General Manager of the Federal Telegraph Company of this city, and one of the patrons of Union College at Uruguayana, was taken ill and was visited by Mr. Weaver, the principal of the College. On one of these visits the sick man offered the services of his daughter, a talented musician, as assistant organist in our Church. As the family had no connection with the Church and were recognized as Romanists, the offer was very unusual, and when extended to me by Mr. Weaver, I immediately called on the man to thank him.

"I found him critically ill, but he received me cordially and proved to be a well educated and cultured gentleman, but without Christ and without hope. He was a materialist, a strong anti-Romanist, and not far from atheism. After an interesting talk with him I asked to call again, as I recognized that he was in utter darkness and realized also that his physical condition was hopeless.

"In my subsequent visits in a very short time he was led like a little child to accept Jesus as his Savior. He was amazed at the simplicity of the old, old story. He had been looking at Christianity through the rubbish of Romanism which obscures the Christ in the worship of the Virgin and the saints. As soon as he saw the plan of salvation by faith in Christ and the repentance of sins, he embraced it, was baptized, received into Church fellowship and partook of the Sacrament in the presence of his family, his radiant face reflecting the new-found joy in his heart.

"He lived only a little more than a month after his conversion, during which time I visited him daily, having prayer with him and his family, reading the Scriptures and singing the hymns that express our hope of eternal life; but he lived more during that short time than during all the fifty years of his previous life.

"From his death bed he directed an active campaign against sin in his own family, persuading even the servants to accept Christ as their Savior. He sent his children to Sunday school and church services, and mourned over his wasted life. Although he was now ready and anxious to be with his Lord, he longed for an opportunity to give a few years to His service.

"His wife, who up to the time of her husband's conversion had been an ardent Romanist, was greatly impressed, but had not fully given up her ancient faith, when one morning he had a sinking spell, and she, thinking that the end was near, attempted to place a lighted candle in his hand, as the Roman custom is; but he refused to have it, saying, 'What I want is not a candle, but Christ, the Light of the World.' Several hours later he peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. His conversion made a great impression upon his twelve children, the majority of whom are following their father even as he followed Christ, and his complete acceptance of the living Savior proved a convincing example to the entire community."

Thus, through the Centenary Movement, which is seeking men and women for life investment and to secure larger gifts for Christian schools in heathen lands, is afforded another opportunity to open the doors of many homes otherwise closed to the Gospel, and, instead of candles and meaningless ceremonies, to present to the people of a splendid country an open Bible and the living Savior. In every place where we have mission schools established there should be appointed a visiting missionary to follow up and conserve the influence of the school, which should first and always be a means of missionary propaganda.

WANTED HER DAUGHTERS EDUCATED.

Among the students at the Collegio Piracicabano, founded by the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, in 1881, is a widow who came 1150 miles, through undeveloped country full of wild Indian tribes to educate her daughters. The young ladies could barely read when they first came to the school, but they have made rapid progress and both they and their mother are interested in the Gospel. The uncle of these girls was sent by the Federal government to accompany Mr. Roosevelt on his travels through the wilds of Brazil.

THE UNUSED TOY.

I know a little boy
Who had a little toy
And wouldn't let other boys use it,
For fear they would destroy
Or otherwise annoy
Or some way or other abuse it!

And strange it is to say,
It went away one day,
And nobody ever could spy it!
And the folks they say it may
Have gone away to stay
'Cause he wouldn't let other boys try it.

GETTING UP.

During the year John had been mixed up with all the fun—it seemed as though good times bobbed up before him at every turn. It was very hard for him to turn down a chance for a gay lark. The teacher had spoken to him several times about his grades; but the fun kept coming his way, and he put off the thought of the final examinations from week to week. Of course he had no intention of failing. In some way he would get through—he always had! Things would come out all right. Meanwhile he was having a jolly time.

The last few weeks of the year he began to realize how things were going. He told the boys he would have to cut out the play and "knuckle down" to study, and he did. But it was too late; he failed!

The professors shook their heads. They were very sorry. John was good-natured, lively, and well-meaning, and they liked him; nevertheless, he had been a great worry to them. Teachers do not object to pupils having good times if their studies do not suffer neglect.

All this was gall to John; but the worst was to come. He must face his father! He suddenly wakened to the fact that he really thought a great deal of his big-hearted, generous, patient father. John had not thought much about it before, but now that he had so disappointed him, his eyes were opened; he knew now that his father's opinion meant something to him.

"I've heard, John," said his father, as John came into the house, "you've failed." His voice held no impatience or reproof.

John was surprised; he had expected reproof. He knew he deserved it. "I—I'm sorry," he said.

"Yes, I'm sorry, too. But there's something worse. I shall be much more sorry if it stays a failure. Once in a while we fall down; but we don't have to stay down. Stay down or get up; you are the one to decide that. I'm not out of patience. I'm not scolding. I'm just sorry. I failed at different times myself. I have faith in you; I don't believe you are going to let this failure stay a failure. And now you must think of the future. What would you like to do next year?"

John looked straight into his father's eyes. "I'd like to try to get up. I'll take the year over!" he said, squaring himself on both feet.

It was hard; but he did, and at the end of the next year he faced his father with a big smile. He had not stayed a failure!—Anne Porter Johnson. In The Visitor.

HOW THEY MADE UP.

It was hot and muggy, a very trying day. Even the grown-ups had found it hard to keep sweet and pleasant, so one could not be greatly surprised that Bobby and Betty had given up the effort soon after breakfast, and things had steadily gone from bad to worse. The climax came when Bobby insisted on playing railroad and having a terrible wreck in which Arabella Sophia and Gertrude May, Betty's best-beloved dolls, must suffer. "I just will not play any such thing, Bobby Martin. You can be smashed up yourself if you want, but I am not going to have them, so now!" declared Betty very decidedly, gathering her family in her arms and going on the plazza where mother was sewing.

"You're a mean, selfish thing, and I won't play with you any more," retorted Bobby.

"Girls are no good anyway. I wish I'd had a brother instead, then I could have had some fun."

"Girls are lots better'n boys," responded Betty promptly, determined not to be outdone. "I never would have gone and had a brother if I could have helped it. I think they're just horrid!"

"Children," said mother very gravely, "that is enough. I did not think my dear little boy and girl could possibly say such dreadful things to each other. You must not play together any more, nor speak to each other until you have apologized for talking so."

"Which of us has got to do the 'pologizing?" asked Bobby.

"Both of you," answered mother.

"I think Bobby was the worst, so he ought to 'pologize first, oughtn't he?" asked Betty. But mother made no reply to this query.

At first Bobby made a great show of enjoying himself playing smash-up alone, and Betty talked and laughed with her dolls at a great rate; but before long they both gave up the struggle.

Bobby sat on the steps and wandered if the morning would ever come to an end.

Betty betook herself to the hammock with Arabella and Gertrude; but for some unexplainable reason she found them very tiresome company, and she too thought it was the longest morning she had ever known.

"I—wish I had let Bobby have his old smash-up," she said to herself.

If she could only have known it, Bobby was deciding within himself that it was very much more lonesome without Betty than he thought it would be.

"She's awful good for a girl," he thought, "and—I don't really b'lieve—I'd want to swap her for a brother, after all—he might want to boss me."

He glanced furtively over at Betty, and was almost sure that there were tears in her eyes. Being a boy he could not relieve his feelings by crying, of course, but there was a big lump in his throat; he wished he had not spoken as he had.

"It is sort of mean in me to make her speak first. Father say boys must always be very courteous and thoughtful of their little sisters if they want to be gentlemanly. I'm—glad he didn't hear me."

"My head aches ever so hard, mother," said Betty plaintively, and Bobby was sure now of the tears. His heart gave a distressing thump. What if Betty should be sick? Five—ten minutes dragged slowly by, then Bobby jumped up and ran to the hammock where Betty was curled up among the pillows.

"Shut your eyes tight," he said.

Betty obeyed promptly and Bobby bent down and kissed her.

Instantly Betty sprang up and threw her arms round his neck.

"I didn't mean what I said, not one single word," she sobbed.

"And I didn't either," answered Bobby. "Have we 'pologized, mother, and can we play now?"

Mother smiled a little as she kissed them both. "Promise me first that the next time you get angry you will stop and count ten very slowly before you speak."

"All right, we will try to remember, only I don't b'lieve we will get angry again right off," said Bobby.

"You can have a perfectly dreadful smash-up if you want, Bobby," said Betty as they went off hand in hand. "I don't care if Arabella and Gertrude are scared to death."—Kate S. Gates, in Zion's Herald.

THE USEFUL CHESTNUT.

With the possible exception of the white pine, the chestnut is our most valuable timber tree and it cannot be replaced. Each of the other important trees has another that is almost like it from the industrial standpoint—that is, could take its place in manufacturing, where that special wood is needed. Kill that species and its near duplicate would replace it. But the chestnut has no brother in qualities. First of all, a chestnut tree is a veritable factory. It grows. Take its output, its timber, and there is left in the earth a huge root system that will throw fifty sprouts as high as a man's head the first season. They keep right on growing with great speed, and in a surprisingly short time there is a cluster of fence posts, then a group of small telephone poles, then a trio or quartet of trees for railroad ties, large telephone poles, or for the sawmill.

While the sprouting acorn is making a baseball bat, this chestnut stump makes three railroad ties. Cut them down and the old stump will do it again and again. Even the forest fire, when it kills the top, leaves the root system, and the chestnut tree can come again like a Western town that rises full of hope after a fire.—Outing.

"There is a great deal of unmapped country within us which would have to be taken into account in an explanation of our gusts and storms."

TITHING AS A BUSINESS PRINCIPLE.

3. The system is so simple in its general principle that its practice involves no perplexing difficulties and no elaborate mechanism. It adapts itself readily to every individual case in every situation of life. It is automatic in its adjustments. It requires nothing but a good conscience and a sane mind for its perfect operation.

4. It undoubtedly received the approval of Christ. The well known passage, "Ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone" (Luke 11:42), must not be pressed too far in its bearing upon the case; but any fair interpretation must yield at least the idea of Christ's approbation.

For these reasons—that it provides adequately for the normal needs of the Church, that it leaves the individual abundant resources for his own needs, that it is simple, and that it received the approval of Christ—we believe tithing as a business principle should become the general practice of Christians throughout the world.

A VISIT TO COLUMBIA, MISS.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

By one of those inexplicable slips of the pen, the Editor was reported last week to have made a visit to Columbia, La. Columbia, La., is we doubt not, a delightful place to visit, and we have some friends there whose hands we should like to grasp. But it was our privilege this time to go to Columbia, Miss., that beautiful and prosperous litle city on the banks of the Pearl.

The occasion of the visit was an invitation from Rev. W. M. Sullivan, the greatly-beloved pastor, to preach for him on the Sunday he was to be at Summit, Miss., in a meeting. It was a pleasure to us to accommodate our friend and brother and at the same time enjoy the fellowship of his splendid people. For sentimental reasons also we looked forward to the trip. On Friday, the thirteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and — well, figures are dry things anyway; but the present flourishing city of Columbia is within three miles of our birthplace. It is true, we remember very little about it, for the son of an itinerant Methodist preacher is not likely to recall many of the scenes of his early childhood; but there is a satisfaction in looking upon them in later years and allowing imagination to picture the details of those early days when life was simple and wants were few.

A splendid congregation greeted us Sunday morning in the elegant church that was dedicated a few weeks ago by Bishop Kilgo. We marveled at the beauty and completeness of this modern church building. It is a source of pride not only to the Methodists, but to the whole community as well. We are thoroughly convinced that the standing of a religious denomination in a community is determined largely by the type of the building it worships in. Money spent for the erection of an attractive and commodious church is a good investment for the Kingdom.

At the evening service, we had the privilege of listening to an interesting and uplifting sermon by Brother Keiser, a young Baptist minister reared in the community and much beloved by all the people, who was soon to leave for the seminary. By invitation of the pastor he delivered his parting message in the Methodist Church.

We are deeply appreciative of the courtesies extended us by Sister Sullivan, the officials of the Church, and various friends and kinsmen. The only unpleasant thing in connection with the whole trip was having to get up at 4 o'clock Monday morning to catch the train for New Orleans.

THE DALLAS TRIP.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

The 22-hour run from New Orleans to Dallas is pretty tiresome when the traveler has to make it alone. But pleasant company relieves the difficulties of the situation. Leaving New Orleans on Monday afternoon, we had Coleman and Jones (J. R., of Mississippi). Along the way, we picked up Holmes, of the New Orleans District, who had gone up the road on Saturday to hold a quarterly conference, and May and Bowman and Briscoe Carter and Henry, of the elders. and Dodson and Doss, of the pastors, and Breithaupt, the wide-awake Sunday school field secretary of the Louisiana Conference. After we got into Texas, a number of the brethren joined the party. We reached Dallas just about on schedule time Tuesday morning. As other trains got in, the Louisiana delegation was increased by the arrival of Atkinson, Lutz, Joyner, Snelling, Means, Booth, and Cline, a consecrated layman from Baton Rouge. The record would be altogether incomplete without mention, also, of Mrs. Niebergall, of New Orleans, and Mrs. Holt, of Crowley.

Dallas is a big town. Its population is considerably less than that of New Orleans, but its tall buildings and busy stores and crowded streets give evidence of great energy and tremendous resources. Its hotels would do credit to any city in the world. It has numerous magnificent churches of all denominations. Through the courtesy of Mr. W. C. Everett, the genial and efficient manager of our Publishing House at Dallas, the Louisiana delegation enjoyed an automobile ride over the city Thursday afternoon. Many beautiful houses adorn the well paved streets of numerous residential sections. One presiding elder remarked that Dallas would be a fine place in which to live. Doubtless many others thought the same thing.

Of course we visited Southern Methodist University. The site of this great institution is of the "made-to-order" kind. And the men who gave the order evidently knew exactly what they wanted. The administration building and the Woman's Building worthily represent the university idea; the dormitories will doubtless have to be enlarged and improved as the resources of the institution become adequate to its needs. The Church at large cannot afford to fail to make ample provision for the development and maintenance of this school that means so much for the training of its leaders, both clerical and lay, in the territory west of the Mississippi. If we think of its endowment and equipment in terms of less than millions, we simply acknowledge the restricted range of our own educational outlook. We had the pleasure of brief conversations with Dean Hoyt M. Dobbs, of the School of Theology, and Professors Seay and Cuninggim and Kern. The opinion we had previously formed of the outstanding ability of these men is confirmed by the splendid work they are doing in their present positions.

The Adolphus Hotel was the headquarters of the Missionary Centenary meeting. The meeting place was the Palm Garden, some seventeen or eighteen stories above the ground floor. The elevator service was not all that could be desired, but the fact that the experienced operators had been withdrawn for war service and that the inexperienced women tenders were altogether attentive and obliging was taken into consideration, and very little complaint was heard. We tried walking down one time—we were never in a hurry after that. The sensation of going "round and round" on a spiral stairway that seemed never to end was perhaps worth while for the sake of the exercise and the experience; but it is much easier to say "going down," even if the first call does fail properly to impress upon the operator the fact that you would like to have the car stop in order that you might become a passenger therein.

The sessions of the Conference were well-attended. In fact, the capacity of the hall was taxed to its utmost to accommodate those who were eagerly desirous of getting all that was to be had from the program. There was an air of business about the proceedings that must have impressed even the casual visitor with the seriousness and greatness of the matters in hand. There was no undue haste, but the passing of the time was kept track of, and everything moved according to schedule. Dr. Beauchamp is an admirable presiding officer, never in a hurry, never in a quandary, always knowing exactly what is to be done next and whom it is to be done by. The missionary secretaries and their assistants were thoroughly prepared to present fully and forcibly all the details of the plan of campaign. Rev. J. L. Neill, of the Mississippi Conference, who has recently been placed in charge of the Department of Missionary Education in the Sunday-school, is magnifying his office. Mr. H. H. Ahrens, of Louisiana, who is in charge of the publicity work of the Centenary Movement, showed his skill and ability by the manner in which he secured the hearty co-operation of the Dallas newspapers in giving the proceedings of the meeting to the public. Bishops Atkins, Mouzon, Ainsworth and Cannon contributed largely to the success of the Conference by their presence and active interest. We have not the space to speak at length of others whose eminent service to the Church has given them a strong influence in its councils. We cannot forbear, however, to mention Dr. A. P. Parker, for forty-three years a missionary to China, merely to shake hands with whom is an inspiration, and Rev. G. C. Hounshell, whose spiritual force impresses itself profoundly upon the audience.

One of the most pleasant social occasions of the entire Conference was the luncheon of the Louisiana delegation at the Oriental Hotel on Thursday. Every Louisianian in attendance, so far as we know, upon the Conference was present. The menu was remarkably good; everybody seemed to be in good spirits; and the four or five talks that were made had the virtue of being short and to the point.

Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, and Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, were the representatives of the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences, respectively, at the meeting. We enjoyed goodly fellowship with both.

The meeting closed Thursday night with addresses by Bishop Ainsworth, Bishop Cannon, Bishop Mouzon, and Dr. Pinson. Unfortunately for us, we had to leave on an 8:30 o'clock train and so miss the closing service, but the reports that come to us are to the effect that it was a great occasion. The whole Conference was a notable success.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The General War-Time Commission of the Churches held its second annual meeting in Washington, D. C., on last Tuesday.

According to an announcement by Bishop Atkins, the allotment to the Louisiana Conference for the Missionary Centenary fund is $707,898.

We extend our thanks to Rev. L. E. Crooks ,of Greensburg, La., and Rev. D. H. Crowson, of Potts Camp, Miss., for subscriptions to the Advocate which they recently sent us.

Every presiding elder of the Louisiana Conference attended the Missionary Centenary Conference at Dallas, Sept. 17-19. In addition, several pastors and laymen were there.

Rev. M. R. Jones, of Raleigh, Miss., sent us three new subscriptions to the Advocate last week, with some kind words concerning the value of the Advocate in the homes of our people. We thank him.

In a business note to the Advocate office, Rev. R. T. Nolen, of the Vardaman Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, says that he is happy in the work of the pastorate. It is, indeed, a most blessed calling.

Rev. Briscoe Carter, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, honored the Advocate office with a call on Tuesday of this week. As usual, be was in a good humor, and full of "pep."

A note from Rev. J. H. Grice, our pastor at Van Cleave, Miss., informs us that the work on that charge is progressing nicely. The financial outlook is encouraging, and the pastor expects to have everything in full at Conference.

Rev. F. J. McCoy, of the Houma charge, Louisiana Conference, assisted in a meeting at Bayou Chicot recently. We regret that a previous engagement prevented our accepting his invitation to fill his own pulpit the Sunday he was absent.

Rev. W. H. Lane, pastor of the Rankin Street Church, Jackson, Miss., reports that every department of his work is moving along splendidly. He expects to have all collections in full by Conference. We thank him for five new subscriptions to the Advocate.

Brotber W. H. Underwood, of Watson, La., favored the Advocate office with a call last Thursday. He had come to New Orleans to secure medical treatment for one of his daughters at the Touro Infirmary.

We had the pleasure while in Dallas of shaking hands with Dr. W. D. Bradfield, Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, and Dr. A. C. Millar, Editor of the Arkansas Methodist. It was an inspiration to look into the faces of these strong men of Methodism.

Rev. R. W. Tucker assisted Rev. J. L. Cady in a meeting at Olive Branch, La., last week. A note from Brother Cady informs us that Brother Tucker preached some great sermons, and that much lasting good was done. We thank Brother Cady for two renewal subscriptions, which he sent us.

It has been announced in the Dallas newspapers that Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, a member of the theological faculty of Soutbern Methodist University, will return to the pastorate this fall. He is a member of the St. Louis Conference, within the bounds of which it is presumed he will receive an appointment.

Rev. W. F. Baggett, of Picayune, Miss., was in the city last week, having brought his wife to the Touro Infirmary for treatment. The Editor regrets he failed to see him when he kindly called at the Advocate office. We were at that time in Dallas, attending the Missionary Centenary Conference.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, attended the meeting of the Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference at Mansfield last week. The purpose of the meeting was to consider important matters in connection with the development of Mansfield Female College.

Rev. W. W. Nelson, of the Scotland charge, Mississippi Conference, writes that everything is moving along nicely on his work. Although there has been a considerable increase in the assessments this year, all collections will be reported in full. We thank him for two subscriptions to be added to our files.

Rev. W. H. Giles, the young Georgia preacher who succeeded Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., on the Donaldsonville charge, Louisiana Conference, is making a good record in his work. He recently sent us two subscriptions to the Advocate, which is a good sign that that he realizes the value of the Church paper in the homes of his people.

A note from Rev. W. L. Linfield, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, informs us that Bishop Kilgo is expected to be in Laurel, Miss., on October 6. Our understanding is that First Church will be dedicated at that time. Our people at Laurel may look forward to some great preaching by the Bishop.

It has been officially announced that Rev. Sam R. Hay, D.D., presiding elder of the Dallas District, has been transferred to the Memphis Conference. The supposition is that he will be appointed to one of the leading Memphis churches, though, of course, no information on that point is available. He has done a great work in Dallas.

Mansfield Female College has had the best opening in its history, according to reports reaching us. On the opening day, there were 82 boarders enrolled, and ten others who had engaged rooms were expected within a few days. Already several applicants have been turned away. There is great need for enlarged facilities at Mansfield.

A personal note from Dr. R. A. Meek informs us that he has suffered from malaria considerably during the summer, but his general condition is much improved, and he expects to report to the North Mississippi Conference for active service when it meets in November. This will be good news to his many friends throughout the Church.

Rev. L. H. Floyd, of the Okolona Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, sent us last week six subscriptions to the Advocate, which carries him "over the top," so far as the quota assigned his work is concerned. We thank him for his faithful attention to this matter. It is not surprising to us that he says that this has been a good year with him.

Rev. G. B. Love, of the Marietta Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, writes us that he has just closed a fine meeting at Ozark church, one of his appointments. Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Guntown, did the preaching. Much good was accomplisbed, and there were 21 accessions to the Church. Brother Love has our thanks for 4 subscriptions to the Advocate, which he sent us.

According to the Pacific Methodist Advocate, the Northwest Conference declared itself in favor of granting full laity rights to women by a vote of 33 to 1. It also voted by a good majority in favor of the expression, "Christ's Holy Church," in place of "Holy Catholic Church," in the Creed. We learn from the Arkansas Methodist that the recent session of the Denver Conference voted unanimously in favor of granting laity rights to the women.

In sending us four subscriptions to the Advocate, Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of the Franklinton charge, Louisiana Conference, informs us that he has just closed a fine meeting at Fitzgerald church, in which he was assisted by Rev. H. C. Murphy. The preacbing was of a high order, and the membership of the church was greatly revived. All the people of tbe community co-operated in the meeting, and the church could not hold the congregations. There were four accessions.

The preachers and people of Shreveport, La., are evidently determined to leave nothing undone by way of preparation for the John E. Brown union meeting, which was scheduled to begin there this week. According to reports reaching this office, preachers and laymen, and even girls, labored with hammer and saw in the erection of the tabernacle that is to be used for the meeting. We trust that such interest and energy will be rewarded with a great revival.

The Central Methodist, the official organ of the Louisville and the Kentucky Annual Conferences, which heretofore has been owned, published and edited by Rev. W. A. Swift, has been sold by him to the Conferences it represents, and will bereafter be under the control of a commission appointed by them. Rev. W. E. Arnold, D.D., has been elected Editor and business manager. Dr. Swift has given the Church a fine paper—we are sure Dr. Arnold will do likewise.

The "drive" for $4000 for building the new church in Algiers, just across the river from New Orleans, has been in progress a week. Already 25 per cent of the amount has been raised. The pastor, Rev. C. C. Wier, is doing a great work in reaching tbe boys at the Algiers Naval Training Station, and he deserves the co-operation of all our people in providing an adequate building for his work. We trust that many of them will help him in a substantial way.

A note from Sister T. S. Randle, written from Yoakum, Texas, informs us that Brother Randle has been very sick for a month. At the time of writing, however, he seemed to be somewhat better. She regrets that they will not be able to meet the brethren of the Louisiana Conference at New Orleans. She requests the prayers of Christian friends for the recovery of Brother Randle. We can assure her that they are held in sincere affection by scores of friends in Louisiana, who remember them at the throne of grace.

Rev. Ben P. Jaco, of Lexington, Miss., has the happy faculty of writing most cheerful and inspiring letters. A recent communication from him informs us that the work at Lexington is prospering in every way. The Sunday school is doing the best work in its history. Interest in church work was maintained throughout the summer. The general tone of bis letter would indicate that he loves his people and they love him, and that he is altogether happy in the work. So it ought to be.

Just before going to press, the following note was received from Rev. W. W. Drake, of Shreveport, La.: "The Centenary College opening Wednesday was the largest for several years, most of the students, however, being in tho preparatory department. To-day, a message from Washington agrees to accept Centenary as a unit of the Students' Army Training Corps, on condition of securing fifty students over eighteen years of age, of college grade, by October 1. It is rather late, but doubtless the number will be secured." This is encouraging news to Louisiana Methodism.

A FORWARD MOVE FOR MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake,
Conference Secretary of Education.

Some months ago, under pressure of a growing patronage which was already crowding every available space in the buildings, Brother Bohbitt, the enterprising president of Mansfield Female College, conceived the idea of adding a new brick dining room and so remodeling the old frame buildings on the campus as to accommodate twenty or thirty additional boarders at a minimum cost. It was carefully estimated that the project would cost a little more than ten thousand dollars. The girls of the literary societies were enlisted, and in a short time had raised from their friends outside of Mansfield the sum of $2500. A committee of local trustees, aided by local citizens regardless of denominational relations, secured subscriptions for about $8000 additional from Mansfield people.

With this amount in sight, work was begun upon a commodious building of brick, occupying the site of the old dining hall, and large enough to include several class rooms in addition to a large hall which can be used either as a dining room or as the assembly hall. Arrangements were made, with the generous assistance of a local contractor, by which the ordinary contractor's profit would be eliminated, and the cost would be about 25 per cent less than would be usual in putting up the same building. Since the work has been brought near its completion, it is evident to any one who sees it that the work has been done at a remarkably low expenditure.

The new building, which is connected with the main building by a covered passage way, will be used for the present as an assembly hall, with several class rooms connecting with it. The old dining room and the old session hall have been moved and placed in line with the Y. W. C. A. building, adding to the symmetry of the arrangement of the buildings. These buildings are being remodeled to give space for class rooms and dormitories so as to care for at least twenty additional boarders. The added accommodations will be at once occupied, for there were 82 boarders already enrolled and ten more coming according to information some days ago, making the largest enrollment in the history of the school so far as I can learn. This extension of space is, therefore, only a reply to the challenge offered by the success and growth of the school, and is only a partial reply at that, and only temporarily and partially meets the need for expansion.

After the building had started, however, with the liberal backing of local people, the rapidly increasing cost of labor and material, as well as other improvements whose necessity became evident, increased the total cost of the improvements so tbat $5000 additional is needed to complete the project.

To consider this necessity, the Conference Board of Education was called to meet in Mansfield on Friday, September 13, and spent the greater part of the day in looking over the work done and considering every phase of the situation. It was unanimously the opinion of the Board that in order to push the work to an early completion and thus provide for the efficient conduct of the school in view of the expansion that has come, the amount necessary should be borrowed at once, and that the Conference should endorse and co-operate with a campaign to raise from the Methodists of the State, the sum of $5000 for the repayment of the loan. The Board pledged itself to use its influence to secure the backing of the Conference in such a campaign. It is inconceivable that the Methodists of Louisiana should for a moment hesitate to invest this sum in definitely expanding the capacity of the College to take care of not less than twenty additional girls for all the future. Is there not one man of means in the bounds of our Conference who will contribute the necessary amount? Or can not five be found at a thousand apiece? Or will not fifty people who are interested in the education of our girls, contribute a hundred dollars each, either in cash or Liberty Bonds to help equip our girls' school, the property of Louisiana Methodism, for larger service?

DEATH OF MRS. J. M. WEEMS.

Just as we go to press, the announcement comes of the death on Saturday, Sept. 21, of Mrs. J. M Weems, the widow of the late Dr. J. M. Weems, of the Mississippi Conference. She was buried at Newton, Miss., on Sunday morning. We extend our sincere sympatby to the bereaved members of the family. We trust a suitable memoir will be furnished the Advocate for publication.

Obituaries

REV. WILLIAM HENRY ECKLES.

A prince and a great man has fallen. Few men have made the impress on the country that was made by this good man. None have been more loved and more honored than this great commoner of the local ranks.

William Henry Eckles was born in Dinwiddie County, Virginia, on June 27, 1841. He was of sturdy English stock and had in him the principles of chivalry and of the nobleman. No more knightly man ever lived among us. He was indeed a typical old-time Southern gentleman of the highest type by inheritance and by training. His parents were James Williams Eckles and Ann Elizabeth Fisher Eckles. Both were well known Virginia families.

He came to Mississippi in February, 1861, a lad of 20. He found his life-long companion in Miss Mary Jane Carter of Como, to whom he was married on December 10, 1861—a companionship of fifty-seven years, and such a holy, tender, affectionate companionship as is not often seen. Their home was not one where Christ was only a guest, but where He dwelt. He was the companion and counsellor. This was a Bible-reading home. Brother Eckles was a close and constant Bible student and Sister Eckles had read her Bible through more than forty times. Their home was blessed with fourteen children. Three died in infancy. Eleven grew to manhood and womanhood. Nine survive, together with their saintly mother, to mourn their loss. Those living are R. P. Eckles, Cleveland, Miss.; Dr. G. R. Eckles, Holdenville, Okla.; Misses Hattie and Kate Eckles, Tom Eckles and Mrs. Bessie Jennings of Pleasant Grove, Miss.; Prof. A. K. Eckles, Cleveland; Mrs. Sue S. Carothers, Duck Hill, and Mrs. Sallie Chapman, Batesville. The lamented Judge J. B. Eckles of Sardis, and Rev. W. Joe Eckles of Wall Hill passed to their reward only a few years ago. This was indeed a happy family and the spirit of this saintly father and mother lives on in their children and in the hundreds of other lives they have touched.

In March, 1862, when twenty years old, Brother Eckles joined the Confederate army and followed its varying fortunes loyally and valiantly until its close in 1865. He joined Captain Wilson's Company, Twenty-ninth Mississippi Regiment, and was in Walthall's Brigade. He honored and obeyed his officers, loved his comrades and laid his life upon the altar of principle. He made a good soldier and was always greatly honored by the "Boys in Gray."

Brother Eckles was converted at fifteen years of age and joined the Methodist Church in Virginia. When he moved to Mississippi he connected himself at once with the Davis Chapel Church. When the Pleasant Grove Church was organized he was one of the leaders and became a charter member. Through the years he loved and cared for it as the child of his own bosom. He loved every spot of ground around it. One of his last acts was to have the church-house put in nice repair, realizing it would be his last expression of devotion to it.

In 1868 he was licensed to preach when Brother See was presiding elder, and Brother Bachman was pastor. His first preaching was at See's Chapel. He was ordained deacon on August 24, 1872, at the old Harmony Camp Ground by Bishop Robert Paine. He was ordained elder in 1881 at Grenada by Bishop Paine. Owing to the fact of a large family he felt that he could serve best in the local ranks, and for that reason did not join the Conference. He never failed to serve, and serve well, where he could be used. He served a number of charges. Among these were Mastodon, Arkabutla, Cockrum, Pleasant Hill, Evansville, Wall Hill. He always served acceptably. He was one of the most popular pastors and most fascinating preachers of the country. Had he given himself wholly to this work he would have been one of the pulpit giants of the Church. Preaching with him was a passion. He loved to preach; delighted in his pulpit preparation and preaching. He was a most delightful listener, and no man enjoyed more than he a good sermon. He was a kindred spirit of great men and great preachers because he lived in the atmosphere of great men and much with God in the "Secret Place." Well born, well reared, he, like St. Paul, rejoiced most in that he had a great Christ and that he was "saved by grace." Being a good Mason, he loved his Masonic lodge; a good citizen, he was interested in everything that was for the uplift of his community, but above all he was devoted to his Lord and his Church. The man and the message were one. He preached it, he lived it, he testified to it, and his dying request was that this message should be preached at his funeral: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." His noble life of seventy-seven years was a monument to this glorious truth. He was crucified with Christ, he lived for others. He lived a life of purity and truth. For him to live was for Christ to live in him. He was a man of great faith, great purity, great courage and great love for God and humanity. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

J. H. HOLDER.

MILDRED ELMIRA WREN, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. H. B. Wren, was born in Wharton County, Texas, on Sept. 22, 1915, and died in Shreveport, La., on April 25, 1918. Baby Mildred was a most beautiful and bright child. At this tender age she could sing correctly the hymn, "Oh happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away." She could also repeat and sing, "I am on the road that leads to glory." Soon I'll see the pearly gates, where my Lord and Savior awaits the transplanting of this flower from this most excellent Christian home, bringing heaven nearer and making it more real to the loved ones, all of whom are Christians.

B. T. CREWS.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. MARGIE GRANT HENRY.

I saw a star in a clear sky;
It seemed so far from all that might mar or blight,
But a cloud came and hid its light.
Soon it passed, but the beautiful star was not in place,
It had hurried on and was lost in space.
It did not die.

I heard a song as sweet and tender as an infant's sigh.
Then silence came; I heard the song no more,
Though I bent eagerly and listened to hear it as before.
It had floated away, upward, afar,
And had joined in space the vanished star.
It did not die.

Thus, dear friend, you did not die;
A cloud called death, so dark, so dark, came along
And shrouded thy form, and hushed thy song;
Quickly the golden cords were riven
By angels' hands, and you were borne to heaven.
You did not die.

How near thou art, yet it seems so far—
Just a cloud called death, twixt thy friends and you;
Soon, how soon, many will pass through,
And look again in thy love-lit eyes,
And hear thy voice as tender as an infant's sighs,
And see thee robed in the grace of melody
And the beautiful light of the vanished star.
You did not die.

Her friend,
JOHN K. PETTWAY.

Loss of Appetite is commonly gradual; one dish after another is set aside. It is one of the first indications that the system is running down, and there is nothing else so good for it as Hood's Sarsaparilla—the best of all tonics.—Adv.

Ever Salivated By Calomel? Horrible!

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

Only what we have wrought into our character during life can we take away with us.—Humboldt.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

To Cure Chills

Go to your local dealer and get a bottle of Swamp Chill and Fever Tonic, and take according to directions.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The class that studies "Life in the Making" at the Sunday school hour is the class for leadership. Many young people are anxious for this training. Give them a chance.

So many complain that they cannot get the older people to attend the Sunday school. A trained leader never fails to solve the problem in the country church or anywhere else. Of course it will take time and hard work to train leaders, but if we fail to begin, where will we be ten years from now?

Contests between schools and classes bring temporary results. These contests may be of some value, but the way to get permanent results is to train leaders. Remember, the Church is no stronger than its leaders. The same can be said of our army. Look what the Government did the first thing and is still doing on a big scale. Yes, it costs, but who says it does not pay to train officers?

Unprepared teachers, poor school, dead church. The declining church is an open door for fanatics and false teachers of every kind to come in and lead the people to destruction. Who is to blame for this tragedy?

The precious blood of our young manhood is flowing freely on the "Western Front" that democracy may triumph. We count it not too great a price to pay for world freedom. The Prince of Peace must have more heroic souls to fight and, if need be, die for Him to make democracy worth while. This is no time to delay, to temporize. We must go forward on our knees. We must train leaders to train the Church to win the victory for our conquering Christ.

Grove's Tasteless chill Tonic restores vitality and energy by purifying and enriching the blood. You can soon feel its Strengthening, Invigorating Effect. Price 60c.

Calomel Purified of all Objections

Chemists Rid Doctors' Favorite Medicine of Nauseating and Dangerous Qualities. New Variety Called "Calotabs."

A triumph of modern pharmacy that is destined to bless the whole word—that is the opinion of physicians and druggists who are familiar with the new calomel that is wholly free from the objectionable effects of the old-style calomel.

An occasional purifying of the system and thorough cleansing of the liver are absolutely essential to health, and, as all doctors know, calomel is the only drug that accomplishes this result. Now that the unpleasant and dangerous effects are entirely removed, the popularity of the new calomel, Calotabs, will be vastly increased. Its effect is delightful. One tablet at bedtime, a swallow of water—that's all. You wake up next morning feeling fine, your liver cleansed, your system purified and with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you please—no danger. No restrictions of habit or diet.

Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price thirty-five cents. Your druggist recommends and guarantees them.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT INSTITUTES.

At Brother C. V. Breithaupt's request I have made out a schedule of work for his visitation in the Baton Rouge District. There will be an institute held at each of the places named, at which the workers will discuss the Standard of Efficiency, the Teacher-training Drive, and the Missionary Drive. Some time will be given to round-table discussion. Will you please publish the following schedule in the Advocate?

October 4—Baton Rouge and near by schools.
October 5, 6—Clinton and near by schools.
October 7, 8—Amite and near by schools.
October 16—Slaughter and near by schools.
October 17—Greensburg and near by schools.
October 18—Ponchatoula and near by schools.
October 19—Springfield and near by schools.
October 20—Denham Springs and near by schools.
October 27—Wilson and near by schools.
October 28—St. Francisville and near by schools.
October 29—Natalbany and near by schools.
October 30, 31—Franklinton station, circuit and near by schools.

It may be seen that Brother Breithaupt will not be able to visit some of the charges. It is desired, therefore, that the Sunday schools on these charges send representatives to the institute most convenient to them.

Humbly submitted,
S. A. SEEGERS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

TWO GOOD MEETINGS.

I was at Sylvestria Church, north of Holly Springs, with Brother T. H. Porter, the fourth week in August. There we found a good people. It is a small community, as many former citizens have gone to Holly Springs and Memphis, but a few select people remain.

The meeting was a real revival, with some splendid young people brought into the Church. Brother Porter has greatly improved in health by his stay in New Mexico.

Then the first week in September, I helped R. G. Lord in a meeting at Taylor, where we had a very unusual meeting. Our church overflowed with people and we moved to the Baptist Church, which is a larger house. Then we moved the chairs from the Woodmen Hall and still we lacked room. There were 14 accessions to the Methodist Church, all grown people, and most of them married people, one a mother of 4 children. There should have been several children, but strange enough, not one of the children joined.

Brother Lord and his young wife are in great favor with the people. He will likely make a great report for Water Valley Circuit.

W. M. YOUNG.

A WORTHY APPEAL.

Dear Brother Carley: While the old adage, "Every sweet has its bitter," seems to be often true, yet it is a great privilege to be an itinerant Methodist preacher.

After reconnoitering four days in the Tensas Delta, I take pleasure in stating that during that time I preached at five different points on or near the Tensas River, visiting fifty-four homes, and securing in cash and pledges $140 on Conference collections and our war pledges. While for the two previous years of my pastorate here the minutes will show for each year that more than sixteen times as much was raised for our Conference collections as was raised the year before I came, yet I fell far short of what my church required; but by divine aid, I purpose to report all of these collections over the top, and I believe my charge will come up all right for pastor and presiding elder, one appointment having already overpaid its assessment for the entire year.

I have an extra mission, and all who chance to read this and wish to share in the undertaking may send me a money order for one dollar to aid in marking the grave of Rev. T. H. McClendon, who died more than seven years ago in the parsonage I now occupy, and is buried in the cemetery near Pine Hill Church, which he, together with Rev. T. J. Upton, was instrumental in building in 1858. I have assumed responsibility and ordered a monument to cost $100, to which one man has contributed $10 and another $5, and while I do not wish to limit any one to $1, I would like to have a list of at least one hundred contributors, to announce at the unveiling of the monument, November 10, 1918, at 3 p. m. And if more than the required amount is raised, it will be given to the worn-out preachers and widows and orphans of the deceased preachers of our Conference.

The Lord bless you and your colaborers in your splendid work.

WHY RUN-DOWN PALE EXHAUSTED WOMEN SHOULD TAKE IRON

"There can be no beautiful, healthy, rosy-cheeked, steady nerved women without iron. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks—their charm and attractiveness depart. I always insist that my patients take organic iron—Nuxated Iron—(not metallic iron which often corrodes the stomach and does more harm than good). Nuxated Iron is easily assimilated, does not blacken nor injure the teeth nor upset the stomach. It will increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, irritable, careworn, haggard women in two weeks' time in many cases. I have used it in my own practice with most surprising results."—Ferdinand King, M. D., well known New York Physician and medical author. (Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded—On sale at all good druggists.)

NUXATED IRON

THE WORK OF THE KIDNEYS is to filter and cast out waste products and poisons from the blood stream. When the kidneys are overworked, weak or diseased, the waste matter remains in the system and causes pains in side or back, rheumatism, lumbago, stiffness of joints, sore muscles and other symptoms.

When a person's kidneys are out of order, there is lack of energy, force, vigor, zeal and general effectiveness. Kidneys and bladder must properly function for anyone to enjoy good health.

Foley Kidney Pills

are prompt in action and tonic in their healing and soothing effect on weak, sore, overworked, diseased kidneys and bladder.

Mrs. Mary Henderson, Mt. Carmel, S. C., writes: "Before I used Foley Kidney Pills I was troubled with kidney trouble and my left side hurt me so I could hardly get up in the morning. Pain is all gone now and am feeling fine." 60c and $1.00 sizes.

A LETTER FROM BROTHER R. M. DAVIS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our Conference year will soon be at a close, and I wonder how many of us can truly say, "I have done my very best;" or have our minds been taken up with the war and its work? These things are all right, properly done, but have we let the Lord have the right of way in our hearts while dealing with this important matter? I fear in some cases this has not been done.

Our little town of Vinton is showing a great deal of patriotism; we have seventeen stars on our flag in the Sunday school and more to follow. These stars represent the number of young men who have gone from our Sunday school to the camps, and most of them to France. These stars are reminders of the dear boys to us, who requested our prayers while they would be on the firing line. This request is being faithfully kept.

Brother Louis Hoffpauir is doing a good work here. The late storm crippled his work in many ways; some of his members were badly hurt, and every house of worship was blown down, but Brother Louis is not a slacker, and will prove equal to the occasion. So I think we are doing fairly well.

As to myself, I feel sad and lonely, having recently lost my dear companion who had been the sunshine of my home for fifty years. The vacant chair and her picture on the wall are ever before me. I miss her in my Sunday school work, as we talked the lessons over before going to the classes; but one consoling thought, Brother Carley: she left a clean life as an example for us, and I feel that it will be better further on.

Our elder, Brother Bowman, has just left us. He preached two fine sermons to large congregations. I hope he will return to the work, bringing Brother Hoffpauir with him.

Wishing you every success in your work, I remain, yours truly,

R. M. DAVIS.

YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard St., Savannah, Ga.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-boiled eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M.D.

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter. C. A. CROSBY, M.D.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may be, dyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, or any curable ailment that has not responded to drugs. I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you simply say so, return the empty demijohns, and I will promptly and willingly refund your money—every cent. Sign below:

"STAND UP, STAND UP FOR JESUS."

This may be rightly called the great American Sunday school hymn. In every church of almost every denomination its stirring challenge has rung forth Sunday after Sunday for so long that we have come to associate the song intimately in our minds with the sound of far-carrying young voices and the look of upturned young faces. There is not a line in a single stanza that the smallest child cannot understand.

The origin of the poem holds a particular interest for Southerners. The lines were directly inspired by the dying words of a young clergyman, Dudley Atkins Tyng, who first saw the light of day in a quiet rectory in Prince George's County, Maryland, where his father, the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, was minister-in-charge. Dudley Tyng passed his boyhood in Philadelphia. He was a precocious scholar, reading the Latin authors when he was only seven, and entering the University of Pennsylvania at fourteen. At a very early age he consecrated his heart and his talents to God. After he became rector of the Church of the Epiphany in Philadelphia, he threw himself with loving ardor into the great religious awakening which about that time spread through the principle cities of the land. He was the favorite leader of the great union prayer-meetings held in his own town.

In the spring following the wonderful awakening he met with a terrible accident. "Doctor," the young minister asked, "must I die?"

When the physician bowed his head, the young man said to him, "Then I have something to tell you. I have loved you as a friend; I long to love you now as a brother in Christ."

He was asked if he had any message for his brothers in the ministry, and it was then that he uttered unconsciously the refrain of the great hymn born of that hour—"Tell them," he said, "to stand up for Jesus."

George Duffield, a Presbyterian clergyman of Detroit, inspired by the message, wrote 'Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," as a hymn to be sung after the sermon he was to deliver at the young clergyman's funeral. Dudley Tyng was buried, his biographer says, amid the tears of more than ten thousand people, and beside his grave the hymn that he had inspired was heard for the first time.—Southern Churchman.

Great hearts alone understand how much glory there is in being good.—Jules Michelet.

Prayer is like opening a sluice between the great ocean and our little channels, when the sea gathers itself together and flows in at full tide.—Tennyson.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon of 1539 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Adv.

CALL TO CHRISTIANS TO MEET JAPANESE SOCIAL PERILS.

With a challenge to the Christians of America to save Japan from an ungodly insurrection, The Japan Evangelist recently published an article on "Forward Steps in Mission Policy," which represents the opinions expressed at a meeting of missionaries and Japanese. Under the head of "Social Problems and the Christian Movement," the following paragraphs appear:

"Few dwellers even in the larger cities realize the phenomenal growth of the factory communities around them. The suburbs of Tokyo have swelled by the hundred thousand during the past few years. Oji now numbers forty thousand, and Kawasaki, Tsurumi, and Kanagawa will soon transform the region between Tokyo and Yokohama into a solid manufacturing city. The same is true of the district between Kobe and Osaka. One of the alarming facts is that over one-half, and in many cases two-thirds, of the employees are girls. The Fuji Spinning Company, which has five factories, is owned by progressive and in part pro-Christian men. Two-thirds of their employees are girls. Although they have fine welfare work and try not to have so many young girls as most of the factories, they have thousands of girls under sixteen and hundreds of them twelve and thirteen years of age. In the cities the young women are rushing into commercial life. Five thousand of them are employed in the Department of Communications in Tokyo alone. The Red Cross Hospital had two thousand applicants for positions and could employ only fourteen. The remainder, most of them, went into commercial and industrial positions.

Unrest Moving Japan.

"The influences for unrest and for radical social readjustment, which are working so powerfully in Europe and America, are all visible in Japan. After the war they will beat upon Japan like a rising tide. In face of all these conditions, what is the duty of the Christian movement? Can we be satisfied to see churches open for services only on Sunday and one or two other evenings? What effect are these services having over the neighborhoods immediately around the churches? Are they meeting the vital needs of the wage-earning class? In industrial and wage-earning communities, where opportunities for recreation, for self-improvement, and for good companionship are lacking, is it right that churches should continue to offer religious instruction a few hours a week? It was agreed by all that the churches and the missions must energetically attempt to inject Christian influence by institutional means into the industrial and wage-earning communities.

"It is of fundamental importance, however, that the evangelistic passion should go hand in hand with the social interest. Otherwise we shall see a repetition of the merely humanistic social settlement work which ameliorates but does not cure. It is desirable that several missionaries of special training and adaptability be assigned to such work, either by locating their own homes near such communities, or by co-operating with Japanese in opening institutional churches and social settlements, or by extending the social efforts of the Y. M. C. A.'s, or by preaching in factories. Here again it is important that the work be done as far as possible in conjunction with or under Japanese leadership. Although some highly-trained social workers from abroad would be useful, provided they were moved by a strong religious purpose, it would be better as a rule for younger missionaries with a command of the language not to specialize on social work, especially during their first furlough. Unless men have a powerful religious motive, the machinery of institutional churches and settlements and the educational and humanitarian features are likely to smother the religious emphasis.

"It was objected that the opening of such work in industrial centers would arouse the suspicion and opposition of conservative Japanese elements. In reply it was said that although this might be true in some cases, the practical results in changed characters and communities would disarm opposition. And even though there may be a call for the spirit of martyrdom on the part of pioneer workers, yet that should not hold us back. We should refrain from preaching extreme social doctrines or arousing class feeling, but unless Christians supply the spirit of reform, combined with the spirit of self-control and mutual-help, which only Christianity can give, we are likely to witness in Japan either class war or a violent irreligious social revolution. Although Christianity always and everywhere plants the seeds of discontent and progress, it supplies the constructive, restraining influences which prevent reform from degenerating into anarchy and unbrotherly strife.

"The importance of churches and Christian workers attempting to affect their immediate neighbors more deeply was emphasized. Often this will take the form of little courtesies and friendly service. Kindergartens, dispensaries, day nurseries and night schools for working boys and girls are among the best means of gaining access to the homes."—Centenary Bulletin.

A Woman's Burdens

are lightened when she turns to the right medicine. If her existence is made gloomy by the chronic weaknesses, delicate derangements, and painful disorders that afflict her sex, she will find relief and emancipation from her troubles in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. If she's overworked, nervous, or "run-down," she finds new life and strength. It's a powerful, invigorating tonic and nervine which was discovered and used by an eminent physician for many years, in all cases of "female complaints" and weaknesses. For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical "change of life"; in bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, ulceration, inflammation, and every kindred ailment, the "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine put up without alcohol—ingredients on wrapper.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"My wife has used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for trouble from which women suffer and it surely did give good results. All women ought to use this remedy as it is fine. Dr. Pierce's Cough Syrup is good also."—REV. J. N. COOPER.

ALBERTVILLE, ALA.—"Two doctors gave me up—said I had a bad case of dropsy and that my system was all run-down. I could not keep any vituals on my stomach. My husband found one of Dr. Pierce's pamphlets and I began taking 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription.' I took three bottles of each kind and in six weeks I was able to be up. I also used the 'Pleasant Pellets.' I recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all suffering women, and am glad to say they saved my life when others failed."—MRS. SARAH C. RAINS, R. F. D. 1.

ATTENTION! Sick Women

To do your duty during these trying times your health should be your first consideration. These two women tell how they found health.

Hellam, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles and a displacement. I felt all run down and was very weak. I had been treated by a physician without results, so decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and felt better right away. I am keeping house since last April and doing all my housework, where before I was unable to do any work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly the best medicine a woman can take when in this condition. I give you permission to publish this letter."—Mrs. E. R. CRUMLING, R. No. 1, Hellam, Pa.

Lowell, Mich.—"I suffered from cramps and dragging down pains, was irregular and had female weakness and displacement. I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which gave me relief at once and restored my health. I should like to recommend Lydia E. NATCHITOCHES CHURCH TO BE DEDICATED.

It gives us pleasure to announce that, through the grace of God, we have succeeded in wiping out the last of our church debt here at Natchitoches, and it will be dedicated the second Sunday in October by Brother R. H. Harper, who built the church. We were "over the top" by the first of August and our people are happy that this incumbrance is removed and the beautiful building is now the property of the Church without a cent of debt. We are indebted to the two Boards of Church Extension for substantial assistance in removing the debt.

We invite all former pastors and presiding elders to be with us on the happy occasion of the dedication service and any others who may wish to attend. Those who have never seen the Natchitoches church, have not seen all that is artistic and worth while in church architecture in Louisiana, for this building is a gem and stands as a monument to the good taste as well as the foresight and courage and indefatigable energy of Brother Harper. It was a big undertaking and one that some doubting Thomases declared among the impossible things, but, thank God, it is here, affording ample and beautiful church accommodations to many scores of toiling students as well as to the Church resident here. The architecture of the building on the exterior is Spanish mission, which is in keeping with the history of the town, while everything within its walls is modern to the last detail, and, with commodious Sunday school accommodation, not inferior to the finest churches in the State.

But we have yet a great work ahead of us to furnish the building as it should be, and if this falls under the eye of some benevolent individual of wealth, let him hereby be advised that a liberal donation on a pipe organ would be a splendid investment of his money, because of the many hundreds of youth who will come up through the years from every part of the State and worship here. Fraternally,

DEMOCRACIES IN ARMS.

Very few, in all probability, could give off-hand a correct list of the nations which are at war with Germany. All know that most of the civilized countries—excepting a small group in Northern Europe—have taken the sword against the Teutonic countries and their Allies. The exact number is twenty-two, and in addition there are seven which have broken relations with Germany but have not entered into active warfare. The complete list in the order in which war was declared is as follows:

Russia	August 1, 1914
France	August 3, 1914
Belgium	August 3, 1914
Great Britain	August 4, 1914
Serbia	August 6, 1914
Montenegro	August 9, 1914
Japan	August 23, 1914
San Marino	May 24, 1915
Portugal	March 9, 1916
Italy	August 28, 1916
Roumania	August 28, 1916
United States	April 6, 1917
Cuba	April 7, 1917
Panama	April 10, 1917
Greece	June 29, 1917
Siam	July 22, 1917
Liberia	August 4, 1917
China	August 14, 1917
Brazil	October 26, 1917
Ecuador	December 8, 1917
Guatemala	April 23, 1918
Hayti	July 15, 1918

The seven countries which have broken relations with Germany are:

Bolivia	April 13, 1917
Nicaragua	May 18, 1917
Santo Domingo
Costa Rica	September 21, 1917
Peru	October 6, 1917
Uruguay	October 7, 1917
Honduras	July 22, 1918

All of the first group are still at war with the Teutonic powers excepting Russia and Roumania, which have made peace after a fashion.—Zion's Herald.

ARMY Y. M. C. A. WORK IN SOUTHERN CAMPS.

Just what kind of religious work is being done among the soldiers, and how much is really being accomplished? These are questions which occur naturally to persons who are interested in knowing the spiritual influence exerted by the Army Y. M. C. A.

According to a report of one month's work recently made by Hugh Cork, Supervisor of Religious work in the Southern Department of the Army Y. M. C. A., 1719 religious meetings were held in camps of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana, with a total attendance of 376,728. This was a greater number of meetings than for any previous month, and represented an increase of thirty-six thousand in attendance over any previous month's record. Nearly four hundred Bible classes were maintained, representing an attendance of 24,641 soldiers for the month. There were 36,959 copies of the Scriptures distributed.

Perhaps these figures are not as important as those that show concrete results. This method of estimating spiritual influences can only be roughly approximate, but the following statistics for the same month's work have their own significance:

Number requesting prayer	3,432
Number of Christian decisions	4,203
Renewals of Christian purpose	3,526
"Forward Step" decisions—
Temperance	10
Profanity	311
To read Bible	6,904
To pray	1,453
Personal purity	507
Gambling	157
Total	9,342

Probably the most lasting and valuable spiritual service is rendered, after all, through the personal contact of the consecrated Y. M. C. A. secretary with the soldier. The importance of the personal interview is stressed in the training of Army "Y" workers, and every secretary, whether religious, educational, or athletic, seizes an opportunity to talk with the soldiers regarding his soul's welfare. The report for this same month shows that 14,776 such personal interviews were held, besides 1318 interviews with men concerning pledges taken at the meetings. The beginning of many a Christian life could doubtless be traced to a casual conversation over the stamp counter in an Army Y. M. C. A. building.—Bulletin.

A GOOD DAY AT GREENVILLE, MISS.

Dear Mr. Editor: Of all the years I have been in the ministry, this has been the most busy and in some respects the most fruitful. There is much coming and going down this way, but more stay than go. Ninety-one have been received into the Church this year, and there are yet others to come.

One of the most interesting services of the year was that of yesterday, when we received Wong Chang into the Church on professlon of falth. He is a bright 17-year-old Chinaman, born in Canton, China. He has lived here three years, has been taught privately, has been regular in his attendance upon the services of the Church, and of the Sunday schooi, and has given a good account of himself generally. It was a scene that will linger with the congregation for a long time.

We have been sending our money and men to China for many years. but in this case this heathen boy came to us. Some of the Sunday school people got hold of him, taught him and sympathized with him. He was apt to learn. Miss Mattie Louise Spragins, daughter of Rev. H. S. Spragins, interested herself in him. Upon her removal from Greenville, Miss Annie May Curtis, daughter of the presiding elder, took him in charge. Later he was the pupil of one of our choicest young men, Miller Edwards. He taught him Peloubet's Bible Stories. Wang became very proficient in these stories, and could recite them in a most interesting way. He wanted to join the Church. I talked to him and tried to explain what it all meant. So, on Sunday morning he presented himself at the close of the service and was baptized and received into the Church. The congregation extended him a most cordial greeting, and received him with marked evidences of appreciation and interest. When the pastor asked him: "Wilt thou then obedientiy keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of thy life?" in good, clear voice, he answered: "I will endeavor so to do, God being my helper." No man can promise more than that.

One of the fine lessons to be learned from this incident is that this bright young Chinaman was won to Christ and the Church by the earnest effort of some of our young people. How much better to do work of this character than some other things now commanding the attention of our young people!

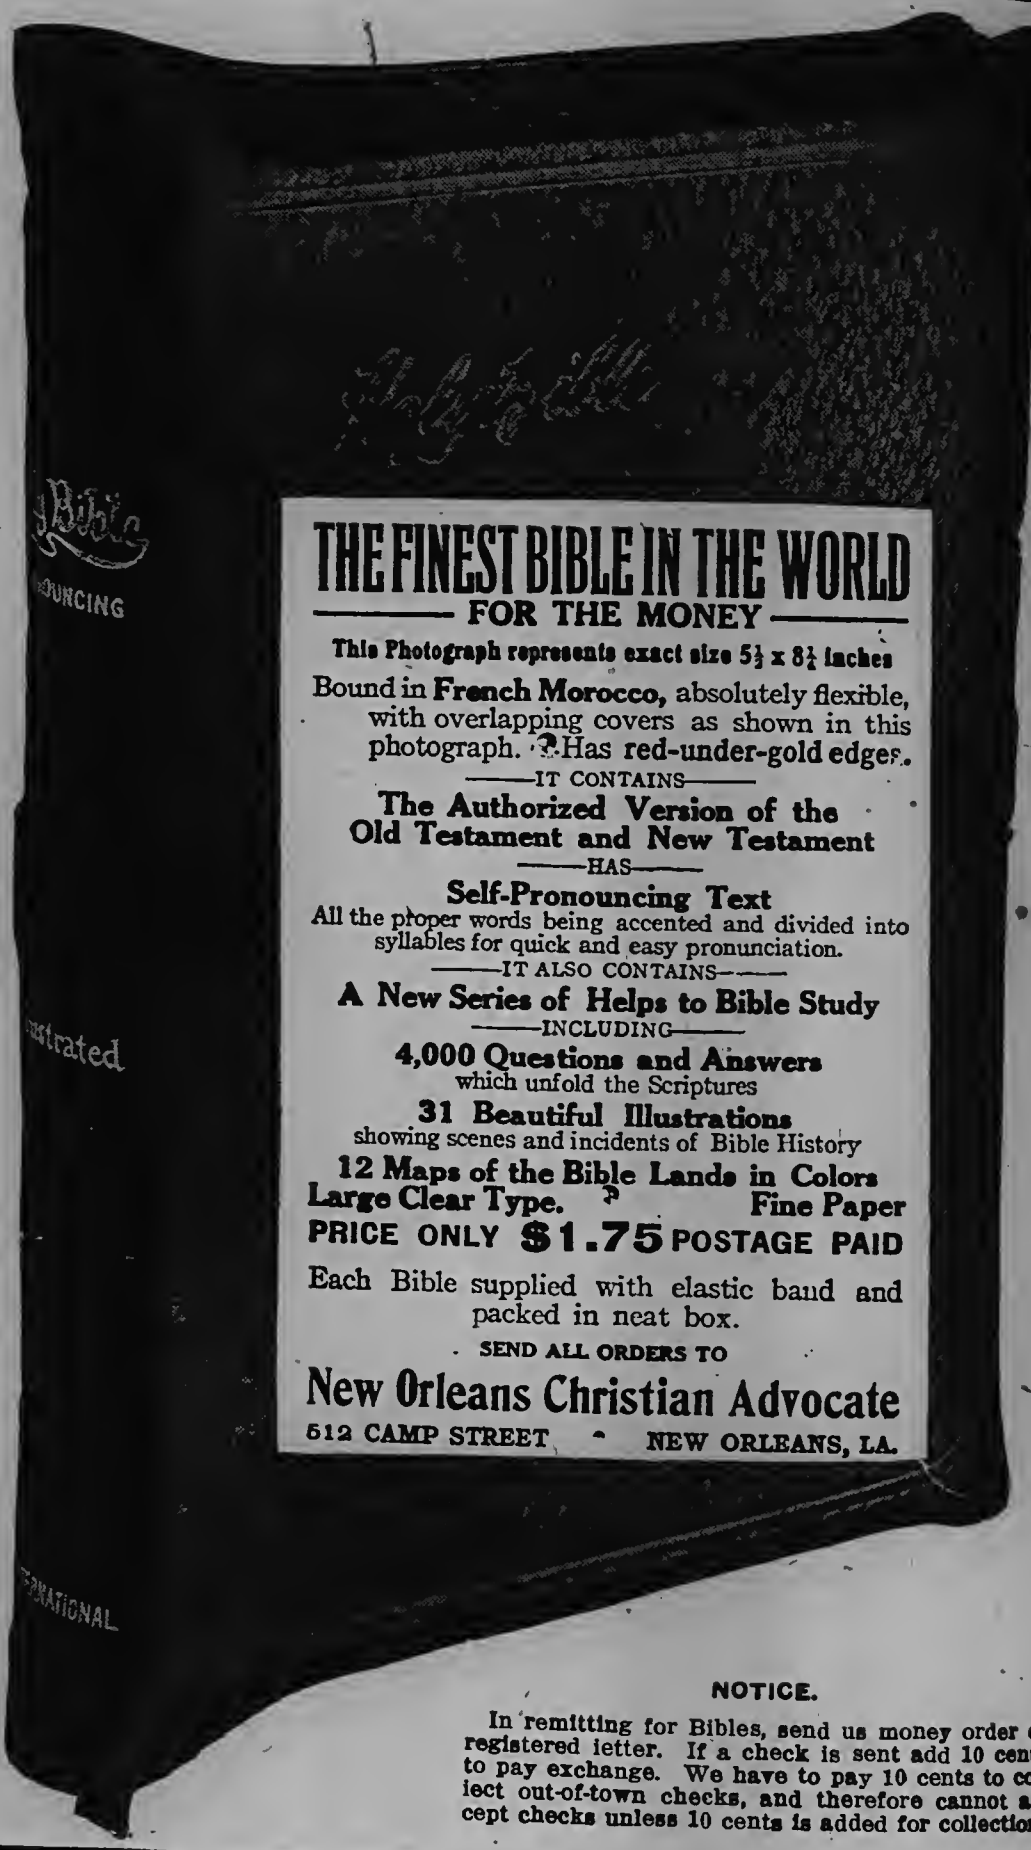
WORK DAY FOR THE LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.



Saturday, October 12, is "Work Day" for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, followed by "Harvest Day," on Sunday, the 13th. It is expected that every Methodist man, woman and child will work for the Orphanage on this day, and go to church, or Sunday school on Sunday, contributing the proceeds or the equivalent of a day's wages to the Orphanage. This is done by request of our Orphanage Board, and by Conference resolution.

Our great work at Ruston is dependent on the money raised on these two days for the means necessary to meet the ever-growing expenses necessary to operate the work of the Orphanage through the coming fall and winter. There are no hired collectors sent out to raise money for the Orphanage. No efforts are made to secure money except through the churches and Sunday schools on Easter Sunday and Work Day. So, if we are to meet the heavy expense of caring for the 130 children in our Orphanage for the coming winter, with the enormous increase in all living expenses, it must be done on "Work Day" and "Harvest Day." We sincerely trust that no Methodist, or friend to homeless children, will fail us at this time. Surely every church and Sunday school in the Conference will give the people and children of our State the opportunity to contribute to this great work.

We are conscious of the many demands that will be made on our people at this time—demands that are vitally important and pressing. But we sincerely trust that our great work will not be forgotten or neglected. We have had unusually good health among the children this summer. They spent a busy summer doing many necessary things to help along the work. They are all now back in school, hard at work securing their education. We must keep them there and do our part to make them the men and women we want them to be.

Please keep the date in mind, and on "Work Day," Saturday, October 12, and the following Sunday, do your best for us. Faithfully,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Superintendent, Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

A NEW EDITOR FOR THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Rev. A. J. Weeks, D.D., presiding elder of the Stamford District, Northwest Texas Conference, has just been elected Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate to succeed Dr. Bradfield, who gives up the editorship to re-enter the pastorate. Dr. Weeks is a Louisianian, having been born in Vernon Parish. It was our privilege to meet him while in Dallas. We pray that God may bless him in his new work. He will not take charge of the office for some weeks.

THE DARK HOUR.

"O, if I had millions like my neighbor, would not I relieve these distresses! What could I do with my little almost vanishing offering? It is a thing to excite derision that I should dare offer this slender mite." Wait, soul. You do not give to substitute for God's good providence. You are not come as one to his rescue. We do not awake while he sleeps. Your giving is for his receiving and he sometimes uses a limp grass blade instead of a forest of elms or an orchard of apple trees. Bulk is not all, not nearly all. His smile on a penny is worth more than his disapproval on a billion. One who sat over against the treasury immortalized a widow's little offering. Was it so that the poor for all time might gain the riches of his approval to make up for the vast difference between the amount of their material gifts and those of the wealthy? When you know that he is watching, waste no thought on the gaze of erring men. They might frown. He smiles: that is enough. They are over against you like the left hand over against the right; he is above to lift the offering and make it grow forever.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE FRIENDLINESS OF JESUS.

Jesus is the most imperial figure in all history. There must have been something in his personal appearance that compelled men to turn to look at him as he passed by. Certainly his opponents, strong in their own conceit, were abashed when they stood in his presence. The tones of his voice carried the conviction of authority. The flash of his eye gave expression to an indomitable spirit. The breadth of his vision was such as can come only to a man to whom time and place are largely incidental. Relationships were established by him from the standpoint of the eternal, and values were estimated in terms of everlasting and inviolable principles. He was uncompromising in his demands for allegiance, and inflexible in the maintenance of moral standards.

But Jesus was a friendly man. Little children came unhesitatingly to him, and allowed him to take them in his arms. Women, with their intuitive knowledge of character, trusted him implicitly. Ignorant men approached him with a confidence that is as remarkable as it is beautiful. And best of all, the outcast—those who were conscious of their own delinquencies and were despised by their neighbors—somehow or other felt that they could go to him without fear of rebuff. All alike felt at ease in his presence and unfolded to him the deepest secrets of their lives. And he heard them kindly and dealt with them gently.

This utter friendliness of the imperial Christ furnishes a strong ground of appeal to men to-day. We naturally stand somewhat in awe of the great ones of earth; their dignity of position and the weight of their responsibility make us hesitate to go to them, lest our presence be counted an intrusion. But here is One, the greatest of all, to whom we may go under all circumstances, with the fullest assurance that he will welcome us and hear us compassionately as we tell him all that is in our hearts. And as we linger with him, there will come into our souls a sense of companionship and trust that will reveal him to us as the "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." How blessed it is to know that the royal Christ stands with outstretched hands and says, even to the humblest, the neediest, "Come!"

THE PRODIGAL FATHER.

Many a boy has wandered away along strange paths into distant fields, and now he is spoken of as "the prodigal son." Yes; and many a father has followed those same strange paths and has found himself in those same distant fields, sometimes in company with his boy, sometimes all alone. There is a home; wife and children are there, loving God and one another, and loving father with a passionate love that makes the heart ache when they think of how far he has wandered. A father does come to himself sometimes, and say, "I will arise and go"—go back to wife and children and home and God. And then his heart sings within him, and there is rejoicing as loved ones see him returning. Prodigal father, come home!

THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN.

The campaign for raising the fourth Liberty Loan began throughout the country last Saturday. There can be no doubt but that the loan will be overscribed, as the previous ones have been. While the cost of living is very high, it is true, nevertheless, that money in circulation is plentiful. The people of the United States are abundantly able to finance the war till its successful conclusion, though its cost is to be estimated in terms of billions.

We believe the strongest factor influencing our people in making their subscriptions to the loan is their intense and intelligent patriotism. They are not called upon to invest their money for a cause they know nothing of and that they would not be interested in if they did know about it. The Government, through its various channels of publicity, has conveyed to the people full information concerning its ideals and purposes, and the use that is being made of the money that is being expended. For a man to-day to plead ignorance of the cause for which we are fighting is a confession of hopeless intellectual limitations. If he does not know, it is simply becase he cannot learn.

This knowledge of what our country stands for, is reinforced by a love of country that is willing to make any sacrifices. It is very well, perhaps, to form and carry out plans that have as their chief end the arousing of the enthusiasm of our people by spectacular and thrilling campaigns of oratory and publicity features. But we should hate to think that the great mass of loyal American citizens have to be beguiled into lending the Government their money for carrying on this life and death struggle. It is conceivable that there are some individuals who are dead to the call of duty, who will have to be coerced by the power of public opinion to do their part. But the average citizen will gladly and cheerfully subscribe to this loan because he loves his country and believes in its mission.

We believe we know exactly what the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi are going to do at this time. They are going to show their faith by their works. They are going to be in the very forefront of those who invest in these Government securities to the extent of their ability—not merely because the investment is one of the best in the world, but because the country calls. And we believe all Christians will do exactly the same thing.

SCHOOL AGAIN.

Already the public schools have opened, and most of our colleges have begun their sessions. The reports that have come to us indicate that the attendance at all our institutions in Louisiana and Mississippi is unusually good. In some instances, students have had to be turned away because of lack of room. Although this in itself is a tragedy, nevertheless it is an indication that our people are beginning to realize the value of an adequate educational preparation for life. We recall, in this connection, the words of President Wilson to Secretary of the Interior Mr. Franklin K. Lane, in his letter of July 31: "So long as the war continues, there will be constant need of very large numbers of men and women of the highest and most thorough training for war service in many lines. After the war, there will be urgent need not only for trained leadership in all lines of industrial, commercial, social and civic life, but for a very high average of intelligence and preparation on the part of all the people. I would therefore urge that the people continue to give generous support to their schools of all grades and that the schools adjust themselves as wisely as possible to the new conditions, to the end that no boy or girl shall have less opportunity for education because of the war, and that the Nation be strengthened as it can only be through the right education of all its people."

It is true that in the institutions of higher learning, the instruction now being given is largely in the nature of military preparation for the immediate needs of the country. But along with the military features of the curriculum, there is being provided a course of general instruction that will serve in peace as well as in war. Parents have done wisely who have used every effort to send their children to school; and the young people themselves, who have taken advantage of the unusual opportunities of this remarkable age, have shown that they are keenly alive to the responsibilities resting upon them.

We believe that the present interest in education, as it is indicated by the large attendance at our schools, will continue to manifest itself after the war is over. Many of our young men who will be taken from college for active military service before they have completed their courses, will want to continue them as soon as normal conditions are restored; many younger students, seeing the unquestionable advantage the educated man has over the uneducated in a purely material way, will want to go on from high school to college and university. It appears to us that an intellectual stimulus is going to arise from the war that will vitally affect our educational system throughout the future.

A tremendous responsibility is resting upon the Church with reference to these thousands of young people who look to it for their chance to make themselves fit for life. The very least it can afford to do, is to furnish them ample facilities for securing that which is so essential to their welfare. Where necessary, there should be untiring efforts to enlarge our accommodations to the point where it will never be necessary to turn a single student away. In some cases, the immediate cost may seem prohibitive; but when that cost has been distributed over many generations, it will seem insignificant. We have many people of large means who need to have this matter laid upon their consciences as a form of investment for which they will be held accountable to God. The call to the Church to educate means a call to Church people to supply the money that is necessary for endowments and equipment that will enable the Church to answer that call.

But the heaviest obligation resting upon the Church at this time is to make its educational methods so thoroughly Christian as to bring every

WHEN TO KEEP SILENCE.

Rev. James Mudge, S. T. D.

There are at least four seasons when it is incumbent on the Christian to hold his tongue. The first is when God rebukes us. Who are we to reply against God? Yet we are very prone to do it. The temptation is great. It really seems to us in our shortsightedness and folly that we have been ill used, that the divine rebuke was not fully deserved, that the punishment was disproportionate to the offense. So we remonstrate and expostulate and assert our innocence, as did Job, saying, "Thou art become cruel to me." We darken counsel by words without knowledge. Let us have done with this foolishness. Our hand should be upon our mouth and our mouth in the dust when the Most High delivers His judgments. Does He not love us? Is it not simply because of the affection He bears us that He takes such pains with our education, chastening us for our good and pruning us that we may bring forth more fruit? Why should we murmur? The valley of silence is the valley of blessing. Multitudes have so proved it. "Aaron held his peace," it is written, when his two older sons were smitten to death by the wrath of Jehovah. David in the 39th Psalm, referring apparently to the rebellion of Absalom, said, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it." Surely we in this day of higher privilege and larger grace may do as much. Though pain's furnace heat within may quiver, and God's breath upon the flame may blow, until all our heart in anguish shivers and trembles at the fiery glow, yet we may whisper, "As God will," and in His hottest fire hold still.

Silence should be kept also when man provokes us. This is often harder than the other. Some people have great power of exasperation. They tease and torment, abuse and insult us. And we are by no means disposed to stand it. We are inclined to give them as good as they send, and pay them off in their own coin. So we let fly the angry words. Alas, alas! Well says the psalmist, "Keep thy tongue from evil and thy lips from speaking guile," if thou wouldst see good days. "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from trouble." "The tongue is a fire," says St. James, "a world of iniquity among our members." No sword bites so fiercely as an evil tongue, no arrow cuts so deep, for the steel strikes only the body while the word wounds the soul. Silence is the best water-bucket for hot tempers; it is very cooling. If passion does not have ventilation it will soon go out. Shut the dampers, stop the draught, keep out the air, put on no fuel, it will speedily exhaust itself and be smothered.

We must be chary of talk when learning, either human or divine, attracts us. Silence is the attitude of the learner. When we want to know anything we must keep still and think, we must listen much if we would become wise. This age is too busy and bustling, too fast and furious, too feverish and fussy, to breed many wise men. Life with us is too hurried and greedy. It is a mill sluice, pouring swiftly on for business only, instead of a quiet brook flowing among the fields for refreshment. It is a race rather than a journey. The society of to-day rarely has time to be holy or to be calm in its soul, little time indeed to speak often with Jesus or to feed on His Word. It is largely on this account that the piety of most people is so superficial, that they are so unreliable in their conduct, so unsymmetrical in their character. "Meditation is the mother of devotion, and the daughter of retirement." It is not the amount of food we take hurriedly in that gives us strength, but the amount we slowly digest. "Be still and know," says Jehovah, "that I am God." We can know neither God nor ourselves unless we give more time to thought and communion with the Infinite. It is when the ship is at rest in the harbor that it takes in its cargo, not when it is tossing on the billows or bounding before the gale. The canvas of the artist must be quiet if he is to have any success in placing upon it some picture of beauty. So while God is trying to paint His likeness upon us, and form an image of Himself within us, it is essential that we keep still.

Once again, we should be silent when we have nothing to say, or nothing that is any good. If this rule were enforced much of the gabble that goes on in certain circles would come to a sudden pause. Better is it to be silent than needlessly to disparage another or speak evil of one's neighbors. Of the absent nothing but good, unless some manifest duty in the protection of the innocent makes itself plain. Of condemnations uncalled for, or judgments harsh and rash, we have far too many. When the heart is filled with tender pity for the erring and love divine for all, the tongue of the backbiter will no longer be heard.

"Speech is silver, silence golden; speech is human, silence divine." "Silence is deep as eternity, speech is shallow as time." "Silence is sweeter than speech, more eloquent than words, more musical than any song." "The deepest rivers make the least din." "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin."—Zion's Herald.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

In view of the universal demand of the Christian heart for fellowship in expressing its deeper desires to God, in an hour of national and world need, and in unison with those who have suggested the setting apart of a brief period of time for such, we, the undersigned, in a measure leaders in our churches by reason of our official positions therein, call upon the people throughout the land to set apart a sacred moment daily at the striking of high noon, in which united prayers shall be offered:

For those who fight and die for us;

For an appreciation of the issues involved in the war;

For strength to finish the task of winning a just peace;

For those who loyally serve and sturdily sacrifice at the home base;

For individual and world-wide cleansing from the sin which leads to war;

For the coming of the Kingdom of brotherhood and good will and God;

For a revival of the faith that there shall be ultimately an end to war and the dawning of the reign of peace.

THE PLACE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL IN PRESENT DAY MOVEMENTS.

By Bishop James Atkins, Chairman General Sunday School Board.
Doctor E. B. Chappell, Sunday School Editor and General Secretary.

We feel that there is a great need just now of calling attention to the new Sunday school order under our supervision.

First of all, let it be confessed that the world is in a state of convulsion, that more serious problems are calling for consideration than ever before in the history of the world. The supreme problem now, as often heretofore, is the religious problem with the various interests which are determined by it. While every available energy and resource must be placed under contribution to the winning of the war in behalf of the altruistic ideals of Christianity and of the national and sociological order resting thereon, we must not lose sight of the fact that the most important work of the Church is the training of the young in religious life. It would not be going too far to say that the war is now being won by the preachers and Sunday school teachers of a few years ago, because the question of victory is a question of morale and the morale of the hosts has been determined favorably to the Christian view by the religious education bestowed upon our young men in their childhood and earlier manhood. It would be neither right nor wise, therefore, to relax our efforts in this field even for the purpose of serving the public in a narrower way. President Wilson has more than intimated that the best service the churches can render to national and world interests is to keep in hand and do thoroughly their usual work.

It is an interesting fact that the war and the Centenary of American Methodist Missions have come on together. Possibly nobody is afraid that the demands of the war will seriously interfere with the Centenary work. And surely the Centenary work must not be allowed to interfere with the work of the Sunday school. If there be those who think that the extraordinary interest being taken in the Centenary celebration can supply any lack of activity in the Sunday school field proper, they are surely mistaken. If further, they think that the Centenary work within the Sunday schools themselves can in any measure take the place of our usual Sunday school work, they are still mistaken. Indeed, these great interests will prove more or less of a distraction from the work which the Church has specifically committed to the Sunday school.

The General Sunday School Board, acting under the new legislation of the late General Conference, has reorganized its work and laid the largest plans we have ever had for a truly aggressive life in all our Sunday school ranks and interests. Among other things, it has emphasized as never before the need of a large amount of work within the field of a nature which can be done only by competent men who are exclusively devoted to that work. After years of trial, it has been demonstrated that those Conferences which have maintained a first-class Sunday school secretary have made gains apparently out of all proportion to the cost of such agencies, and therefore the Conferences are strongly and affectionately urged not to draw in their efforts in this peculiarly fruitful line of work, but, on the other hand, they are urged, where the need requires, to go forward and supply every Conference field with such a worker. The Board found this work of the Conference Sunday school secretaries of so great value that they sought through the recent General Conference legislation on Sunday schools an increase of their funds, one of the reasons for which was that they might supplement the funds of the weaker Conferences and thus assure to them all the benefits of this tried and proved order of work. Instead, therefore, of favoring any withdrawal of this effort, we hope during the quadrennium to see a Sunday school secretary in every Conference in the Connection.

"If I cannot realize my ideal, I can at least idealize my real."

THE LABORER IS WORTHY OF HIS HIRE.

(The Literary Digest, one of the most widely read publications in the United States, very seldom does more than give a digest of the discussions of important subjects in the leading periodicals throughout the world. But recently the following editorial expression of opinion appeared in its pages, which we reproduce as expressing the views of one of our greatest secular journals. It worth reading.)

In every crisis of national life the clergymen of America have stood in the forefront of patriotic endeavor; in every human crisis they have brought support, and guidance, and comfort to souls in desperate need. Now it is time to measure the work and the needs of the preacher and pastor as men in other departments of work to-day are being measured, that their value may be rightly appraised and their needs fairly met.

The cost of living has greatly increased. Clothing, food, fuel, and all the daily incidentals that go to make up American life have gone up from thirty to a hundred per cent. And the loans and taxes for Freedom's war are ever making deeper drives into the purse. Wage-earners in every department of the nation's work have been demanding more income, and their demands have been recognized as just and necessary. Railroad men and miners, lumberjacks, and ship-builders, munition-workers, telegraph-operators, automobile-makers, and all the multitudes of skilled and unskilled laborers have been counted "worthy of their hire," and of higher hire. The United States Government, very recently, has raised the wages of two million railroad workers alone, giving the poorest paid men an increase of 43 per cent. Corporations and individual employers without number throughout the United States have taken similar action. Trade-unions are standing back of their men and using pressure when necessary to gain for them the means to live their lives and do their work as Americans should.

Who stands back of the clergymen of America in these days of pressure? What great organization or compelling authority, what generous heart or spirit of fair play is winning for your minister, or pastor, or priest, or rabbi the salary increase that will give him strength, courage, efficiency, and success in his vital and exalted work for the welfare of the nation, and the Kingdom of God?

Your pastor is not a cheap man nor an unskilled laborer. He has brought long, careful training to his task. He was chosen with scrutinizing care as to his qualifications, and he is being measured today by high and exacting requirements in the performance of his work. Carry that measurement to its just conclusion. What salary would you expect to pay to the trained man in business of whom such important work and expert ability were required? Set down on paper some of the qualities and duties you demand of your pastor, and then judge their value.

He must be a man among men, a man of force, tact, and agreeable personality, a good mixer, a man of knowledge, wisdom, and authority, whose presence commands respect and whose word carries conviction. He must be able to influence men and women, win their confidence, kindle their enthusiasm, direct their energies, and organize their working powers. He must be full of sympathy, ready with consolation, a strength in weakness, a bright light in times of darkness, and a never-failing source of inspiration to the souls of his people. You expect all this of him.

Your pastor, also, must be the successful head and center of your organized church activities, business, social, and spiritual. On occasion, or as a regular part of his task, he must be an expert money-raiser. You engage him as your chief and leader, the general manager of your church, if not its actual creator, or savior from its difficulties. You put upon him a burden and a responsibility you never dream of entrusting to any cheap man in business.

Nor are those his greatest tasks. He must read, and study, and meditate, and commune with the Infinite. He must understand men, and know their work, their trials, their problems, their temptations, their deep inner feelings and aspirations, and the avenues of helpful approach to their sympathies and convictions. He must know something of history, science, literature. He must be familiar with all social needs, and institutions, and methods. He must be able to interpret the Word of God with true spiritual insight, and practical human application. He must stand before you in the pulpit on the Sabbath and deliver messages that search the soul, feed the mind, bring courage to the heart, make plain the path of daily life, and lift you nearer to heaven, or bring heaven nearer to earth.

In these days, also, your preacher must proclaim the ideals and principles of America. He must stir the patriotism of his young men and send them with strong hearts and noble vision into the service of their country. He must pastor them in the camps and follow them with his letters and prayers as they go across the sea to fight. The Government values him so highly that it has already called thousands of American clergymen into active service to shepherd the fighting men and help them win the war. At home the Government calls him to be its mouth-piece in its appeals to its citizens for every form of patriotic service or economy prescribed as needful for victory. You expect your pastor to be equal to such demands and to do your church credit when called upon for public addresses or community action.

When you have listed all the qualities and services you ask of your pastor, make out the bill for the amount your church ought to pay for such a man, and then move things to see that the church pays that bill. Never mind what has been done in the past, nor what long habit has accustomed the church to believe can be done. The standing record of clergymen's salaries throughout this great rich nation is a pitiful shame, and belies the real heart and fairness of the American people. The average salary of clergymen in ten of the largest denominations is only $793 a year. What trade or business would tolerate such a condition?

The minister of your church is a human being like the rest of us, and he is feeling the pressure of increased cost of living just as we do. But no Government decree has raised his salary. No corporation or trade-union stands back of him. He does not go on strike. He simply trusts his people, and works faithfully for them seven days a week, and many nights, and struggles to look respectable, and pay his bills, and perform the miracles expected of him, often for less than the salary of the young girl stenographer who teaches a class in his Sunday school or the wages of the man who lays the sidewalk in front of his church.

Among the more than two million readers of The Literary Digest are active and substantial members of thousands of churches throughout the United States. To them this frank appeal is made, in keeping with the urgent needs of the day, and the American spirit of justice and generosity. Give your minister a lift. Take the initiative now and have his salary increased to an amount which will come nearer to the real value of his services, and enable him to meet the increased cost of living. He is not demanding it, but he needs it none the less, and your own sense of right demands it for him. If his salary is $800, it ought to be made, at once, $1200. If it is $1000, it ought to be raised to $1500. There is scarcely a church, large or small, anywhere in America that can not increase its pastor's salary at least 50 per cent. Money never was so plentiful. More actual cash—gold, silver, and paper currency—is in circulation to-day than at any time in the nation's history, and there is a bigger share for every man, woman, and child. See that your pastor gets his fair share of your profits and those of every member in your church.

Back up the soldiers of America who follow the flag to France! Billions for them! Nothing is too much nor too good for our soldiers of liberty. But now remember that your minister is one of the bravest, worthiest soldiers of all. He is fighting for America, for the righteousness that "exalteth a nation." He is fighting for America, as he puts his clean, valiant, patriotic spirit into the youth and into the men and women of his congregation and sends them out into the tasks of the week better fitted to answer America's call. He is fighting for the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, to help win its victories over the arch-enemy of the human race, the destroyer of bodies and souls. He is the soldier of mercy to those in distress, the ever-ready soldier of service to those who need help. Back him up with whole-hearted support and a quick, generous increase in salary.

We have taken this page to speak for the clergymen of America in this supreme crisis of the nation's readjustment, because we know that they are the one great devoted, indispensable body of faithful workers who have no spokesman. Only in this way has it seemed possible to reach the individual consciences and hearts of millions of men and women who, in all our experience, have never failed to respond to any just call.

WORK DAY FOR MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

Dear Brethren: The Methodist Orphanage of Jackson comes to you with the request that this year you observe as WORK DAY, Saturday, October 12. By Work Day is meant that you give the proceeds of one day's labor to the support of those orphan children of Mississippi who are under the watch-care of the Methodist Church. There are two reasons why a general observance and generous contribution are urgently requested.

First—The railroads have notified us they can grant no free cars this year, and that all rebates on freight would be recalled. This means a great loss to us in flour, potatoes, molasses, etc., which have annually been sent to the Home by our friends.

Second—Not only are we forced into the market for many things we have hitherto had donated, but we are compelled to pay WAR PRICES, and unless we have a generous response to this appeal we shall suffer.

We are mailing you under separate cover a bundle of envelopes. Will you kindly distribute them judiciously, and ask for their return by Sunday the 13th? This is a simple request, and we feel assured of your co-operation.

Let us hear from you please.

DR. MEEK'S ARTICLE.

Dear Brother Carley: I am aware of the fact that Dr. Meek is fully able to care for himself in setting forth his true position when he has been misrepresented or misunderstood, yet I am anxious to say a few words on the matter mentioned in his article, appearing in the Advocate of September 19, because I happen to be intimately acquainted with the circumstances and can bear full testimony to the correctness of all his assertions.

Not only has Dr. Claudius Spencer inadvertently misstated the facts pertaining to the position of Dr. Meek and the others of the North Mississippi delegation on unification at the recent session of the General Conference of the Southern Methodist Church, but Dr. James R. Joy, in a conspicuous and lengthy editorial in the New York Christian Advocate of May 30, set forth his impresson of the circumstances in words just as misleading as those of Dr. Spencer. Dr. Joy stated that "the report from the Committee on Church Relations was adopted with practical unanimity by the General Conference, a single delegation, North Mississippi (led by Dr. Meek, of the New Orleans Christian Advocate), solidly dissenting." This remark is comparable with that of Dr. Spencer when the latter said that the members of the North Mississippi delegation "were the only ones who voted against a report favoring a continuation of the Commission on Unification, every other vote in the General Conference being solidly for it." While Dr. Meek, with his usual courtesy and magnanimity, excuses these high authorities of Northern Methodism for unmeaningly misrepresenting him and his brethren of North Mississippi, it occurs to me that had these gentlemen read more carefully the proceedings of the General Conference as written in the Daily Advocate they would have discovered that Dr. Meek and the other delegates from North Mississippi had occupied, or at least had the opportunity of occupying the position of the Minority Report (which had, just before the vote on the report in question, been withdrawn by its author unexpectediy), instead of their opposing the appointing of a unification commission and the continuance of negotiations. It was known in wide circles of the General Conference that Dr. Meek was supporting the Minority Report; and he favored it because it stood for the continuation of the former Commission on Unification and for a surcease of efforts on the part of the Commission until the meeting of the General Conference of the Northern Methodist Church two years hence, when that organization would have the opportunity to speak with some degree of authority. Accordingly, when the Minority Report was withdrawn without notice, Dr. Meek found himself in the position of having no paper before the body which set forth his convictions, and he was forced to vote against the Majority Report, which had become the one report of the Committee on Church Relations. That Dr. Meek at all times stood for a continuation of the Commission on Unification is well known by every one the least acquainted with the facts in the case.

But the unfortunate phase of the remarks of Dr. Spencer and Dr. Joy, making the impression that Dr. Meek and the other delegates of the North Mississippi Conference were the only ones voting against the report of the Committee on Church Relations, is not due to their carelessness but to the unhappy record appearing in the Daily Advocate, which was not written in accordance with the facts because the presiding Bishop inadvertently announced the vote in favor of the report as unanimous with the exception of the North Mississippi delegation. I happened to be with Dr. Meek on the floor of the General Conference when the vote was taken. Dr. James Cannon had spoken at length to the Majority Report. Judge John Candler, on questioning him, announced the withdrawal of the Minority Report, and the Bishop at once took the vote on the Majority Report, which now became the one report of the Committee on Church Relations. A great number of the delegates stood. Then the Bishop took the opposition vote, and amid the confusion he evidently did not notice those who stood to oppose. There was a light scattering vote in opposition over the house. But the Bishop, evidently being under the impression that there was no opposition, announced the vote in favor of the report as unanimous. I immediately turned to Dr. Meek and told him that the Bishop's use of the word "unanimous" under the circumstances was unfortunate. After some others had been spoken with, it was suggested that I go to the platform and quietly call the attention of the Bishop to the error. He was most courteous and expressed himself as sorry for the occurrence. Other business engaging his attention for the time, he asked me to sit on the platform and remind him to correct the erroneous impression before the body. I had told the Bishop that some of the brethren had not voted in favor of the report, and upon his desiring to know in whose name he was to announce that the vote was not unanimous I had given him the name of the North Mississippi delegation. It was not my intention to make the impression upon the Bishop that this delegation was the only dissenting voice. But when the time permitted, the Bishop arose and stated that the vote on the report was not unanimously favorable, mentioning the North Mississippi delegation. Immediately, Mr. J. H. Sherard, a lay member of this delegation, addressed the Bishop, saying that the North Mississippi delegation desired to be recorded as opposing the report. The Bishop so announced it and the secretary so recorded it. The air of finality about the matter was now discernible. I immediately retired from the platform, knowing that my mission had only been partly accomplished, but realizing that the opportunity for straightening out the tangle had passed. Instead of the record standing that the report had been adopted by a great majority without being unanimous, it now stood that it was adopted by the whole General Conference, only the North Mississippi delegation dissenting. These are the facts in the case, and the criticism of Dr. Meek on the matter is undeserved.

All who read Dr. Meek's letter of last week doubtless saw portrayed therein the great Christian heart of the man. He loves beyond all else the Master and the Church. C. A. BATTLE.

READING BETWEEN THE LINES.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D.

Having had the great pleasure, and also the hard work, of entertaining the Mississippi Conference four times, I am in position to extend a sympathetic hand to my young brethren, Decell and Barry, in response to their appeal to the members of the Conference; indeed, the very suggestion of entertaining a Conference arouses all the spirit of Job's war horse which heareth the battle afar off and paweth in the valley, or perhaps more like the Dutchman who said that the booming of the cannon at Vicksburg made every hair "stand upon his head like a brass band playing 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

Already the tug is on; already I hear the numerous "Well, I'd like to entertain some of the preachers—but" and then the BUTS! "If my father and mother come," or "I may have a friend visiting at that time," or "If I can be certain of servants," or mirabile dictu: "If the children don't have measles." Yes, I am hearing already, over long distance, excuses emanating from the pantry based on limitations of flour, sugar, etc.; and a special dispensation must be gotten from Mr. Hoover before positive answer can be given. So round and round the hoys are going, making many such notes as "call later."

In item 1 our prospective hosts say, it will be their pleasure to look after the wishes and smallest details of our comforts, hut they haven't reported the number of, "I'll take two (and possibly four) preachers, but don't send me a woman." "Let sisterly love continue," but not during Annual Conference. One of the hardest questions in psychology that I have yet tackled is that of the sisters towards the sisters at Conference times, and it's one of those numerous "Buts" that make up the page. Notwithstanding all of these implications, my experience has been that any community that invites the Conference counts it an honor to be selected; but at the same time few communities understand the details or make calculation for the great amount of work placed upon the committees for carrying out the details. Since Decell and Barry are re-enforced with a good strong Bond, we feel perfectly easy that we shall be comfortably housed and abundantly fed.

In item 2, we are reminded hy the brethren that only bona fide members can he provided for, and right here, if the brethren who are "in the saddle" will be prompt, they can help wonderfully in straightening out the difficulties. My box of relics shows, that while the last Conference session met on December 5, three of the beloved sent in their lists of lay delegates and applicants for admission after November 27; these should be in the hands of the committee at least one month before the Conference opens, that contingencies may be provided for.

While my experience has heen that the tug is in securing homes, the time for "groans that can not be uttered" is in locating the brethren in accord with special requests from friends, and brethren who need special consideration. The gradual growth of our body and the season of our meeting have for some time suggested to me the advisability, if not the necessity, of a collection from each charge to be known as the Conference Entertainment Fund, upon which the Conference host may draw to meet necessary expenses of caring for the body. Evidently this thought is not with me alone, for at the last two sessions where it was my privilege to act as host, I received more than one letter running about thus: "I'd rather pay my own way; get me a room at a good hotel."

Now, if the Advocate thinks this is presuming, or if it thinks Decell, et al., may count it a "butt in," just put it aside for kindling, the first frosty morning. As I said in the beginning, the thought of entertaining a Conference got so much of Job's war horse spirit in my system that it just had to come out. Good bye. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

LATEST STATUS OF THE CAMP PASTOR.

By Rev. E. O. Watson, Secretary, War Work Commission.

It appears that the order of the War Department concerning camp pastors was inspired chiefly by the belief on the part of the Department that such an order would increase the responsibility and efficiency of the chaplain, by giving to him at once on this side the full ministry that he alone would have to perform on the other side.

Conferences have been held between the committees of the Federal Council of Churches and the various denominational commissions engaged in war work with the Third Assistant Secretary of War, who is in charge of religious matters in the Army. These conferences have resulted in the appointment of a small committee to confer with the Third Assistant Secretary of War concerning a hasis of agreement that shall at once carry out the purpose to magnify the work of a chaplain and at the same time, consistently with that purpose, give the camp pastor, under proper regulations, a status in the camps. The utmost harmony prevails and we not only hope hut sincerely believe that a satisfactory agreement will be reached in the very near future.

In the meantime, we publish the decision reached hy the Executive Committee of the War Work Commission of our Church as to our plan of action in relation to camp pastors. The Executive Commission adopted the following and requests its publication in all of our papers:

That, in view of the recent order concerning camp pastors and assistant chaplains in the Army, we shall follow plans and work on lines in absolute harmony with the present or future orders of the War Department with reference to this as in all other matters pertaining to the welfare of our soldiers, and we herewith set forth some forms of action that cannot in any way conflict with the present order and will not hinder but will help in any future status that may be granted us by any modified form of the order that may be decided upon:

1st. The establishment of church headquarters in towns, cities and rural communities adjacent to camps, and the maintenance at these of the highest order of intensive work in behalf of soldiers on leave.

2d. The assignment of assistant pastors to rural as well as town and city churches adjacent to camps where such arrangement can be established in harmony and for the real welfare of our men.

3rd. Special ministries of every proper sort and as far as possible to our men within camp by pastors of our churches, or their assistants, and we suggest that our pastors and assistants seek through military channel permission for and invitation to perform these ministries.

4th. Redoubled effort to reach our men and draw them to our churches and to the church headquarters when on leave.

5th. Gripping emphasis upon the preaching at every service in all our churches of Christ as the only, the present, and all potent Savior of men, preaching everywhere, whether soldiers be present or absent, but especially where there are men in uniform or men and boys soon to go to the colors, the old, old gospel of a present salvation through repentance and faith in Christ as the only Name given under Heaven among men whereby one may be saved.

6th. That every pastor, presiding elder, and Bishop bear constantly in mind the great obligation of the Church, no matter what the difficulties, and place special emphasis upon soldier ministry through the gospel.

7th. That we seek to meet the opportunities affored by the great war work industriai plants established in various parts of our country where thousands are massed under conditions without adequate provision for churches and the regular ministry of the gospel; and that we urge all of our representatives and leaders to bear constantly in mind that these industrial workers are as truly engaged in war work as those with the colors and as truly need our ministry.

8th. That we must do all possible for our chaplains, seeking constantly to enlarge and to make more efficient their great ministry, and that we provide our chaplains with every time and labor-saver possible to the end that their full strength may be devoted to their great task of spirituai ministry.

9th. That in order to promote the efficiency of chaplains, we seek a larger number of our maturer men already filling our more responsible places in the ministry to enter this great ministry of the chaplaincy.

A FEW FEEBLE REMARKS.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

"What's the matter with the Church?" "Is the Church asleep?" "Will there be a Church after the war?" "What is the Church doing that entitles her to life?" "The Church has no organization to forward this essentially religious end of peace on earth." "The pity that there has been no organized or sustained effort to bring the Church and the public into line with Mr. Wilson's great idea." Many such questions are being asked, many such accusations made, and warning calls heard. "Freedom will perish, and civilization—and not only civilization, but Christianity—will go down in a welter of blood and crime—unless the Church is linked up with a League of Nations for the prevention of future wars."

Where did Mr. Wilson get his big idea? He is the son of a minister, a child of the Church. That answers it. The Church is even accused of permitting, if not causing, slavery, the rum traffic, and the like. "Et tu, Brute." For much of this comes from her own body. Every informed man knows that the enlightened conscience of the Church put these things out of business. The Church is our conscience maker. She does not have to form political alliance to do her work. On the contrary, whenever and wherever the Church has been led to form such alliances, she has done so at her peril. Read the history of Austria if you would get concrete evidence. One would think from some of the statements made these days that the Church was in the last throes of a convulsion, or that cerebral meningitis had her by the back of the neck, or that she was a forsaken institution dying of dry rot. It is amusing, despite the seriousness of the would-be prophets.

"It is the high thought of the Government that the Fourth Liberty Loan shall be distinctive as a spontaneous and voluntary response by the people to the need of the hour. Responsible leaders are agreed that the pulpit furnishes the best platform from which to disseminate this ruling idea." So Uncle Sam is calling on this "sick unto death" institution to help him. He is even urging this despised body to be in the very forefront of the drive. AND THIS AFTER A DEAL OF EXPERIENCE.

"When the chairman of the County in which your church is located comes to you—for never have the pastors in our country failed to help ANY organization with a purpose such as that of the Y. W. C. A."—And the various associations are calling, calling, calling—AND NOT IN VAIN.

Some one has made a grievous mistake. Either the fellows who are straining their diaphragms to the breaking point telling weary mortals how dead the Church is, and how the soldiers discount her; how those same soldiers believe in God to the "cussin" point, but consider the Church a kind of fossilized junk heap to be relegated to the rear, are proclaiming their own asininity, else our Uncle Samuel is a mighty blind fellow, feeling about in the dark like a shorn Samson. More, this blindness is less creditable to him, seeing he has already been using the Church to the fullest, having thereby a mighty good chance to know her lack of strength. But he has failed to discover either her poverty or helplessness.

"Responsible leaders are agreed that the pulpit furnishes the best platform," etc. RESPONSIBLE LEADERS! Then there must be some irresponsible ones. Who are they? They must be the fellows who spend so much time proclaiming the weakness of the Church that they haven't time to do much else. Self-appointed leaders! Blind men crying aloud in the dark! Restless fellows with an itch for the limelight that can be scratched in no other way! Little engines that can't generate enough steam to run and "blow" at the same time—so they spend their time "blowing!" And there be some that hear them and get scared. There are always a few wet-nurse preachers who scream every time some false prophet shouts. Alas and alack!

There is no institution rendering service to the boys at the front that is not the child of the Church. We are honored in what our children are doing. There isn't a drive at home that does not find the Church at the forefront. She is sending her men by the million, her money by the billion. But she is not standing on the housetop trumpeting her own praises—AND THE MOLES ARE GETTING BAD.

Church men of the South have practically financed the Government, so far as this part of the country is concerned, kept the machinery of the Church going, and filled the purse of her children in the field. Then her doors have been opened to every man, all but, that has come in the name of the Government. Things have been tolerated that would not have been under any other circumstances. We have laughed and applauded when "tomtits," and an occasional "bigtit," have "cussed the Huns," showing no special ability for anything better. Often this "cussin" has been done in the presence of our women and children. The pity of it!

Our preachers are being called on as never before. They are responding like the loyal men they are. Paying their own expenses, making Liberty Loan speeches, heading successful W. S. S. drives, helping organize workers, going to various meetings to get "thunder," investing of their small means in the cause they advocate, never complaining, yet making sacrifices, some of them second to none—not even the men on the firing line.

There is a preacher in my district getting the munificent sum of $100 per year who has done more work for the Government in his charge, a large one, than any other five men I know. He would be amazed and embarrassed if he were called a hero. He is too busy to think of himself. He has never called a strike for higher wages. And that is about the truth concerning the Church. She is too busy trying to help men to advertise or STRIKE. I venture the assertion that there is not to be found a body of men and women in the world, numbers considered, so self-sacrificing, so patriotic, so filled with the desire for a righteous peace, as are found in the Church. Active men and women in the Church are slackers neither in words nor purse.

"Responsible leaders" know on whom to call. The Church is now coming into her own. The day of her real strength is just dawning. She may make changes—she is constantly doing that—but she is standing by the boys in the trenches from Salvation Army lassie to khaki-clad chaplain, from Sunday school tot to heart-broken mothers—and the boys will stand by her on their return. To think otherwise would be to bring against them a lying indictment. We are making good investment. Some of the returns are coming in now; the great harvest is just ahead.

"So mote it be."

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

WHAT IS THAT IN THINE HAND?

Property is tbe gateway to religion. God himself hath made it so. Men will neglect their holy books, and they will forget to pray, but they will never forget to eount their money nor to measure tbeir wheat. It is ever tbus upon the earth and ever shall be. Therefore before prayer, before almsgiving, before the reading of any saered book, comes this simple yet searehing question of the Lord: "What is that in thine hand?" As I answer that question I shall know the road upon whieh I am traveling, whether it be the glorious highway of the living God or the dim patbway that loses itself in mists and shadows.—Calkins.

THAT DALLAS MEETING—SEPT. 17-19.

Two glorious, golden days right out of the heart of September were set apart for this meeting of Centenary enthusiasts. For weeks before the time set for the meeting, the Publicity man from his central office had been "boosting" and then went to Dallas a week ahead of time to lay final plans and to have everything in readiness for the great day. It was a great day—two of them. In faet, the word "great" is the word that best describes the gathering. The bearty welcome to the good city of Dallas, the courtesy of the press, the cordial hospitality of hotels and eitizens, the responsive and sympathetic attitude of those in attendance, all combined to make this a "great" oecasion, and one which will result in "great" things for the "greatest" enterprise which has yet been undertaken by the "great" Methodist Chureh.

The attendance exeeeded expectations. Every department of Church life was represented. The Bishops were there, the presiding elders, pastors, missionaries, laymen and laywomen—all interested, eager and hopeful. The program had been carefully planned and was carried out without a hitch. Exhaustive surveys were made of the various fields in which the Church maintains work, showing what has already been done and what must be undertaken in the way of enlargement if Southern Methodism is to do her part in the evangelization of the world. Stereoptieon views illustrated in an impressive and striking manner tbe need at home and abroad and gave point to the faets and figures brought out in the surveys.

The underlying note of the whole meeting was that through stewardship of time, serviee and money, and through intercession, the goal of the Centenary movement would be reaehed and Methodist missions would enter the second hundred years with renewed zeal and enlarged vision.

THE CELEBRATION GLORIOUS.

By William H. Johnston, Presiding Elder Murfreesboro District.

The Centenary of Missions! When I first heard of it I tbought, "Those Nashville fellows have thrown anotber fit." After some deliberation I coneluded, "It is a eall from God." Tbrilled through and through by its very audaeity and unlimited possibilities, I realized that it was the greatest movement of the Chureh in all the centuries.

Primarily, the celebration is intended to elevate the spiritual state of the Chureh. There are some things an emotional revival will not do. Spiritual brain and brawn will be the outcome of this enterprise that will tell in the eenturies to eome.

At first flush tbe spiritual elevation of 2,200,000 Methodists and securing a fund of $35,000,000 seem staggering, bewildering—impossible. The war must be won, home fires must burn brightly, individual financial integrity must be preserved, all war, religious and mercy funds must be liberally subscribed to. In the face of these demands, our Centenary Fund, intended to make God's world safe for Democraey, seems so small as to be a mere bagatelle. It must be bravely attempted, faithfully persisted in, and finally overseribed. Withal, it is not going to be so impossible as it appears.

A typical member of small calibre recently provoked the following dialogue:

"How much is it they want us to give 'em?"

"$35,000,000."

"How much of that will the Tennessee Conferenee be expected to raise?"

"About $1,000,000.

"How much of that has our District (Murfreesboro) got to pay?"

"About $100,000."

"How much will that be apiece?"

"We have eight thousand members, therefore, if each pays $13 in five years, or $2.75 per year, or 24 cents per month, or six cents per week, or four-fifths of a cent a day, our part of the great redemption fund will be fully met."

"Not so bad," said he.

"I should say not, and when we go 'over the top' we will not have much to brag about."

Think of it, in these last days we are actually setting our heads and hearts to do something worth while! We have fixed and fixed, and fixed. We have made laws, wise and otherwise. We have become pretty decent, we have adorned, amused, pulled wires, gotten ourselves eleeted. Broken out thick with such sins, insignicancies, and infinitesimals as characterize an unsanetified ministry and membership, we have stood still for years, so I am glad we purpose doing something at the end of the days. Think of it, after one hundred years the Chureh is going to move swiftly and surely for the conquest of the world.

SAVE AMERICA.

Just as we are discovering the magnitude of our Home Mission problem the Centenary Movement is born to provide the adequate revenue. The real Home Mission problem is to make this country so thoroughly Christian that it may deliver itself wholly on the non-Christian lands of the world.

The foreign missionary program as proposed by the Church to-day involves the outlay of a vast amount of men and money. If our nation were wholly Christian we could furnish our quota of the resources for carrying out this program. But ours is not a Christian nation. More than half our inhabitants have no church affiliation. Fifteen million are foreigners and more than that number near foreigners, not yet assimilated. Many thousands in the remote mountain settlements are not available for missionary work. Nine millions of black people must be changed from liabilities to assets in missionary work; many thousands in industrial centers are drifting from God while a few hundred thousand aborigines are waiting to be brought to Christ.

The Centenary Movement undertakes to supply men and money enough to evangelize the unevangelized, to Americanize the un-Americanized; to lift the colored people from the column of liability to asset; to give the belated mountaineers a chance; to make Christ the center in industrial centers and to Christianize the Red man. Nothing but a great movement like the Centenary would provide adequate resources to do this. Having made this country wholly Christian, then, and only then, shall we be able to do our part in world-wide evangelization. Thanks to the Centenary Movement for the prospect!

MEDICAL WORK IN KOREA.

Extracts from report of Newton H. Bowman, M.D.

Dr. Newton H. Bowman, of Choon Chun, Korea, in reporting his work, says:

"The results aecomplished in the medical work recently have exeeeded expectations. The blind have been taught to memorize the Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments and Apostles' Creed, while all those who could not read have been taught to read and write, which, of course enables them to study the Bible. Daily Bible teaching and prayer in the wards and outdoor clinic waiting rooms have done much to plant the Gospel in the hearts and minds of those who have come in contact with us.

"Of five men who have come to believe, three are policemen who have bought Bibles and are living Christian lives; another, blind for thirty years, after an operation which restored his sight, said, 'there is nothing else to do but believe;' the other a boy, who though crippled in body, is stronger in heart and richer for the hope he now has through Christian faith.

"Recently I invited, through the pastor of the church, any who felt disposed to preach to the patients in the hospital, and the result is that there has been a preacher for every day in the week. This voluntary preaching has been the means of nearly uniting the Church and medical work in the minds of the people than ever before in the history of our Choon Chun work. In fact, the hospital has become headquarters for the Koreans and the church members delight in helping it along.

"However small this work may appear numerically, yet the year marks the largest and perhaps the most successful work in the history of this medical mission. The people dependent upon us for their medicines have learned that we are their friends in times of affliction. Many have renounced their heathen practices and become Christians. In one instance nearly all of one large, influential family, including mother, daughters and grandchildren, have become believers and ardent patrons of this dispensary because of our treatment of one of the daughters who sought us after all else had failed to relieve her.

"Another feature of the dispensary work has been to teach the heathen that dog meat is not a suitable diet for sick people, nor is dog's liver a proper poultice for sores, both these uses being a custom among us. This practice prevails mostly during the summer months when there is much sickness. This heathen custom is mentioned only to show one of the many ways in which Christianity is making these people better.

"The atrocious practice of sticking red hot needles into the flesh as a means of treating the sick is fast abating as a result of Christian influence. And it is nothing short of a seven-day wonder to them when we treat their sick and actually get them entirely well without using these red hot needles.

"During the course of the year we have treated many cases of poisoning as the result of taking native herbs bought from native Korean doctors. Many of the wives and concubines are committing suicide by drinking concentrated lye, but some do not die and become patients in this dispensary. Every effort is made to convert them to Christianity, that they may see the awfulness of these practices."

Only God can give life, but surely one nearest approaches God-likeness when trying to save life. No mission of the Centenary will count for more than to make more effective the work done through medical missionaries and Christian hospitals in saving life and relieving suffering.

The Home Circle

HOW DO YOU HOE?

Say, how do you hoe your row, young chap?
Say, how do you hoe your row?
Do you hoe it fair,
Do you hoe it square,
Do you hoe it the best you know?
Do you cut the weeds, as you ought to do,
And leave what's worth while there?
The harvest you'll garner depends on you;
Are you working on the square?

Are you killing the noxious weeds, young chap?
Are you making it straight and clean?
Are you going straight,
At a hustling gait,
Are you scattering all that's mean?
Do you laugh and sing and whistle shrill,
And dance a step or two,
As the row you hoe leads up the hill?
The harvest is up to you.

KITTY'S STRANGE FLOWERS.

Kitty was so proud of her garden! Her father had it spaded up for her, but she herself had raked it over and over, and divided it into neat beds, with tiny paths between.

"What shall I plant in it?" was the next question.

Kitty's father was the Secretary of an Agricultural Bureau. She did not understand exactly what it was all about. She knew he had lots of little packets of seed in the pigeon-holes of his desk; and that he was always raising queer plants and flowers in his garden and greenhouse.

"Try mignonette, candytuft, and sweet alyssum," said he. "They are easy to raise. And you can put in a row of sweet peas, if you like, and a few scarlet runners. Here are all the seeds you need."

Kitty clapped her hands. The seeds rattled delightfully in the paper packets. She planted them all. Still she was not quite satisfied.

"Can I have just one more kind, Papa?"

"O yes. Choose it yourself."

Kitty looked over the packages in the desk. Most of them had long, funny names.

"I guess I'll try these," she said, spelling out the hard words: Cnicus lanceolatus.

Her father smiled. "I wouldn't take that," he said. "You'll be sorry if you do."

"Hasn't it a pretty flower, Papa?"

"Rather—some folks think so. But it won't look well in your garden, and it will hurt the other plants. Try something else."

But Kity had made up her mind, and her father let her have her way. The whole bed had been planted, so she sprinkled in the strange seed here and there among the rest.

The plantlets came up, and thrived wonderfully—especially the odd kind that had gone in last. These strangers grew and grew, until they bade fair to crowd out the pretty delicate sprays of the mignonette, and everything else in the garden.

One day in early summer Kitty came to her father in tears.

"Papa, do come and look at my garden. Nothing will grow but that ugly old Cnicus, or whatever it is."

"Look at them closely, Kitty. Don't you recognize them? There's one, just outside the fence, full-grown."

"You don't mean, Papa, that they're—just—common—thistles?"

Her father nodded. "We must pull them up, little girl. It will hurt a little, but nothing else will grow with them. They're like small, ugly faults that spoil the whole character. Come, I'll help you, darling."

Kitty now says there is one Golden Text she never will forget: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Sunday School Times.

MARBLES AND MANNERS.

"I'm never going to own anything in partnership with Harvey again!" Jack's face was red, and his voice had an edge on it.

He had spoken to his older brother, Hugh, who was reading by the table, but suddenly a head bobbed over the window sill and another voice, also with an edge, answered him unexpectedly. "Why?" demanded Harvey.

Jack looked a little taken back. "Because you're too careless," he said. "There's that blue marble, now—"

Harvey laughed, though his face was red. "And there's that green marble," he echoed, "that you lost, and the brown, and the purple."

Jack's eyes flashed. "I haven't finished naming the ones you lost yet," he rejoined. "The striped, you remember, and the white, and maybe more."

Here Hugh yawned and put down his book. "You two seem to have lost lots more than marbles, I should say," he remarked. "Seems to me you've lost a good deal of your manners."

But the smaller boys did not reply. They were getting more and more exasperated with each other. Both faces were flushed and they were talking very loudly.

"So it's this way," Hugh put in again. "Jack lost the green marble and the brown and the purple, and Harvey lost the white and the striped and the blue. That puts you even, anyway."

Harvey turned his back on Jack. "All right, then, we just won't own anything together, any more. I guess I'll be as well off as you!"

"Not quite," Jack retorted. "You lost the three prettiest marbles, remember. I always did specially like that blue."

"Just as I always specially liked the green," said Harvey, bound to have the last word.

"Boys," mother called from the sitting-room, "won't one of you run upstairs and bring me my thimble?"

The two little brothers made a bolt for the stairs; they always liked to wait on mother. They reached her room at the same time, and two brown hands plunged together into her work-basket. The contents of the basket were soon topsy-turvy.

"Here it is!" exclaimed Jack, in triumph. Then a queer look came into his face. For there, nestling against the thimble, where three marbles, a green, a brown and a purple.

They hurried downstairs. "O, yes," said mother. "I intended to tell you about those marbles. The other day, while I was mending a certain coat pocket, I found them in the lining. They had slipped through the hole in the pocket."

Harvey looked up quickly. "Jack's coat," he said.

"No, yours," mother answered. "I'm just about to mend Jack's now."

Hugh turned away to hide a smile. Harvey looked sheepish; he tried to muster up the courage to glance at Jack, and when he did Jack was looking sheepish, too. Mother was reaching for his coat, but Jack stood still, turning redder and redder, and fumbling with the edge.

"I believe—" he said, "that is, I am almost sure—that marbles spilled into this lining, too. Slowly he pulled off the coat and shook it. Two marbles fell out—a striped and a white. "Well!" was all he could say. Both little boys looked ashamed.

"As for the beautiful blue marble," said Hugh, "that never was really lost to begin with. I've just remembered. When Jack traded bureaus with me he left it in the drawer, and it's been there ever since."

Mother smiled at the two abashed little brothers, but her eyes looked grieved. "Well, boys," she said, "now you have all six."

"But we feel pretty foolish," owned Jack. "I do, especially."

"I do, too," Harvey agreed. "Maybe manners would have been more important than marbles, anyway."

Mother said she thought so—and after that they generally were.—Southern Churchman.

WHY THE DAISY WAS PRAISED.

A certain prince went out into his vineyard to examine it, and he came to a peach tree and said: "What are you doing for me?"

The tree said: "In the spring I give my blossoms and fill the air with fragrance, and in my boughs hangs the fruit which presently men gather and carry into the palace for you."

The prince said, "Well done, my good and faithful servant."

Then he went down into the meadow and said to the waving grass: "What are you doing?"

And the grass replied: "We are giving our lives for others—for your sheep and cattle—that they may be nourished."

'Well done," said the prince, "good and faithful servants, that give up your lives for others."

And then he came to a little daisy that was growing in the hedgerow, and said: "What are you doing?"

And the daisy said: "Nothing! nothing! I cannot make a nesting place for the birds, I cannot give shelter to the cattle. I cannot send fruit unto the palace, and I cannot even furnish food for the sheep and cows; they do not want me in the meadow. All I can do is to be the best daisy I can be."

And the prince bent down and kissed the daisy, and said: "There is none better than you."

THE PATRIOTISM OF WORK.

The following appeal has just been issued by the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor:

"A decidedly critical—almost desperate—situation exists in regard to the labor supply. Advices from Washington are that the present shortage of common labor in essential war industries amounts to ONE MILLION MEN.

"As a result of this condition, vitally important war work is being retarded all over the country. The Midvale Steel Plant at Coatesville, Pa., manufacturing munitions for our Army, has been forced to shut down part of the plant for lack of labor. Unless 5000 laborers are immediately forthcoming, construction work on the vitally important Picric Acid Plant at Brunswick, Ga., will cease. Part of the construction work at Mussel Shoals, Ala. (though not the Air Nitrates plant proper) has been ordered discontinued for the time being.

"A similar condition prevails with other Essential War Industries. ALL THIS BECAUSE OF A LACK OF LABOR—while many men, rich and poor, white and black, are still idling and loafing; and thousands of others are frittering away their time in non-essential work. The condition is a shameful one for the American people to face. It must be changed immediately.

"Unless we speed up the work of production in this country, the American army in France, whose glorious achievements have thrilled the nation, will face the coming winter with insufficient supplies; our progress toward victory over the Hun will be retarded, and eventually widespread want will confront our people.

"Labor slackers cannot ease their consciences by purchasing Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps at 4 per cent interest!

"Washington has just decreed that the following are non-essential occupations and that able-bodied men must get out of them: Auto industry accessories; drivers of pleasure cars; cleaning or repairing or delivery of the same; sight-seeing cars; auto trucks other than those hauling fuel or doing government work; teaming, other than delivering products for war work; bath and barber shop attendants; bowling, billiard and pool rooms; bottle and bottle supplies; candy manufacturers and delicatessen (German in name); builders and contractors not engaged on structures for war work; dancing academies; mercantile stores; florists; fruit stands; junk dealers; livery and sale stables; pawnbrokers; peanut venders; shoe shining shops; window cleaning; soft drink and soda fountains; fountain supplies.

"And there are others. Every person knows what occupations are now essential. Able-bodied men must get out of these lines of work and offer themselves to the nearest office of the U. S. Employment Service for war work. They will quickly be supplied with steady work at good wages, and will be helping the United States win the war just as materially as the men at the front."

We feel that this appeal is stated just about as strongly as it can be, but we are giving space to it and adding editorial comment because we believe that every legitimate means possible should be used to let our people know what the exact situation is, in order that they may use their influence to make conditions what they ought to be in their own communities. There may be times when a man is justifiable in doing just as he pleases—but that time is not now. We are on a war footing. Things that do not need to be done, must not be done. When millions of our best men are willing to lay down their lives on the battlefield, there certainly should be no lack of men who are willing to give themselves to perfectly safe, but equally important, productive industry at home.

ORPHANAGE WORK DAY.

Saturday, October 12, has been designated by the Mississippi Orphans' Home, and the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, as Work Day. Both these great institutions are owned and operated by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They are the property of the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences, and the Louisiana Conference, respectively. All pastors and Sunday school superintendents have received announcements and literature concerning the needs of these institutions and the plans for Work Day. We sincerely hope that every congregation in the patronizing Conferences will respond liberally to the appeals made to it by its own institution.

We are not intimately acquainted with the exact financial status of our orphanages, but we know, from the very nature of the case, that in times like these their needs are urgent. Concessions that have formerly been made by the railroads in the way of free cars and reduced freight rates have been withdrawn; the many things that have to be bought in the open market for the support of the children have to be paid for at prevailing war prices; applications are constantly coming in for the admission of worthy children. We cannot afford, under any consideration, to fail to make adequate provision for this most practical and helpful expression of applied Christianity.

What is needed, that Work Day this year may be all that it ought to be, is that it be brought earnestly to the attention of our people, and that they be given every opportunity to contribute to this great cause. Very few of them will refuse to give anything; we believe a great many will be glad to give the full earnings of one day. When we stop to think about it, even that is a small offering—the earnings of one day out of a whole year's work to support dependent orphan children who have a claim on our Church. We like to believe that many of our people will give much more than that.

It is not too early to begin to plan now for the success of Work Day. Let the children know about it—it is a cause that appeals strongly to them; lay it upon the hearts and consciences of parents—by the love they bear their own children, they will be drawn to the helpless ones; let the young men and the young women know that their help is needed, and they will respond generously. Let us all see to it that on "Harvest Day"—October 13—our offerings be of such proportions in the aggregate that Brother Lewis and Brother Vaughan, and all others who have the responsibility of these institutions resting upon them, may know that we are solidly behind them in their great work.

SCHOOL AGAIN.

student it touches definitely under the influence of the Christian ideals of conduct and character. It is not enough that educational institutions should be maintained under the auspices of the Church. That may be done—possibly it is being done in some cases to-day—and still the student may not be able to detect any difference between the Church school and any other. A passive influence is not likely to affect very materially the character of a young man who is full of energy and enthusiasm; vigorous and direct efforts will be necessary, in most cases, to bring him into a professedly religious life. This is not meant at all as a suggestion that any undue influence should be brought to bear upon a single young life; it is simply the expression of the conviction that the atmosphere of a Christian school should be so permeated with religious influences that it would inevitably affect all who live in it. The school furnishes one of the best opportunities the Church has for Christianizing the world.

A GOOD BOOK.

Through the courtesy of the publishers, The Methodist Book Concern, we have received a copy of "Service and Prayers for Church and Home," edited and compiled by Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield; of the Methodist Episcopal Church. We have examined it carefully, with a great deal of pleasure and profit. The volume is small in size, but it has a great deal in it. It is the kind of book that deepens the spiritual life and trains the Christian to express adequately the longings of his heart in the service of worship.

The title very well describes what the book is. It contains a collection of prayers, ancient and modern; prayers for the ministries of the Church; prayers for special seasons of the Christian year; prayers and Bible readings for family worship; prayers for special objects and persons; the Wesley Sunday Service. In addition, it contains the Commandments and responses, the Ritual of the M. E. Church, the Articles of Religion, the General Rules, Special Advices, the Junior Catechism, and a collection of Benedictions.

We commend this little volume as especially useful in helping to give richness and variety to the devotional part of public worship, and in helping to establish and maintain the family altar, which, to the great loss of our people, has so largely fallen into disuse. Bishop Thirkield has done great service to the whole Church by his preparation of this volume.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. M. Crossley, our energetic pastor at Philadelphia, Miss., brings us under obligations by sending us a list of ten subscriptions to the Advocate. We thank him heartily.

We express our thanks to Rev. A. R. Beasley, pastor of the McCool circuit, North Mississippi Conference, for two renewal subscriptions to the Advocate which he recently sent us.

We saw a statement recently to the effect that the Negroes of Sumter County, S. C., have invested more than $114,000 in Thrift Stamps. That speaks well for the patriotism of their race.

Brother B. F. Goza, of Magnolia, Miss., a consecrated layman, has brought the Advocate under obligations by sending us a fine list of renewal subscriptions. We thank him sincerely.

Rev. P. H. Howse, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., in a business note to the Advocate, says that his work is moving along nicely, and he hopes to be able to report everything in full at Conference.

According to the Christian Advocate (Nashville), the Western Virginia Conference voted in favor of full laity rights for the women; the Kentucky Conference voted the measure down.

The Y. M. C. A. "huts" are distributing without cost about a million sheets of writing paper, and half a million envelopes, every day to our soldier boys. It takes money to do that—but the home-folk who get the letters are willing to furnish it.

The infant daughter of Rev. and Mrs. P. H. Grice, who has been seriously ill at Touro Infirmary for some weeks, seems to be making some progress toward recovery. Her condition, however, is still critical. Let prayer continue to be made in her behalf.

The Gulf Division of the American Red Cross will spend for material alone, for its October allotment of work, $34,468, according to the report of Mrs. Catherine H. Moberly, director of the department of development. The Red Cross is doing a very great work.

Rev. W. F. Baggett, of Picayune, Miss., was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office last Saturday. We are glad to be able to report that his wife, who recently underwent a surgical operation at Touro Infirmary, has recovered sufficiently to return to her home.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., of Homer, La., has our thanks for some additional subscriptions which he recently sent us from his charge. He says he considers it a part of his work as pastor to see that the Advocate is circulated. We should like to add that he attends to his work.

We learn from an exchange that Professor Camden M. Cobern, of Allegheny College, who delivered a course of lectures at the Seashore Divinity School last summer, has been granted a year's leave of absence to become religious director at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, writing from Ponchatoula, La., says that he is hoping to be able to report everything in full at Conference. Some long-needed repairs have just been made on the church at Ponchatoula, which, with some additional work to be done on the windows, will cost $165.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, superintendent of St. Mark's and Mary Werlein Missions, who has been out of the city for some weeks recuperating from a very severe spell of illness, has returned to continue his very efficient labors. He has not fully recovered, but is regaining his strength gradually.

Rev. Charles Steizle, who is well known throughout America for his work in connection with workingmen and the Church, has recently been called to Washington to become director of the publicity work of the American Red Cross in connection with religious bodies and labor organizations.

Rev. F. M. Freeman, pastor of Parker Memorial Church, New Orleans, is at Franklinton, La., this week, assisting Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir in a revival meeting. The outlook for a good revival seems favorable. The indications are that the Conference year will close successfully on the Franklinton charge.

Rev. C. A. Northington, of the New Albany circuit, North Mississippi Conference, in sending us a new subscription to the Advocate, remarks that he has now tied Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Crowley, La., in the number of subscriptions sent in, each having 46 to his credit. We cannot refrain from saying, "Well done!"

The Editor was delighted on Wednesday of last week to receive a call from Messrs. Beverly Hebert, Robert Wynn, and Prentice Smith. They had come to New Orleans to enter Tulane University. Messrs. Hebert and Wynn will become members of the Students' Army Training Corps; Mr. Smith will pursue advanced academic studies.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, in sending in his announcements for the fourth round of quarterly conferences, says that the reports of the preachers in his district will be considerably in advance of last year. Some gracious revivals have been held. The Conference collections are being looked after now.

Rev. J. L. Neill, superintendent of the Department of Missionary Education in the Sunday schools, spent Sunday, September 22, in Jackson, Miss. He gave the Missionary Centenary stereopticon pictures at Capitol Street Church to a crowded house. Brother Neill and family have removed their permanent residence to Nashville, Tenn.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference will meet Bishop Kilgo at the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, next Wednesday morning, October 9, at 10 o'clock. There will be a union prayer meeting at Rayne Memorial Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, followed by an informal reception to the Bishop. A large attendance of Methodists of New Orleans and adjacent territory is expected.

Miss Ada Parker, formerly a missionary to Brazil, and Mr. W. M. Brown, brother of Rev. R. M. Brown, pastor of the Felicity Methodist Church, of this city, were married at the bride's home last Thursday, Rev. R. M. Brown performing the ceremony. The bride's brother, Rev. G. D. Parker, is now a missionary of our Church in Brazil. We extend congratulations and best wishes to the happy couple.

Methodist laymen are doing a great work in connection with the various movements for winning the war. For example, we happened to notice recently that Brother A. B. Kling, who is active in Church work at Satartia, Miss., is a member of the County Board of Instruction of Yazoo County, and chairman of Beat One for the United War Work campaign. Many others of our loyal laymen are equally active.

Rev. W. L. Linfield, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, says that he believes securing a few subscriptions to the Advocate adds a little flavor to a quarterly conference. He makes the remark in connection with a list of seventeen subscriptions which he recently sent us, in addition to a goodly number of others that he has sent from time to time. We heartily thank him for what he has done.

At the recent union quarterly conference of the New Orleans churches, it was unanimously decided to make First Church, of which Rev. W. H. Coleman is pastor, the seat of the Annual Conference, which convenes on November 13. The First Church building is admirably suited to a Conference session. It has ample facilities in the way of committee rooms, and it is easy of access from all parts of the city. All the Methodist congregations of the city will act as joint hosts.

At the meeting of the southern portion of the Meridian District in the interest of the Missionary Centenary Movement, held at Shubuta, Miss., on September 24, six of the eight pastors in that division, and one or more laymen from each of their charges, were present. Interesting addresses were made by the presiding elder, Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, and others. Many leaflets bearing upon the subject were distributed. Rev. L. E. Alford, pastor at Shubuta, is manager of the division.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of the Cockrum circuit, North Mississippi Conference, has been a good friend of the Advocate this year. He has sent, to date, 20 new and 21 renewal subscriptions. It is not surprising to learn that his charge is in good shape. A recent communication from him states that there were 41 accessions to the Church during the revival season. A new bungalow parsonage is under construction, and will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks. His people are optimistic, and the outlook is for all collections in full at Conference.

Last Sunday, the Algiers Methodist Church, of which Rev. C. C. Wier is the energetic pastor, commemorated the anniversary of its destruction by the storm of 1915. Reports were made of the campaign to secure a building fund for a new church. Something like $1800 has been secured in Liberty Bonds and War Savings Stamps, and the pastor is confident that, with the co-operation of friends throughout the Conference, the requirements of the Board of Church Extension for liberal assistance will soon be complied with. This is a fine opportunity for loyal Methodists to make a contribution that will count for much.

A recent bulletin from the United States Fuel Administration concerning the gasoline conservation measure, contains the following: "The use of automombiles to drive considerable distances to church on Sundays, where other means of transportation are not available, is in no sense a violation of the request." We are glad to note that this very helpful exception to the regulation has been made. Patriotic citizens will not, of course, abuse this privilege, and they will do what they can during week days to save sufficient gasoline to offset the amount used on Sunday.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Winona District, North Mississippi Conference, writes most optimistically of his work. He says the old Winona District has a fine set of preachers and laymen, who take care of all the interests of the Church. He reports that Rev. O. L. Savage, of the Webb circuit, has built and paid for two churches this year, one at Strathmore, costing $2200, and one at Brazil, costing $1200. Brother Lipscomb expects his District to meet all its obligations in full. We thank him for a subscription to the Advocate.

We acknowledge receipt of the program of an eight-days' meeting held at Pleasant Hill, La., under the leadership of the progressive pastor of the Pleasant Hill charge, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, September 22-29. The occasion was designated, "Methdist Sunday School Revival and Church Rally Week." The program was carefully planned, and provision was made for presenting the various phases of Church and Sunday school work. We should be glad to have a report of the success of the meeting. It strikes us that it was a decidedly fine thing.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, our pastor at First Church, Corinth, Miss., has been commissioned as first lieutenant in the U. S. Army and appointed as chaplain at Camp Shelby. His temporary assignment is that of "Division Chaplain." He writes that there is not much "doing" now, as the old Division has been moved. New men are coming in fast, however, and when the new Division is formed, he will likely be assigned to some special regiment. His present address is, "Division Headquarters," Camp Shelby, Miss. Chapiain Cunningham has a son "over there."

The annual conference of the New Orleans District Epworth League was held last Saturday and Sunday at Carrollton Avenue. The meeting was interesting and profitable in many ways. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, A. T. Higgins, McDonoghville; Vice President, Miss Sophie Kuntz, Carrollton; Recording Secretary, Miss Laura Evans, Parker Memorial; Treasurer, Marvin Singleton, Carrollton; Era Agent, Miss Sarah Hecht, Rayne Memorial; Coresponding Secretary, Miss Robina Vaught, Carrollton; First Superintendent, Edgar Cayard, Algiers; Second Superintendent, ——; Third Superintendent, Miss Thelma Cayard, Algiers; Fourth Superintendent, Miss Emma Clauset, Carrollton; Junior Superintendent, Miss Goldsby, St. Mark's Hall.

MRS. J. M. WEEMS PASSES AWAY.

The news of the death of Mrs. J. M. Weems, which occurred after a short illness, at Forest, Saturday evening, September 21, brought sadness to many hearts in this community. She had lived in Newton the past several years, having removed to Forest but a few months since. She was a devout Christian, and the memory of her is as ointment poured forth.

She has been prominent in Methodist circles, as the wife of Dr. J. M. Weems, of precious memory, with whom she spent some time in missionary work in Mexico; and as a member of the Galloway family—the lamented Bishop Chas. B. and Rev. J. G. Galloway being her brothers. The last few months of her life were spent in the latter's home. Her only daughter is the wife of Rev. J. A. Moore, of Moss Point.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer in the Newton Methodist Church Sunday morning in the presence of a large number of loving friends, and the body was laid to rest by the side of her sainted husband. W. A. HAYS.

NOTICE FROM MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

It is now just two months until the Mississippi Conference will convene in McComb, Miss. I know from the correspondence I have had with the pastors that there are a number of churches that will make application to this Board for aid in December. As Secretary of the Board, I earnestly insist that you get your application filled out and send to me at least three weeks before the Conference convenes, that I may examine the same, and if it is defective in any particular, I can return it to you for correction in time to have it in proper shape for the Board to pass upon at Conference. Every year some applications are handed to us after we get to Conference and in a number of instances those applications have been defective relative to the deed or other important matters; hence action on the same has had to be deferred to a later date. Please get these applications in shape before the last hour, and thus avoid confusion and delay, if not disappointment altogether.

Yours for the Board,

L. E. ALFORD, Secretary.

THREE GREATEST PRESIDENTS WERE SMALL-TOWN PRODUCTS.

It is emphasized over and over again that the great problem of the rural districts is lack of leaders. This deficiency is not due to lack of materlal, however, as is shown by Harold Seton in the Outlook of July 24.

A business man picking up "Who's Who in America" began to scan the pages and these were his comments:

"Let's see. Here is a man born in Watertown, New York. That's a small town. His name is Robert Lansing and he is Secretary of State. Here is a man who was born in Martinburg, West Virginia. That's a small town. His name is Newton Diehl Baker and he is Secretary of War. Here's a man born in Washington, North Carolina. That's a small town. His name is Josephus Daniels and he is Secretary of the Navy.

"Here is a man born near Marietta, Georgia. The place was not even mentioned on the map. The name of this man is William Gibbs McAdoo, and he is Secretary of the Treasury. Here's a man born in West Branch, Iowa. That's a small town. His name is Herbert Clark Hoover and he is Food Controller of the United States. Here is a man born in Linn County, Missouri, another place not on the map. His name is John Joseph Pershing and he is the general in command of the United States Forces in France.

"There was a man born in Bridges Creek, Virginia. His name was George Washington and he was the first President of the United States. There was a man born near Hodgenville, Kentucky. That's a small place. His name was Abraham Lincoln and he was the sixteenth President of the United States.

"And there was a man who was born in Staunton, Virginia. That's a small town. His name is Woodrow Wilson and he is the twenty-eighth President of the United States."

These men were all products of rural and small town communities, tacit argument that the Church need not go abroad for its leaders but develop the material at hand, in doing which it solves not only the problem of rural leadership, but in solving that goes far towards solving also the whole intricate and varied rural problem.—Selected.

FOOT COMFORT ASSURED.

Brooklyn Man Solves the Problem.

It is no longer necessary to suffer agonies that are caused by misfit shoes, for Mr. Simon of Brooklyn has proven that he can fit perfectly by mail. Simon's Ezwear shoes are built to give every possible foot comfort; they are soft and stylish and do not need breaking in. They fit like the proverbial old pair the minute you wear them. Every pair is guaranteed to give satisfaction and to fit perfectly.

Mr. E. P. Simon will gladly send a free catalogue of over 500 styles of Ezwear shoes to all who write him, along with his scientific self-measuring blank. Write for your copy to-day and give your feet their much needed happiness. Address all communications to Mr. E. P. Simon, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., and you will receive personal attention.—Adv.

TO THE PASTORS, SUPERINTENDENTS, STEWARDS, TRUSTEES AND MEMBERS OF THE HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT.

A prudent man foreseeth the government drive, the Y. M. C. A. drive, and the like, and makes the final church drive now; the other kind just go along and fail. Prov. 27:11.

Seest thou a pastor diligent in his business? he shall stand before the Conference, saying: "Everything in full, Bishop." Prov. 22:29.

Therefore, a proclamation throughout the whole district is made to bring unto the Lord the collections that the servants of God laid on the Church in the whole territory. II. Chr. 24:9.

Moreover it is required of stewards that they be faithful. 1 Cor. 24:9.

Organize your forces. Divide your territory. See that not one person is overlooked. Go at it as a good farmer prepares his soil for planting. Be taught by the government drives. Get your finances provided for before the 10th day of October. Delay will be fatal this fall.

To respond to the call of our country is imperative. To neglect the finances of the Church is worse than folly—it is suicidal. The Church is the mother of the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and the like. The death of the Church would ultimate in the death of the by-products of the Church. Shall we neglect or be indifferent to the hand that ministers to our boys?

It is no time for excuses. It is a time for conservation, concentration, consecration, and the most marked liberality in our history. Our task is a large one—we will neither stagger nor stand. God with us, we will go forward—and the Holly Springs District is not to bring up the tail-end of the procession.

Equally important, though not an assessment, is our special war work. An amount equal to five per cent of the pastor's salary is asked for by the Church, through the Commission, as a free-will offering for the help of our boys in khaki. This is an honor call. Give every church a chance to make a free-will offering. Send that offering to Mr. John Victor, Treasurer, Lynchburg, Va. Do this now if you haven't already done so.

And the Bishop shall say unto the presiding elder, "Why hast thou not required of the preachers to bring in out of the district the collections according to the assessments made by the leaders? Chr. 24:6.

Then the elder shall say: "They failed who dealt with a slack hand; the hand of the diligent succeeded." Prov. 10:4.

May the great Head of the Church have us in his keeping. May a veritable passion for doing worth while things possess us. May church slackers be even scarcer than the other kind. Let us pray as though work were unnecessary, and work as though prayer were unimportant.

All fourth quarterly conferences are booked as nearly as possible in the month of October. The reason is apparent. See appointments. Brethren, let this round be remarkable for spirituality, fine reports, record attendance on the part of the officials, and the good cheer of Christian citizens who believe and do.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, Poulty Expert, 9257 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry. —Adv.

A high aim is more than a minister of power. It is a gracious means of illumination which, like the headlights on a car, throws its beams on the road that stretches before us. A high aim is a means of provision; and when the mark is Christ it endows the soul with the rich and companionable powers of sight, and insight, and foresight. A high aim is perhaps not so much light as sight; with the high aim of the Apostle Paul we look at everything through the very eyes of the Lord.—J. H. Jowett.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

Look Young! Common Garden Sage and Sulphur Darkens so Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

WOMAN WORKS 15 HOURS A DAY

Marvelous Story of Woman's Change from Weakness to Strength by Taking Druggist's Advice.

Peru, Ind.—"I suffered from a displacement with backache and dragging down pains so badly that at times I could not be on my feet and it did not seem as though I could stand it. I tried different medicines without any benefit and several doctors told me nothing but an operation would do me any good. My druggist told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it with the result that I am now well and strong. I get up in the morning at four o'clock, do my housework, then go to a factory and work all day, come home and get supper and feel good. I don't know how many of my friends I have told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. ANNA METERIANO, 36 West 10th St., Peru, Ind.

Women who suffer from any such ailments should not fail to try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it doesn't straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.

Scientific Treatment For Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. In order to be cured of rheumatism it is necessary to neutralize this acid. RENWAR is a salt combination scientifically prepared to neutralize the uric acid in the blood. There is nothing in Renwar to injure the stomach or affect the heart. It acts solely upon uric acid, completely eliminating it from the blood and thereby relieving your rheumatism. It is harmless but effective. Positively guaranteed by money-back offer. It is a godsend to sufferers from rheumatism. Renwar also corrects constipation. Mr. J. M. Willis of the Nashville Railway and Light Company says: "I must say that Renwar far surpassed my expectations, for it gave me almost immediate relief; too much can not be spoken in behalf of 'Renwar' for rheumatism." Sold by druggists; price 50 cents, or by mail from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Small kindnesses, small courtesies, small considerations, habitually practiced in our social intercourse, give a greater charm to the character than the display of great talent and accomplishments.—Kelty.

The most essential element in Christianity is its conception of a human God—of a God, in the first place, not apart from the universe, not outside of it and distinct from it, but immanent in it; yet not immanent only, but actually incarnate and revealed in the Incarnation.—Selected.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

If our superintendents could be made to believe they were helping to win the war by organizing classes for leadership, they would lose no time in expressing their patriotism in this way. "Making the world safe for democracy;" "Win the war, win the world"—these are great slogans; but we need not deceive ourselves. To accomplish these aims will require the utmost sacrifice in blood and treasure. Adequate supplies in food and ammunition, together with efficient strategy, are necessary. The moral resources of the allies are equally vital. Time and again we have heard from our leaders that neither side will be overcome until the morale of the army and the people gives way. Read the message sent to the Sunday school workers by Chaplain Jesse S. Dancy, from France: "Everyone at home is full of an eager passion to do something for the nation. With all respect to the fine work of the Red Cross, of the Y. M. C. A., and similar organizations, let me say solemnly, that none of them affords the opportunity to serve one's country that the Sunday school offers. You can train a soldier to fight in a year, but it takes all his preceding life to train him morally and spiritually to the sort of manhood that makes the sort of a soldier upon which his superiors and his country can safely rely. It is manhood that counts out here, and that comes only through the Christian home and the Christian Church."

Young people are willing to undertake this course in leadership. Some one must show them how. The spirit of heroism is all about us. We have shown the world we are willing to play our part on the second line of defense. But let us go the "second mile." No doubt it requires grit of a high order to become a leader, but there are more than you think that are ready to pay the price.

Yes, we have had people to begin this work; they read a few pages in the book, met a time or two, and found out that it meant real study. Then they threw the book down with a frown and fell back in the same old rut. Leave this kind; try a younger group; all are not "quitters." The thing is, do not be a "quitter" yourself. Keep at it and you will get others to stick. The main trouble is, the superintendent has not studied these books until he has been fired with their great and compelling truths.

Organize your class for leaders as you would a Wesley Bible Class, and enroll it with Dr. C. D. Bulla, and then enroll your class with Dr. J. W. Shackford. Do both and you have it tied hard and fast to two great organizations. If you have not the literature, send to me or to the above named men and secure the information needed. There are two kinds of ability, the ability to do a thing yourself and the ability to get others to do it. The latter kind ought to be spelled with a big "A."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

The third Sunday was spent with Rev. Otto Porter on the De Soto charge. We had a good day. Two Cradle Rolls were established and teacher-training books were put in the hands of two of the teachers.

Last Sunday was spent at Little Rock on the Decatur charge. A Cradle Roll was established at this point.

I made the round of the Walnut Grove charge with the pastor, Rev. W. N. Ware. Five Cradle Rolls were put in. One Sunday school with 60 pupils was organized, properly graded. One other school was graded and graded literature put in. At each school some teacher-training books were sold to the officers and teachers.

Missions were emphasized in all the schools visited and 4 schools pledged the offering for missions once a month.

The sum of $55 was raised for Conference collections on one charge and $10 on another. This was by the way, but seemed to be needed.

If we can get each officer and teacher in each school to read just one new Sunday school teacher-training book a year, it will be the leaven that will leaven the whole lump. Nothing will mean as much to the little children who are looking to the Church for spiritual food. May the Spirit impress each one of us with our duty to these little ones!

Let each school organize a class of young people and put them to studying "Life in the Making." The work grows. Pray for me.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

bears a name that for ninety-seven years has been on the minds if not the hearts of thousands of families. Its use began in 1820, when a North Carolina physician compounded an ointment for treating skin infections. It has been received on its merits and its constant use for nearly a century has made it a family word in every household. It's instantaneous healing effect and its soothing relief to skin infections make it almost indispensable in the home. Gray's Ointment is the first thought in all cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts and stings. Telephone your druggist for it, or write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Adv.

FROM REV. R. T. NOLEN.

Dear Brother Carley: I began as pastor on the Vardaman charge, Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, the first day of September. I have now made the round in 22 days. I have preached 20 times, baptized 1 infant, secured 3 subscriptions to our Church paper, made several pastoral visits. These are fine people. I am happy in the work. I find a great deal to do. Pray for me. R. T. NOLEN.

Vardaman, Miss.

ON THE WORK.

Three and one half days: Preached three times, administered the sacrament, baptized three children, raised in cash and pledges for Conference Collections and War Pledges $40, visited forty homes, one cotton gin, one cotton factory, two cottonseed oil plants, and two saw mills, and was asked by the foreman of one of the latter if I was hunting a job.

FROM FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS.

Dear Mr. Editor: As in all probability I am nearing the time of my Y. M. C. A. war work, and as I will not thereby have an opportunity of making the usual report at the session of our Conference, I beg space in the Advocate for a brief word. I have found the work here at First Church in the main very pleasant. It has been one of the busiest years of my life. At the fourth quarterly conference held some weeks ago the pastor reported 1170 pastoral calls made, 30 chapel exercises held, 80 received in the church without a revival, 25 funerals, 8 couples married, 32 prayer meetings held, with our largest attendance at 158 at prayer-meeting, and 80 sermons preached.

All the benevolent claims have been paid and checks sent to the different treasurers some weeks ago. As I look at the year from the October end, I feel it has been a good one, and one in which our God has manifested His power.

First Church has many noble and splendid Christian characters among her membership. They are loyal and true to the Church and their pastor. Whoever comes to this church next year, will find work a plenty to fill his hands day and night; but he will also find a people ready to follow sane, enthusiastic, and godly leadership.

SOUR, ACID STOMACHS, GASES OR INDIGESTION

"Pape's Diapepsin" neutralizes excessive acid in stomach, relieving dyspepsia, heartburn and distress at once.

Time it! In five minutes all stomach distress, due to acidity, will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapepsin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach sweetener in the whole world, and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach distress at once by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder caused by fermentation due to excessive acids in stomach.—Adv.

THE FOURTH LOAN IS THE FIGHTING LOAN.

As the campaign for the Fourth Liberty Loan approaches the American Army in France moves on toward Berlin. Under our own leaders the great American Army has won a notable victory.

The Fourth Loan must be a great success. The Fourth Liberty Loan is a fighting loan.

When our soldiers on the battle front are braving death, each one offering to make the supreme sacrifice for his country and the great cause, we who remain safely at home surely should give them every support, should make every sacrifice to strengthen them. If we can not fight ourselves we can make our dollars fight.

It is a great cause for which America is engaged in this war; it is a great struggle in which the very hope of the world is bound up that is being waged in Europe and on the high seas. It is an honor to have a part in it and all Americans, all of their lives, will be proud of the part they had in it or ashamed of their failure to do their part.

The Fourth Loan is a fighting loan. Every subscriber to the Loan strikes a blow for Liberty, for Victory.

TO THE AUXILIARY SUPERINTENDENTS OF STUDY AND PUBLICITY.

Dear Sisters: For a long time we have stressed the necessity of prompt reports from each society; so long a time that it has become an old request, and yet we must continue to stress this one point for the work's sake.

The reports from the department of Study and Publicity were very few for the first quarter; for the second quarter there were a few more auxillaries reported than during the first, but most of the reports were sent in too late, some coming as much as six weeks late.

All reports, to be properly recorded, must reach your Conference superintendent as near as possible on the first day of January, April, July, and October.

I plead with you again to be prompt in reporting; you do yourself and your auxiliary an injustice when you fail.

In October every auxiliary is supposed to put on a Study Circle campaign. To make this a success and not to fall below our goal (ten per cent increase over last year) we will have to be very diligent in our efforts.

We are willing to throw our energies, time, and money into other drives; why do less for our Lord's work?

In a few days I will mail to each auxiliary the literature for this campaign. Let us not only make the fourth quarter the best of the year, but let us go over the top in this work, and make this the best year in the history of our society.

Our President urges that the Church not fall back in the time of the terrible crisis we are facing to-day, but to hold fast and press onward.

"Mission Study will help us win the war by achieving the ends for which we are engaged in it, making possible 'a world wherein all men everywhere shall see in God their Father, and in all men of every class and every race, their brothers.' This is the aim of our warfare, and the aim of our missionary enterprise." Sincerely,

Mrs. GEO. H. THOMPSON,
Supt. of Study and Publicity.

The Strong Withstand the Heat of Summer Better Than the Weak

Old people who are feeble and younger people who are weak, will be strengthened and enabled to go through the depressing heat of summer by taking GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC. Girls! Use Lemons! Make a Bleaching, Beautifying Cream

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It naturally should help to soften, freshen, bleach and bring out the roses and beauty of the skin. It is simply marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands.

REVIVAL AT IUKA, MISS.

We have just closed a great revival at this place. The meeting was led by one of our general evangelists, Rev. W. M. McIntosh, who makes his home at this place. This is the fifth meeting Brother McIntosh has held for us. Brother McIntosh is one of our strong evangelists and has the highest esteem of all the people of Iuka. The evangelist was ably assisted in the meeting by Rev. W. A. Wilson, of New Albany, Miss. Brother Wilson is a strong and unique preacher, and he greatly endeared himself to all of our people. The great choir was conducted by R. E. Huston, of Greenville, Texas. Brother Huston is a sweet and effective soloist, and a great leader of a choir. He knows how to get the people to sing. The revival was a great success.

We must not fail to give our pastor, Rev. L. A. McKeown, full credit for the success of the revival. He is one of our most faithful and successful pastors, and has done a great work for the people of our town. Brother McKeown knows full well how to prepare for a great meeting. He is not only popular with the Methodists but greatly beloved by the people of other denominations. The church is unanimous in asking for his return to this charge for another year. Our church has raised all the Conference collections and has paid both the presiding elder and pastor up to date. We expect to make a splendid report at the Annual Conference.

Our faithful and efficient presiding elder was with us last week and held the fourth quarterly conference for the year. He was very much delighted that the church at Iuka had done such splendid work. Yours fraternally,

J. C. JOURDAN.

MARIETTA CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Everything is moving along nicely and smoothly here on the Marietta charge, and everything points to this being one of the very best years for this work. We are hoping to go to Conference with everything in full.

We had the pleasure of having our Field Sunday School Secretary, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, with us last week. He gave us six appointments. There were great congregations to greet him, and we were successful in organizing four new Sunday schools, which gives us six schools on our charge of five churches. Brother Gladney is a great power for good. Yours in Christ,

Special terms will be made to the wife or child of a Methodist preacher.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. PREACHER VERSUS KAISER

No class of men has done more than the preachers to create a national consciousness strong enough to make possible the entry of the United States into the universal war with ideals so high that our country has become the marvel of the world. Through the years these Christian advocates have faithfully toiled until a spirit and purpose of "I am my brother's keeper" has possessed the nation. While all preachers are entitled to this credit, it belongs chiefly to those who are now deceased and to those who are superannuated by reason of age and physical impairment.

The past failure of the Church to provide an adequate support for its preachers, who are retired from active work because of age and physical infirmity, has created conditions of want and deprivation among them that should shame clear-thinking and warm-hearted people into action that will free the Church from the stigma of neglect, and relieve the distress it has unwittingly caused.

Millions of Liberty Bonds have been and will be purchased to win the war. What better investment can beneficent owners make of these bonds, than to donate part of their holdings to an endowment fund for the support of superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers?

The Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., urgently requests every member and friend of said Church to donate at least one Liberty Bond for the purpose stated. If you want a part in this splendid work, write

BANISH CATARRH

Hyomei Will Relieve You or Nothing to Pay.

When you make up your mind to get rid of disgusting Catarrh, follow this advice:

Go to your druggist; ask him for a HYOMEI Outfit (pronounce it High-o-me). This outfit consists of a bottle of HYOMEI (liquid), a hard rubber pocket inhaler, a medicine dropper, and full instructions for use. Pour a few drops into the inhaler, and breath it a few minutes each day, according to directions.

HYOMEI relieves Catarrh because it reaches every nook, corner, and crevice of the membrane of the nose, throat, and bronchial tubes. Stomach dosing, sprays, douches, and ointments don't kill the germs because they don't get where the germs are. As the publisher of this paper knows, if you are not satisfied with Hyomei in cases of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever your money will be cheerfully refunded. Refuse substitutes. If your druggist does not sell it, we will send you a complete outfit, charges prepaid, for $1.15 Address, Booth's HYOMEI CO., Ithaca, N. Y.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD.

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, Liver and Bowels

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

WOMEN ARE NEEDED TO HELP IN WAR.

Women can be usefully employed in nursing the wounded, in making up the soldiers' kits, and a thousand other ways. Many American women are weak, pale or anemic from woman's ills. For young girls just entering womanhood; for women at the critical time; nursing mothers and every woman who is "run-down," tired or over-worked — Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a special, safe and certain help. It can now be had in tablet form.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and found it would do what it is recommended to do. It did me more good than the doctors; I had several and none of them did me any good. Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only thing for weak, broken-down women. I feel like a new woman after taking it. I weigh 155 lbs. and never felt better in my life."—MRS. AGNES TATUM, 155 L. Green St.

WILTON, ALA.—"My little girl, Kathleen, had been sick with La Grippe and when she got over it she was taken with a breaking-out all over. We had the family doctor, but he did not seem to do her any good. I got a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Medical Discovery and gave it to her. One bottle cured her and she has been in better health than ever, and has never been bothered with the breaking-out since. I will recommend the 'Discovery' to anyone."—MRS. MAMIE MCDONOUGH.

Try Making Your Own Cough Remedy

You can save about $2, and have a better remedy than the ready-made kind. Easily done.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you probably could not get as much real curative power as there is in this simple home-made cough syrup, which is easily prepared in a few minutes.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with syrup, using either plain granulated sugar syrup, clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, as desired. The result is a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and Syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes so gently and easily that it is really astonishing.

A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

NERVOUS, RUN-DOWN, HAGGARD-LOOKING

Women and men suffer from blood and nerve conditions for which it is impossible to conceive of a better remedy than Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron taken in conjunction, one before eating and the other after.

These two great medicines aid each other, and it is economy to take both, a four-fold benefit being derived.

Peptiron is the ideal iron preparation—no injury to teeth, no constipating effect. All druggists.

NOTES FROM COCHRANE, ALA.

Dear Brother Carley: We have had a meeting of special excellence at Cochrane. Prayer was offered, but also a new sidewalk was placed from the main street to the church—a large item in this black land section.

We had all right preaching after Wednesday. To that time the people generously endured the pastor. Rev. R. A. Tucker, of Grenada, appeared upon the scene, in his "car," at that juncture. The car looked "up to snuff" —so also did the preacher.

The congregation behaved admirably from the first, and the meeting was much enjoyed. Cochrane will do to count anyway—when that winter mud is overcome.

The Dancy people came, more or less (not dancing people—its a town), and this same was true of Cooksville. Hospitality abounded, and the presence of "the Highest" was evident, and the real revival was at hand. The benefits were great generally, and there were three baptisms and two additions by certificate.

Brother Tucker knows about preaching, and is good gold among the people. His father was pastor here 30 years ago, and a baby brother was buried at the historic Hebron cemetery here.

At Dancy, we began a meeting aided by the "whole stock" and never-tiring worker, Rev. L. P. Wasson, of West Point, but alas—the rain, the rain! and no sidewalks. We finished instantly with good hope of results.

At Panola the meeting was well attended, and some said, "Good above common."

The conditions here have been highly encouraging for most of the year, and we trust for a proper finish.

The final call of the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Duren, of Columbus, is anticipated with pleasure, and we expect a good quarterly meeting.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you —Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twings, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

COULDN'T STAND HIS WIFE'S RELIGION.

In 1887 I attended a great camp-meeting in Georgia. I was leading an experience meeting one morning when I noticed a big-hearted farmer very restless on my left. I said to him: "Brother, you want to talk. I'll stop all others and hear from you."

He sprang to his feet and said: "I do want to talk. I want to tell what I never told a living soul before. Across that altar sits my wife; she knows nothing of the secret purpose I am going to tell. I was converted before the war, but lost my religion in the army. I became worse than I ever had been. I came home, but my dear wife was as true as steel. I hated the Church; I hated the Bible; I was harder than a rock. Years went by, and all the time there was a gulf between my wife and me. I hated her religion, and she seemed to love it more even than she did me. No man ever had a better wife. Now I come to my secret purpose. I determined that I would sweep all that Bible nonsense out of my house. Every time I would try to settle it for good, I would run against her pure life, and I could not get an inch farther. Again and again I failed. At last I said: If I can just unsettle her, I will know it is all a sham. I picked my chance. Children all out, I said: 'Wife, we have been very happy together. We used to think and feel and act just alike, and we were very happy. But it is different now. You believe in that old Bible; I know it is not true. You believe in praying and serving God; I know it is all a sham. Now let us throw that all aside; let us be happy like we once were.' She said not a word while I was talking. When I was done, she leaned forward, her eyes kindling as she spoke, as I had so often seen them. 'Husband, I am very sorry I have not been a better wife to you. If God spares me, I will do better. I will go with you anywhere you want to go. I will work these fingers down to the stump for you. But hear me: I will die in my tracks before I will yield one inch from my Bible or my God.' Brethren, when she said that, the lightning struck me, the old-time conviction. She had got her grappling hooks into me and jerked me clean over to her side again. I am there to-day, happy on my way to heaven. That good wife did it."

I went back next year to the same camp-meeting. I missed him. The second day I missed him. The third day I said: "Where is my Brother White?" "Have you not heard? He died shouting last January and blessing his good wife, who had saved him from ruin by her heroism."—Christian Companion.

NUXATED IRON

NUXATED IRON

"Say, Doctor, This Prescription Works Like Magic."

Physician Says Nuxated Iron Quickly Puts Astonishing Strength and Energy Into the Veins of Men and Brings Roses to the Cheeks of Nervous, Run-Down Women.

Ask the first hundred strong, healthy people you meet to what they owe their strength and see how many reply "Nuxated Iron." Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital, (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Thousands of people suffer from iron deficiency but do not know what to take. There is nothing like organic iron—Nuxated Iron, to enrich the blood, make beautiful, healthy women, and strong, vigorous men. To make absolutely sure that my patients get real organic iron and not some form of the metallic variety, I always prescribe Nuxated Iron in its original packages. Nuxated Iron will increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time in many instances."

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron recommended above by Dr. Sullivan can be obtained from any good druggist with or without a physician's prescription on an absolute manufacturers' guarantee of success or money refunded.

Don't Let Catarrh Drag You into Consumption

Avoid Its Dangerous Stage.

There is a more serious stage of Catarrh than the annoyance caused by the stopped-up air passages, and the hawking and spitting and other distasteful features.

The real danger comes from the tendency of the disease to continue its course downward until the lungs become affected, and then dreaded consumption is on your path. Your own experience has taught you that the disease cannot be cured by sprays, inhalers, atomizers, jellies and other local applications.

S. S. S. has proven a most satisfactory remedy for Catarrh because it goes direct to its source, and removes the germs of the disease from the blood. Get a bottle from your druggist today, and begin the only logical treatment that gives real results. You can obtain special medical advice without charge by writing to Medical Director, 27 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

THE STORY OF A GREAT DISCOVERY.

The hardships of a traveling salesman's life had wrecked my health. My family physician diagnosed my case as chronic gastritis, brought on by a congested liver and complicated by kidney trouble. I consulted specialists in New York and other cities where my travels called me. They confirmed his diagnosis and approved his treatment. Months passed, I grew worse and was finally compelled to give up my work.

By chance I heard of some wonderful recoveries which had resulted from drinking the water of a little spring in the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a picture of which spring appears on this page. In desperation I tried it. On the second day I imagined that I could notice some improvement; at the end of the first week my appetite and digestion had returned, and I was much stronger; at the end of the third week I felt that I was completely restored. That was nine years ago and I still enjoy perfect health.

Knowing that it had restored my health and believing that it had saved my life, I bought the Spring.

I then determined to see whether the water would restore others as it had me. During the first year I shipped ten gallons free of charge to each of one thousand sufferers from chronic diseases. Only four reported no benefit from the use of the ten gallons. The others reported decided benefit or complete restoration. Many claimed that the water had saved their lives.

I realized that I had discovered one of the world's greatest mineral springs, and I decided to devote my life to it. But how could I make the world listen; how could I make them believe my story? The precious water was running to waste while thousands were suffering. I said, I will make them believe me by showing my faith in them and in the restorative power of the Spring. I will tell them that the water shall cost them nothing if it fails to benefit them.

The world listened.

Some wrote for proof and I sent them the letters which I had received from their fellow sufferers. Others accepted my offer without question. Thousands have written me reporting relief and permanent restoration from a great variety of chronic diseases.

But some of the water still ran to waste for lack of belief. I determined that every drop should be used to relieve the sufferings of humanity. To this end I requested a physician friend of mine to come to see me. At my desk I spened my mail and showed him the letters from men and women from all parts of the country who had suffered and who had found relief. I gave him my letter files and induced him to spend several hours reading my past correspondence with those who were using the water. I showed him the chemical analysis and letters from physicians and chemists explaining the medicinal properties of the water.

He believed, and as a result he has written this announcement for me.

WILL YOU BELIEVE?

I do not ask your implicit faith; only enough to try the water for three weeks as I did. I estimate that I drank about ten gallons and I, therefore, offer gladly to give you the equivalent of a three weeks visit to the Spring by by shipping you two five-gallon demijohns on my agreement that if you find that it does not benefit you I will promptly refund the price, which is only $2.00. You must promise to drink the water in accordance with the instructions which I will send you and return the empty demijohns. I make you the sole judge as to whether the water has benefitted you or not and hope you will feel perfectly free to accept my offer.

This offer is extended to all who suffer with any curable disease, but I especially recommend the water for the treatment of stomach, liver, kidney and bladder diseases and conditions resulting therefrom, such as rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, gout, uric acid poisoning, nervous headache and general debility resulting from impure or impoverished blood. These are the diseases most frequently mentioned in the letters which I have received, but my offer is open to any one who suffers from any curable ailment.

Yours sincerely,

N. F. Shivar

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir—As you are well aware I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered 10 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportions that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely nature's remedy.

THE HABIT OF HELPFULNESS.

Through force of habit we do things without thinking of them at the time, or later. This, unfortunately, is as true of wrong things as it is of right things. If every wrong act required a specific act of the will for its doing, or if every wrong act were followed by a genuine remorse of conscience, we might more easily guard ourselves against the commission of evil. Profanity, for example, would largely disappear. But our habits make us act without thinking. How beautiful, then, is the habit of helpfulness! It leads us to speak the word that cheers a heavy heart; it causes us to reach out the hand to one who needs a brother's help; it makes us do the many small, but kindly services, that start a song in the heart of some way-worn traveler; and it is all done in the course of the day's work. But the memory of it lingers long in the mind of the one who was helped. Cultivate the habit of helping somebody every day.

THE WILL TO BE.

Some people seem to think that the endowment of genius is necessary for marked success in life. Others contend that a man's failure or success is dependent upon his environment. Still others insist that a "pull" is necessary for a man to be able to rise above the commonplace. There may be some temporary and incidental value in all these things, but the chief factor in bringing about achievement is the will to do. This is merely another way of saying that the conditions of success lie within a man, rather than without. A normally sane man has within himself the power to offset the lack of genius, to overcome unfavorable surroundings, to make and hold for himself a worthy place without the help of others who may be kindly disposed. That power lies in the will. A fixed and unshakable determination to succeed will vanquish apparently unconquerable foes. A good many years ago, we heard a very wise man say that there are two crises in every life—the crisis of decision, and the crisis of temptation. In the beginning, a goal must be definitely fixed. From the many that appear desirable, one must be chosen that is to give direction to the whole life. When that has been done, there must be an indomitable holding to that goal, in spite of many specious inducements to turn aside. In the making of character, the same law holds. The will to be, and to continue to be, is the mark that distinguishes the strong man from the weak. It is that which, wrongly exercised, may set a man at variance with God himself, and keep him in the ways that lead to destruction. Conversion and growth in grace lose their meaning to the man who does not will to be and to keep on being.

No normal man is satisfied with mediocrity. A noble ambition is heaven-inspired. A divine discontent is the mark of the constantly attaining life.

THE PATRIOTISM OF CHILDREN.

One of the beautiful things growing out of the ghastly war, is the love the children are beginning to feel and express for their country. To their simple way of thinking, patriotism is not an abstract virtue, but an absorbing passion. The Flag is not an academic symbol, but a concrete representation of something sacred and holy. The suggestion that it has been mistreated arouses their indignation as quickly as an affront to father or mother. And out of this struggle for liberty, which has brought about such dreadful carnage, there will come a generation of men and women who will hold sacred the memory of their fathers and brothers who died to make the world a place fit to live in, and who will themselves make every sacrifice for the maintenance of high national ideals of character. We see a glorious future for this great country of ours because of the lessons our children are learning to-day.

BY ORDER OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The War Industries Board, with full authority from the Government, has issued some very stringent regulations concerning newspaper circulation. Obedience to these regulations is not at all an optional matter. We shall be held strictly accountable for the manner in which we carry them out. We will observe them patriotically. Not one of our subscribers, we are sure, would have us do otherwise, even if we could. All of us are in full accord with the measures the Government has adopted for the conservation of our resources, in order that we may win the war. These rules have been issued to conserve print paper, which has already become scarce and very high-priced.

Unless our friends stand loyally by us, the Advocate is going to suffer a severe loss that it can ill afford at any time, but least of all at a time like this. Already, the cost of getting out the Advocate for the subscription price of $1.50 a year is almost prohibitive. We need every cent of our income to keep the Advocate up to its present standard.

The rules laid down by the War Industries Board include, among other things, the following:

1. After November 1, all free copies must be discontinued. The only exception to this rule is in the case of advertisers, to whom one copy may be sent.

2. All exchanges must be discontinued. There are no exceptions to this rule as it applies to us. We shall have to pay cash for every paper that comes to our table.

3. All subscribers who are delinquent must be cut off. There are no exceptions to this rule. It is in the application of this rule that we are likely to suffer most. A good many of our subscribers are slow about sending in their renewals. Heretofore, we have been able to bear with them; but we cannot do so now. The rule applies to all—preachers and laymen alike. We most earnestly ask our subscribers to look at the labels of their papers to see when their subscriptions expire; if they expire before November 1, please send us at once $1.50 for the renewal; otherwise, we shall be compelled to discontinue the paper—we have no option in the matter.

We trust we have made the situation clear. It is a serious one, and we hope all our subscribers who are in arrears will attend to their renewals promptly.

ADEQUATE PROVISION FOR THE SUPERANNUATES.

At the recent session of the General Conference, adequate provision was made for the care of our superannuates by the creation of the Board of Finance, of which Dr. Luther E. Todd was elected Secretary.

There is no cause in our Church which makes a stronger sentimental appeal to all our people than this movement to provide for the needs of our worn-out preachers, their widows and dependent orphans. We know full well the sacrifices these devoted servants of the Church have made, and the hardships they have undergone. We know, too, that the present position of the M. E. Church, South, in the religious world is due largely to the labors of these veterans of a noble cause. When we realize that most of them did their work in spite of meager salaries and insufficient support, with a spirit of loyalty that never faltered, and when we realize that many of them to-day, after having been worn out in this unconditioned service to the Church, are having to endure, in their old age, financial hardships of the most trying kind, we feel our hearts stir within us, and we accord to them the tribute heroes deserve. The record of their accomplishments in the face of tremendous difficulties, makes one of the brightest pages in our history, and we should be stony-hearted indeed, if we did not feel for them the strongest kind of sentimental affection.

But our obligation to provide for them in their old age is based, not upon sentiment, but upon justice. We grant that they earned every cent of the salary they received during the period of their active service; we grant, further, that, in most cases, they deserved a great deal more than they received; we explicitly acknowledge in the law governing the superannuate relation that they have been worn out in the itinerant ministry. A very slight investigation will prove that the pittances heretofore given these superannuates by the Church are altogether insufficient for their support. The conclusion is inevitable: as a mere matter of justice, these faithful men, who have earned more than they have received, who have been retired from active service because they have become worn-out in the service of the Church, who are compelled to get along as best they can on a mere pittance allowed them at the time of their superannuation, deserve at the hands of the Church at least a comfortable living in their declining years.

Sentiment has its place in the administration of justice, but it cannot always be relied upon to secure full justice. Sentiment is largely a matter of the emotions, which vary in intensity and in effectiveness of expression; justice is based upon the eternal principles of right. To secure full justice, godly judgment, keen moral sensibility and practical business methods are necessary. We believe the time has now come when the Church is re-enforcing its judgment and conscience with practical business methods, and we trust the time is not far distant when our noble veterans will receive their due.

THE STAY.

I see Him when the breaking dawn
Recalls the laggard soul from rest;
I hear him in the starry night,
When silence comes to be my guest.

His voice breathes low in early spring,
When frost chains break and March winds fail,
When larkspurs and anemones
Awake to life in every vale.

When sorrow calls to lonely paths,
When heaven lures our loved away,
His voice still speaks—how quietly!
And utters words no tongue can say.

With Him my stay, I cannot fall:
In spirit stress and battle shock
Still shall trust him, Lord of life,
Amid the tides a mighty rock!

LIFE'S STANDPOINT.

Did you ever think of the varied standpoints of life, how different they are? The eagle makes her home on the lofty crag which stands as the guardian of the mountain range. She soars away in stately circles into the azure heights. She glides for hours on motionless pinions adown the vault of the skies. Cloudland is her playground; and the serene, transparent firmament seems to be her standpoint of life. But think of the obscure career of the mole. It is clothed in soft and beautiful fur. It is a sturdy fellow, with stout legs and powerful claws; and all its senses are very keen, excepting possibly its sense of sight. Its eyes are very small, and it has no external ear—for as you know, the mole spends his life underground. He tunnels beneath the lawn, and plows his way in dark and silent labyrinths under the garden. The mole is a stranger to the sun. How strange must be his standpoint of life. Out in the green forest, one summer day, I noticed a very peculiar citizen. You can guess his name, for he carries his house upon his back. The snail is a narrow, worm-like creature, as long as your little finger, and wears two long antennae on his head. These feelers assist him in picking his way through the maze of plants, leaves, sticks and stones that carpet the woods. He is a great traveler, but journeys like the hands of the clock, with infinite slowness—but he moves. He is an example to some Christians in this. When alarmed he quickly withdraws into his fortress on his back. But withal he is a sedate and philosophical pilgrim—and he has his standpoint of life.

The sun hangs low in the west, as you wander along the musical stream. You cast your silken line with its artificial fly out upon the swirling waters, close to the rock where they dash and foam, a milk white torrent—and out of the angry, foam flecked flood you bring a sparkling, vivacious trout. What a singular standpoint of life has the trout in the dashing mountain torrent. In quest of other mysteries in studying the problems of life, you journey to the frozen ocean. Bleak and dreary are the ice-bound isles of the antartic. There terrific gales of piercing cold sweep over icy cliff, and snow-clad plain, and boisterous sea. But there in that bleak desolation dwells the penguin. There they live in colonies, social lives, and perfectly at home in the ice cave, and on the icy waters. What must be the standpoint of the penguin? Every variety of life has its own point of view, and to every creature its own interests are of supreme importance. The whole world revolves around it.

When we look at ourselves, and think of human powers, and human achievements, we are apt to think of human superiority and so lose sympathy with God's humbler creatures. But let us remember, they have their points of view, their interests, problems and anxieties, like ourselves. They live within their proper spheres and are true to their instincts and the vision of their lives. They excel man in this. The humbler creatures are our kinsmen, the principle of life in them and in us is identical. They are as noble and worthy in their own spheres as we in ours. So we should look upon all life with sympathetic interest, though we look upon life from a different standpoint.

The thought came to me the other day: What am I? And I found comfort in the reflection: I am a part of the universe—and my life will not be a failure, if I but live at the proper standpoint. Your great danger, and mine is, that we depart from the true standpoint of duty, character, and destiny. Some children come up from poverty, with its many hardships and privations; they come up through affliction, and are hampered and their lives narrowed by misfortune. Other children come up from favorable conditions of every kind, health, wealth, social station, educational advantages, moral refinement, and business prospects. So these children look upon life from different standpoints. And what should be their point of view? It should be real sympathy and brotherliness. The well favored and unfortunate, the capitalist and the laborer should all find the standpoint of "charity which suffereth long and is kind, and thinketh no evil."

We often wonder at human points of view. What must have been the mental and moral attitude of those Puritans of New England, who in 1650 paid premiums for the scalps of their Indian enemies? A wandering Italian workman who had begged for a job saw the son of his employer struggling in the water. He rushed in to save him, and lost his own life. What standpoint in life did he occupy? A girl of twenty-one in a town down east had been missing several months. She was found by the authorities in a room at home, where she had been imprisoned by her parents—and all because they thought she was bewitched by an herb doctor. What could be their view of life? An old man in a New York village, who never had over five dollars in his life, fell heir to $60,000 in cold cash. He said nobody ever knows how many friends he has until he receives a legacy. He declared he had received ten invitations to dinner from people who had not spoken to him for thirty years. So we find various standpoints of life—some are ludicrous, others strange, some frivolous, some dangerous, but some are noble. And now before us we see the mountain range of human endeavor. The miserly stand on the low crags of avarice, and have a narrow conception of life. The frivolous are on the hill-top called vanity, and are short-sighted. The superstitious are lost in the thickets of ignorance. The unscrupulous have gone no higher than the cliffs of sensuality, and cannot see the sunrise. But the pure minded and self-sacrificing have reached the mountain top of love, whither the path of human duty leads. This is the standpoint of the Man of Galilee, and He beckons all men to it.—Rev. Geo. H. Bennett, in The Central Christian Advocate.

AN OFFICIAL STATEMENT

Statement from the Committee on Temperance and Social Service adopted by the Commission at its Session at Lake Junaluska, N. C., August 10, 1918, and ordered to be sent to the several Annual Conferences and to the Church press for publication.

The General Conference in session in May at Atlanta, Georgia, created a Commission on Temperance and Social Service, the function of which is declared to be, "To consider the demands of temperance and social service upon our Church and our people; to formulate plans for the correlation of the various agencies of the Church in any way charged with these interests, and to plan for the more thorough instruction of our people, and the direction and development of their activities."

The General Conference ordered that each Annual Conference organize a Quadrennial Board of Temperance and Social Service, composed of one layman from each district, and an equal number of traveling preachers, members of the Annual Conference. The General Conference Commission is instructed to report annually to the College of Bishops, to co-operate with Annual Conference Boards of Temperance and Social Service, and to receive reports from them as to the work in the various Conferences.

The General Conference declared that the Church of God is divinely appointed to interpret Jesus Christ and his gospel to each successive generation, and to labor to the end that all things be brought into subjection to him, and that the problems of industrial readjustment and social redemption that are forced upon this generation constitute a challenge to assert the Lordship of Jesus Christ in the social as well as in the individual life, and to interpret the gospel of this age in social as well as in individual terms, and that the application of that gospel might be clearly indicated in certain particulars the General Conference adopted the Social Creed of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and instructed that this Creed be published in our Book of Discipline.

The General Conference ordered that a paragraph be added to the Discipline to read as follows: "That every Sunday school be organized for a definite program of Social Service, and let the Sunday school superintendent and Advisory Committee see that each class in the school is given definite and constant betterment work to do, to the end that our children may be educated and developed in good works."

Recommendations.

(1) We recommend that as a part of the definite program of social service to be adopted by our Sunday schools that each of the higher and adult classes give a portion of the year to the study of the Graded Literature Series dealing with social service problems and work.

(2) We respectfully call the attention of the Annual Conference to that provision of the Discipline which provides for the election by the Church Conference of a Social Service Committee. We recommend that on that committee there be a representative of each of the organized agencies of the local church, namely, the Board of Stewards, the Sunday school, the Woman's Missionary Societies, the Ladies' Aid Society and the Epworth League, the pastor of the church to be a member ex-officio of the Social Service Committee.

(3) In order that our pastors, lay leaders and other social service workers may have opportunity for a better understanding of the great social opportunities which confront the Church, and learn these opportunities, your commission has decided to hold a Summer Conference for social workers at Lake Junaluska, N. C., probably during the month of August, in 1919, concerning which full information will be given by circular and through the church press in ample time to make arrangements for attending the same. We recommend that each Annual Conference Board of Temperance and Social Service arrange for the attendance of its chairman and secretary upon this conference, and we trust that many other pastors and laymen will attend.

The General Conference did not authorize any assessment to be laid for the carrying on of this work of Temperance and Social Service, but it did authorize the raising of such funds by voluntary contributions as may be necessary. Following out this plan, the General Conference Commission will endeavor to meet the necessary expenses by personal appeals for voluntary contributions for that work. As the Commission has had no opportunity as yet to raise any money, it has not developed any literature for the use of the Annual Conference Boards. We recommend, however, that members of the Annual Conference Boards write to the Federal Council of the Churches in America, United Charities Building, New York City, for literature. A complete set of the pamphlet literature of the Federal Council Commission, including nineteen small pamphlets, may be had for thirty cents, postpaid, and we advise all our pastors, Sunday school superintendents and lay workers to secure this set at this small cost of thirty cents. We recommend, as a comprehensive account of the social service work done by the churches of the United States, the Year Book of Church and Social Service in the United States, price fifty-five cents; paper, thirty-five cents. Write for same to Prof. Harry F. Ward, Union Thelogical Seminary, New York City. We also recommend the Year Book of the Anti-Saloon League of America as the best official comprehensive account of the development and present status of the prohibition movement. Address E. A. Cherrington, Westerville, Ohio, inclosing 50 cents.

In conclusion, your commission would emphasize the fact that the work of the Social Service Commission is not only not antagonistic to the great evangelistic aim of the Church of Jesus Christ, nor does it in any way minimize the preaching of the gospel of repentance and faith, but the gospel of social service is an application of the teachings of Jesus Christ our Lord to the activities of life in every sphere of human endeavor. The Church cannot agree to surrender leadership in this work to any other form of organization, no matter how efficient or Christian that organization may be.

We appeal to our Annual Conference to appoint as members of your Annual Conference Board of Temperance and Social Service men of your Conference who have had experience in this work, and who, therefore, possess qualities of efficient leadership. We are exceedingly hopeful that the action taken by our recent General Conference on this subject will result in the further development of our pastors and people in all those forms of services which are the result of the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ.

We request that the secretary of each Annual Conference report promptly to Dr. Daniel Morton, St. Joseph, Missouri, secretary of the General Conference Commission, the organization of the Annual Conference Board, giving the names of the chairman, the secretary and other members of the Board, and a copy of the report submitted to the Annual Conference, with any other data of value.

Desiring in every way possible to co-operate to carry out this great purpose of the General Conference in organizing our Church for this form of work, we are, Your brethren in Christ Jesus,

CABINET SECRECY.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Whether or no the statement is capable of demonstration, I do not know; but the writer of the book of Ecclesiastes positively and solemnly asserts that there is a time for all things. The asseveration is apparently true—in some things, at least. For instance, when the season for the convening of the Annual Conferences approaches, a certain type of presiding elders invariably begins to display unmistakable evidences of an annual enduement of owl-wisdom, and a mysterious look of impenetrable secrecy spreads itself over their benign physiognomies. They desire to be regarded as exceedingly conservative and, therefore, "safe" men. The men composing this class of presiding elders uniformly meet all their less favored brethren with the gracious and remarkably sustaining assurance thought to be contained in the stereotyped phraseology discoverable in these venerable words, hoary with old age: "I shall do my best for you." How convenient for the secretive presiding elder, how comfortable to the preacher! True, the expression is vague, but this very quality conveys the idea of wonderful possibilities, transforming the most ordinary preacher into a man of expectations. "I shall do my best for you." How familiar does this phrase, chosen from the select vocabulary of the presiding eldership, sound to the ears of the ordinary Methodist preacher! How inspiring is this archaic and oracular utterance, leaving in its wake the indefinable impression of wisdom! It is not only the essence of wisdom, but it is more—it is the distillation of that essence. Under the influence afforded by its miraculous inspiration, the Methodist preacher, with wife and children dependent upon him for bread and meat and clothes, and without having been consulted by his presiding elder relative to the needs of himself and family, goes bravely and cheerfully up to Conference to receive, at the hands of the appointing power, his marching orders, in absolute ignorance of the nature of his field of labor until the presiding Bishop reads the list of appointments. We are talking much to-day of heroism upon the battle-field, but if this is not heroism of the highest sort, I do not know what that word means. However, it is a heroism which shall not much longer be expected or required, because, whatever those in authority may think about it, the time is rapidly drawing nigh when the rank and file of Methodist preachers will not submit to such an exhibition of secrecy by those who have the power of making their appointments. This is the day of democracy and anything that even looks like autocracy, either in State or Church, must go. The sooner our Bishops and presiding elders realize this truth of tremendous import which so vitally affects not only the general welfare, but also particulary the peace and harmony of our Methodism, the better it shall be for all concerned.

If I have been able to read accurately the signs of the times, all indications point to the fact that our Bishops and even some presiding elders are beginning to realize that they are now standing with their faces toward the sunrise of a new day in Methodism—a day resplendent with the spirit of democracy, bringing equal rights to all and conferring special privileges on none, when the humblest shall be even as the greatest. The dawning of this new day of democracy in Methodism was recently indicated when one of our Bishops, I think it was Bishop H. M. Du Bose, announced, toward the close of an Annual Conference over which he was presiding, that the appointments having been arranged, the presiding elders were at liberty to inform the preachers of their appointments and that he himself was accessible to both preachers and laymen. What a thunderbolt fell that day among secretive presiding elders! How different, how new and strange, yet how pleasant, do these words of the Bishop sound to the ears of some of us within whose memories the presiding elders were instructed to put the "lid" on the Cabinet and that they must not let it "leak!"

Let no one misunderstand me and reach the conclusion that I am making a fight on our Bishops and presiding elders. I love and honor them all. Our Bishops are great men; and all my presiding elders have been good men, although candor demands that I say that my conviction is that some of them, while capable men in other directions, were not the right type of men for that important office. But the thing for which I contend is a recognition upon the part of both Bishops and presiding elders of the new spirit of democracy which is stirring this age as never before, and which, under God, is destined to crush out of this old world the spirit of autocracy which, till now, has been dominant in the affairs of men throughout the sweep of the centuries. Especially do I make this appeal to the men who are our presiding elders, because they are closer to the pastors and people than are our Bishops. The time has come when these men, if they expect to maintain themselves in the high position in which the Church has placed them because she deemed them worthy and capable, must no longer clothe themselves with the magisterial air of superior wisdom above their brethren, and, as Conference approaches, seal their lips in secrecy. Secrecy must go, and it should go because it is not worthy as between Christian men whose Lord has placed them on the common basis of equality. The spirit of the times demands that our presiding elders, in a candid and appreciative manner, talk openly with the pastors in their respective districts and thereby familiarize themselves with the wishes, the hopes, and the needs of the preachers and their families. This is the only right and equitable thing for them to do, and only so is it possible for them wisely and intelligently to assist the Bishops in making the appointments. I presume it is a well known fact that possibly one-half of the preachers are informed of their appointments before the Bishop reads them, and in some instances this information is handed out weeks before the Conference assembles. The only part of this statement which might be called in question is the percentage; the fact—let him deny it who can. This information, of course, in the majority of instances is given to those preachers who occupy the pulpits of the high steeple churches of the cities. The only assignable reason discernible in all the realm of thought why the same information should be withheld from the average preacher on a circuit or in the pulpit of a village church is the presumption of his untrustworthiness. But with all the powers of my soul, I deny the truth of the presumption and resent the discrimination.

During my ministry, I have had a few presiding elders who seemed to think that secrecy is one of the essential elements of the dignity of their office, and they went to Conference without making inquiry into my needs, and I knew nothing of my appointment till I heard it from the lips of the Bishop. Such men are out of place in the presiding eldership and belong on the junk pile. The majority of my presiding elders, however, have been brotherly, sympathetic men who were considerate of their preachers and their families. Furthermore, they have talked freely with their preachers about their appointments. These men are made of the right sort of material and have their hearts in the right place.

In closing, let me ask, Why should secrecy be thought to be the exclusive prerogative of the presiding eldership? For the life of me, I am unable to conceive why some presiding elders apparently think it conducive to their official dignity to imitate the habits of a clam. Is it possible that they think their brethren cannot be trusted? Be that as it may, the presiding elder who, in the dawn of this new day of democracy, seals his lips in secrecy is going to find himself without a job, and the Bishop who shuts down the "lid" on the Cabinet is going to find it an unpopular thing among Methodist preachers who are already breathing the pure atmosphere of the new age at whose threshold we are now standing. So mote it be.

THE INTIMACY OF PRAYER.

The Lord in the night time, alone on the hillside; Peter in the corner of the housetop; Washington in the grove at Valley Forge; General Gordon in the quiet of his tent, while the army slept; the sailor lad at the masthead; the little servant in the coal cellar. DR. MOTT'S STATEMENT CONCERNING THE CAMP PASTOR ORDER.

Mr. Editor: The public statement having been made in the press that I am responsible for the recent order of the War Department concerning camp pastors, I wish to state that I am in no way, directly or indirectly, responsible for this order. I knew nothing about it until it had been settled by the War Department. I have received communications also, inquiring whether the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association has had anything to do with this action of the War Department. I have answered these communications, stating unqualifiedly that this organization has had nothing whatever to do with the matter. On the contrary, I am sure that it will be found on investigation in the various cantonments and camps throughout the country that the Association secretaries have as a rule done all in their power to help the camp pastors in their work.

Let me add that I am a member of what is known as the Committee of Six, which has during the past year done all that it could to secure action on the part of the Government increasing the number of regular Army and Navy chaplains and likewise to further any plans which would help them. I have been asked whether this Committee is not responsible for the recent action of the War Department concerning camp pastors and wish to state that such is not the case.

I am sure that those who have through ignorance of the facts held me responsible for the camp pastor order will do me the justice to correct their statements, in order that there may be no misunderstanding regarding my relation to this matter. My record shows that I have furthered the work of the camp pastors, just as I have always advocated interdenominationalism and not non-denominationalism, believing that the stronger the denominations were, the more powerful would be their co-operation in Christian service wherever co-operation was practicable and not inconsistent with conviction.

As for the merger of all war work organizations in one financial campaign, responsibility for which has also been laid, in part, to me, it is only right to say that I opposed the merger with all the power at my command until the President decided it should be made, when I loyally accepted his decision and am throwing myself heart and soul into a campaign to carry on a work essential to the welfare of our boys.

I kindly request that you will print this in your first issue, in justice to me, and especially that the great cause I represent may not suffer through misapprehension. Sincerely yours,

JOHN R. MOTT.

A GOOD LETTER FROM HOMER, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: When you said something to me the other day about getting the news from the field because this is always interesting reading, I could not help but think that it is an impossibility for you to get it unless somebody sends it to you. I have always hesitated, somewhat, to write about the work being done on the charges that I serve because it did not appeal to me so much to tell others about the things that were going on under my leadership as a pastor. However, I have always been glad to see the things that other men have written about their work and have been glad to read these articles. Then, besides this, the people in the charge do such a large part of the work, and the success of the work is so largely dependent upon what the people do that they should be given the credit for what they are doing.

We have received into church membership here this Conference year forty-six people. This is in a town, too, that has been well worked. Our church membership now is nearly four hundred persons. We have good and helpful prayer meetings, though they could be very much improved. The board of stewards just held their meeting this evening and report that our finances are about two hundred dollars better than was the case at the same time last year. They expect to pay out on everything. We held Rally Day in the Sunday school on last Sunday with a good program and the service well attended. We are planning for Work Day for the orphanage and hope largely to increase our collection over that of last year. The Easter offering was doubled last spring. We are carrying a Japan special in the Sunday school at an increase over what was raised for the China special last year. We have had a class recently to graduate in the Standard Teachers' Training course.

With reference to the Centenary of missions in Methodism, I have been preaching about this and talking it in private and in public. The Sunday school is already raising as a special the annual amount that would be apportioned to this school as its share in the Centenary fund. Last year our people raised for the different items designated as coming regularly under those for which Centenary funds are to be raised, something over six hundred dollars. This was the work of the people of the church. They did it. The board of stewards looks after the Conference assessments. Consequently these men looked after the amounts that would come in the regular assessments. The Missionary Society added a very substantial amount to the general fund in their collections. Then the Sunday school raised a good special for China and Mexico. It is my belief that this church should be able to take care of its share of the Centenary fund without any great difficulty. We have enrolled seventy-six members of the Fellowship of Intercession and have secured the signature to some tithers' cards. I have preached on tithing and expect to do it again soon.

This summer we had a good meeting under the leadership of Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, of Birmingham. He gave us good sermons and knew how to manage the after meetings successfully. He is a man of deep consecration and of genuine piety. None of the brethren who may secure him will make a mistake in doing so. Under his leadership real good was done in the church and a number were added to the membership by letter and by profession.

It was the privilege of this pastor to have a trip to the Bible Workers' Conference at Junaluska this summer through the generosity of the congregation, who presented him with a check to cover expenses. It is needless to say that things that were very helpful were heard while there. Then as for the Centenary meeting at Dallas, you know what that meant. We must get behind this movement and see it through. I hope that Thursday of our coming Conference will be the greatest day in the history of the Louisiana Conference.

Our people are actively engaged in all sorts of war activities. This could not be otherwise. There are thirty-five men from this church in the service of our country and one in the Y. M. C. A. work. Many of these men are in France. We had a prayer meeting in their behalf last night. Our ladies are actively engaged in the work of the Red Cross. The president of our Missionary Society, Mrs. W. A. McKenzie, is chairman of woman's work and is constant and painstaking in her activities in behalf of the Red Cross. Others do their full share, too. This pastor is chairman of the Red Cross for the Parish. It takes much work and effort. Brother C. O. Ferguson, president of our board of stewards, led the Third Liberty Loan "over the top." Now he is in the midst of doing the same thing for the Fourth Liberty Loan. The chairman of the Red Cross War fund was a member of our church. The Parish went about fifty per cent over. Another of our men is food administrator for the Parish and still another is chairman of the Council of Defense.

Perhaps too much of your space has already been taken. Our people are alive to the calls of the Government and at the same time are seeking to keep going regular work in the church. This is no time for slackers in either church or governmental affairs. We want the prayers of your readers. I think that the preachers and people throughout the Conference should pray for one another more.

SOME NEWS FROM HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Please say in the Advocate that Rev. Paul D. Hardin, of the Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, was taken sick last Tuesday, Oct. 1, and has been real sick ever since; and that his condition is not as encouraging as we might wish, but we sincerely hope that he will soon be restored to his usual health. Let the Church pray that this faithful and efficient servant of God may soon recover, and he about his loved employ. He is very much loved by his church and the people generally, and all are showing sympathetic interest, for he is spending and being spent in the work of the great church to which he has been appointed.

His revival meeting began last Sunday when Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Whitworth College, charmed the great congregations to whom he preached. Brother Kelly, our Conference evangelist, preached very acceptably two sermons; and Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Pine Bluff, Ark., arrived Tuesday morning, and took up the work for the remainder of the meeting. To say that he is bringing us ringing messages, full of gospel and power, is but to say what all know who are acquainted with this choice servant of the Church; everybody has fallen in love with him, and the prospects are that a great meeting will result. He is a master in the work of a revival meeting, as he is also wherever you put him. The church in the absence of the pastor is rallying to him, and seems determined to push the work on to great success, despite the sickness of Brother Hardin, the Liberty Loan drive, the war and everything else. Mr. Charles Butler and wife are leading the music and no better singers can be found. Faithfully,

W. B. JONES, P. E.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, MEMPHIS.

Dear Brother Carley: I have formed the habit of writing a few lines for the Advocate once a year since coming to Memphis. I am winding up my fourth year at this church, and my eighth year in Memphis.

St. John's Church is admirably located. It is about two miles from Peabody Hotel, situated in a choice residential district, and now has 843 members. I have received about 500 since coming here. We have built a Sunday school annex at a cost of $31,000, and by Nov. 6, when our Conference convenes, all the money will be in hand to pay every obligation. We have a church building worth at least $100,000 and a parsonage worth $12,000. St. John's Church easily stands among the leading churches of our Methodism.

Bishop Atkins and Rev. Burke Culpepper are to conduct revival services here Oct. 20 to Nov. 3. We have in our membership here many prominent citizens, and I hope to leave to my successor a church well organized and ready for work.

All the Mississippians who have come to the Memphis Conference have given a good account of themselves. Brother Spragins is doing a splendid work at First Church, and Brother Clark has recently been chosen by the Conference Board of Missions to look after the Centenary Missionary work in our bounds. Cordially,

Do as well as you can to-day, and perhaps tomorrow you may be able to do better.—Newton.

A LAYMAN ON TITHING.

Dear Brother Carley: I was very much impressed with your article on "Tithing as a Business Principle," in the Advocate of September 26. I endorse every word you have said. The great drawback of the modern Churches, Protestant and Catholic, is in not living up to the privilege and duty of giving to the cause of Christ and the great work of the Church in the world. If, as business men, we ran our business in the same stingy, niggardly, close methods as we do the church work, we would soon be in the hands of the receiver or bankrupt. We so often forget that all we have and are is due to the enlightened and uplifting influence of the religion of Jesus Christ.

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." Mal. 3:8, 9. This might justly apply to us, as the writer can state truthfully that we have not given even 5 per cent of our earnings and incomes, not alone 10 per cent demanded by the Lord. If this were done, the ministers and priests would have plenty to eat, and clothes, and all these "heaps" over, as during the times of Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:10) for missionary and educational work of the Church. Some of us, when in the service of the devil, were very liberal in spending money and doing evil. Why should we become stingy when converted and clothed in our right minds in the cause of Christ? The challenge is, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3:10. Now, if you want to prove a thing, and most of us do, just try it for one year. Our God is the same yesterday, to-day and blessed forevermore.

Oh, let us wake up to the privilege of just doing our plain duty, and see the mighty results that will follow with God's blessings resting upon us. We, like Peter of old, will so feel the Divine Presence in the rich blessings showered upon us daily from the Giver of all good things, that in our utter unworthiness we, too, will exclaim, "Depart from us, for we are sinful men, O Lord." Luke, 5:8.

First fruits unto the Lord, which means 10 per cent of the first cotton, sugar, rice, syrup, profits in business; and to the housewife and children, the first dozen eggs, chickens, early vegetables, shall be their thank offering unto the Lord. Just try it, as a layman did and proved that the Lord fulfills his word of promise.

Greenville, Miss.

AN APPEAL FROM WESLEY HOUSE, BILOXI, MISS.

Dear Friends: We would be so grateful for any donations, in form of old clothing or shoes. We find many children who cannot enter school because of the lack of clothing. Many of the mothers are widows and find it very hard to provide for their little ones. Anything will be most gratefully appreciated. Please remember the poor at home in these stressing times.

Thanking you kindly for any thing you can do,

GERTRUDE GRIZZARD, Deaconess.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The government officials are demanding conservation of paper by requiring that from November 1 subscriptions be paid in advance, the object, of course, being to force us to stop all papers not paid for, expecting by this method to effect a saving in newsprint, which is constantly growing scarcer and higher in price. Most daily papers and magazines require payment in advance, but many weeklies, especially country weeklies, and more particularly religious and denominational weeklies, have long indulged subscribers by extending credit; but the government is asking us to cut it out—and out credit goes—for it is a fact that Uncle Sam must be obeyed. Between this date and November 1 we must clear our list of all unpaid subscribers, as on November 1 we must make affidavit as to what progress we have made towards complying with the wishes of the government.

This paper has tried to be very kind and indulgent to many of its subscribers, so in announcing our purpose to conform to the government's opposition to the credit business we most seriously urge prompt payment. Look at the date on the address label of your paper and kindly remit to date, and also a year in advance. Most of you are familiar with conditions and will no doubt do your bit by us as promptly and cheerfully as you are doing it for Uncle Sam, and thus help both at the same time. The little pink or yellow address label shows the date of expiration of your subscription.

CHRIST FOR THE WORLD

We cannot believe in Christ for ourselves unless we believe in Him for all the world. The more deeply we believe in Him for ourselves the more certain we shall believe that He is the Savior of the world. Just as surely as you deepen your own spiritual life and make Jesus more your Savior, just so surely you will believe in Christian Missions and long to tell all that He is their Savior too.—Phillips Brooks.

A CHURCH'S EXPERIENCE IN TITHING.

By Homer K. Morehead.

In the spring of this year Roberts Avenue Methodist Church of Beaumont, Texas, began tithing as a Church, and the results have been so wonderful that we can recommend the plan to any Church that will try it out in a religious way.

This Church has always had trouble raising money. Like so many other Churches, it is made up of poor people who thought they were not able to do the work that seemed necessary to be done. At the close of each Conference year the preacher's and presiding elder's salaries were always behind and with nothing scarcely paid on the Conference collections. So about two weeks before Conference a big campaign would be inaugurated and by various plans the whole thing would be pulled out and the pastor could go to Conference and report "Everything in full, Bishop," but nothing was said about how the money was raised. And when I give the experience of this Church in this way I am also giving the experience of dozens of other Churches that have had this same hard pull to wind up for Conference.

After going through a very successful meeting last spring, we decided that as a Church, we would try the tithe plans taught in God's Word and see if we would not get along better. We read where the Lord said, "Bring the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now saith the Lord, if I will not open unto you the windows of Heaven and pour you out such a blessing that ye shall not be able to contain it." And so we reasoned that this is God's promise and we would try it and trust Him for the results.

We secured a tithe and offering box and placed it in the vestibule of the Church; eliminated the collections in all the departments of the Church and asked the members to place their tithes and offerings in the boxes for that purpose. We stopped all the different kinds of schemes that had been used to get money for the Church and determined that we would for once give the Lord's plan a thorough test. We had felt all along that the Lord expected His Church to do its work on its merits and not depend on begging and suppers to finance its work.

After four months' trial of this plan we have found that it is certainly of the Lord. Our Church is in the best condition of its history. Every expense of the Church is paid to date. The Conference collections are all paid for the year; our full quota for the superannuate fund of the Texas Conference is taken care of; a new Buick car has been purchased for the use of the pastor, and there is now something like six hundred dollars in the treasury. There is scarcely a service that we do not have additions to the Church, and the attendance at the services this summer has been better than ever before. Since trying the plan thus far we would not change to any other for any consideration.

In the handling of our tithes we have three committees from our official Board—Finance, Benevolent, Building and Repair. Forty per cent of the funds coming in are handled by the finance committee, the same amount by the benevolent committee and two per cent is left in a sinking fund to be used for any purpose in emergency cases. This simply means that only forty per cent of our money is used for the running expenses of the Church, the same amount for charity and benevolent work, and the remaining eighteen per cent for needed improvements on our Church property.

We feel that as a Church, we have never done anything that has meant more to us than the adoption of this tithe plan and earnestly recommend it to all of the Christian people everywhere. It will make the people of any Church more religious, and will absolutely solve every financial problem in connection with any Church.

DOES IT PAY?

"Shall we educate our girls?" Fifty years ago this question began, for the first time, to be considered seriously by the oldest, most conservative, most custom-bound country in the world. China has at last learned that if she is to take her rightful place among the nations she must realize that it is indeed worth while to give her daughters the same advantages that she does her sons.

The story of the first efforts for the cause of woman's education in China is marked by difficulties, discouragements, persecutions and hardships. But the light of a new day has dawned for the Chinese girl, and, educationally, she has come into her own. It is believed that the Centenary Movement will prove a further source of enlightenment to these young daughters of old China, and that during the five years of the Centenary Drive many followers of an aroused and awakened Methodism will be glad to do their "bit" to encourage the education of Chinese girls.

Bishop Collins Denny says:

"The Centenary of American Methodist Missions will put our Church to the test. We have been very slow in meeting our obligations to peoples of other countries. Every one of our mission fields needs re-inforcement in men and material. If at this time the Church will respond to the call of those who have been placed in charge of this important work, and will contribute the workers and the means to support the workers, she will not only be meeting a plain duty, she will receive perhaps the greatest spiritual uplift that Methodism among us has ever known."

The part that Christian schools have taken in the wonderful work of elevating Chinese women makes most interesting reading. Foremost among the schools which have been instrumental in bringing new life to the women and girls of China is the Laura Haygood School at Soochow, China. This school is the result of the love and devotion of Miss Laura Haygood of the South Georgia Conference, who as early as 1898 began to plan definitely for this school for high class Chinese girls.

The school was formally opened in 1902. The buildings and the appropriation for carrying on the work are largely due to the efforts of the women of Georgia. Two years ago in answer to an appeal from the Chinese government, the Laura Haygood was changed into a high grade normal school. Miss Martha Pyle, who has been principal of the school from the beginning, is now in America taking a much needed rest, and Miss Mary Lou White, of the Virginia Conference, is in charge. The graduates of this school are rapidly finding places of service in the world. After finishing at Laura Haygood many of the girls come to America to complete their education. The registers of Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, and Vassar all record among their most gifted students graduates of Laura Haygood School.

The past history of the institution is such as to warrant the prediction of a most successful future and the location of the school just across the street from the great Soochow University is a constant object lesson to the Chinese, reminding them that "it does pay" and that girls, as well as boys, have a right to an education.

STEADILY INCREASING INTEREST IN LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE.

Dr. E. H. Rawlings, of Nashville; J. T. Hendry, of China; Miss Belle H. Bennett, of Richmond, Ky., and Miss Esther Case, of Nashville, constituted th team which had charge of "Centenary Day" in the Louisville Conference at its recent session in Madisonville, Ky. The meetings were held in the Opera House, which has a seating capacity of 700, and for the most part, the building was taxed to the limit. Surveys of the various mission fields were presented. The Far East was discussed by Dr. Hendry, while Miss Case in a most pleasing and forceful manner presented the need and opportunity in Latin Lands. The relation of the Sunday school to the Centenary Movement was presented by Dr. J. J. Stowe, who also discussed Stewardship and Tithing. In a very able address Dr. Rawlings presented the general subject and stressed the part that Prayer would have in the success of the Movement, while Dr. Belle H. Bennett told of the part that the women of the Church should play in the Centenary plan. The interest in the Centenary deepened perceptibly as the program unfolded and at the close it was conceded by members of the Conference that "Centenary Day" was one of the really great days in the history of the Louisville Conference. On motion of Dr. Frank M. Thomas the allotment assigned to the Conference was unanimously accepted and Dr. J. B. Adams, one of the ablest men of the Conference, was selected as Conference Missionary Secretary to devote all of his time to the work during the Centenary period.

CENTENARY DAY FEATURE OF ST. LOUIS CONFERENCE.

"Centenary Day" was one of the main features of the St. Louis Conference in session at Charleston, Mo. Team No. 3 was in charge. Dr. Beauchamp gave a historical statement and a general survey of the Centenary Movement. Dr. Winton represented the Latin American fields and spoke at night on "World Reconstruction after the War." Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb represented the Woman's Work and gave the stereopticon lecture. Rev. R. L. Russell, one of the leading members of the Conference, was selected as Missionary Secretary during the period of the Centenary celebration. The Conference Board of Missions passed a resolution accepting the Centenary allotment, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote of the Conference. The St. Louis Conference is wide awake to the wonderful opportunity provided by the Centenary of Missions and sees in the movement a project worthy the faith and history of the great Methodist Church.

The Home Circle

SELF-HEAL.

There is a little flower with a modest purple head,
That grows out in the fields all summer long;
It's something like a clover—though it's neither white nor red—
And if you listen you may hear its song:
"O, work with a will,
And play with a will.
Be cheerful though cloudy the day:
For each sunny heart
Can do its wee part,
And help make the sad world less gray."

Just find this little flower, with the modest purple head,
'Twas named "Self-Heal" a long, long time ago.
By one whose sad heart listened to its teaching, it is said,
And through the good advice forgot its woe.
Then work with a will,
And play with a will.
Be cheerful whatever the day;
For your happy heart
Can do its small part,
To make the old world glad and gay.

"GIMME A JOB BOY WINNER."

"I want a job."

The head of the electric lighting concern looked up from his desk and saw a gangling boy of seventeen facing him with a look of quiet, respectful determination that carried conviction.

"But I haven't any position that you could possibly fill and right now I'm so driven that—"

"I want a job," interrupted the boy with an odd smile that didn't detract from the serious determination of his general expression. "And I'm willing to work for you for six months without a cent of pay."

"Well, that's rather a new one," exclaimed the owner of the lighting plant, "but—"

The boy was looking for that "but," and caught it on the fly.

"You see it's this way, sir," he interrupted. "I've just finished at the manual training school, and I've made up my mind that electric lighting's the thing for me and that I'm going to be started in it. It has a great future, and I want to understand it and make it my line."

His eye was kindling with enthusiasm when the man at the desk opened with another. "But—"

He didn't get an inch beyond that depressing qualification, for the boy shot into the sentence with—

"I'll work for nothing and keep just as careful hours as your foreman or anybody else on your pay roll. You've got a good plant, sir, and I can see that it's bound to grow a lot in the next three years. Electric lighting has just started. It's the best business to get into in the world, and I'm going to learn it from the ground up. I want a job with you. No pay for six months."

"But I don't see how I can possibly use you," responded the man of the plant, "although I am bound to say that I like your grit, and I think you are on the right track—and—"

"You just give me the job, sir," cut in the boy, "and I'll find something to do that will help you. There's always work around a plant like yours that a boy who's had a little technical training can find to do—work that needs to be done. Here's some references from my instructor and two or three business men who know me—"

"Look here," suddenly interrupted the man at the desk, "you certainly do want a job. And you're going to get it. I can see that right now. When you first spoke I knew you reminded me of somebody, but I couldn't think who. Now I know. When I was a boy we had a dog that used to go off into the woods and hunt coons all by himself. If he treed his coon he'd start to gnaw it down, so I will give you a letter to the superintendent."

When, a fortnight later, he called at the plant, the foreman remarked: "The oddest duck you ever saw. He takes his job just as hard as if he was drawing profits or a salary instead of working for nothing a week and paying his own carfare.

"Why, his aunt died the other day, and he didn't come for two days; but he sent a substitute and paid him out of his pocket. He's the first man on the job in the morning and the last to leave at night. From the minute he gets here till he leaves, he's as busy as a boy at a circus. That boy is certainly stuck on his job."

A few weeks later the boy spoke to the man who had given him a job.

"A little testing department would save you money," said the boy, "and it wouldn't cost much, either. You buy a lot of material, first and last, and I've found out that some of it isn't up to standard. They're working considerable off on you."

"How much will it cost?" asked the owner of the plant.

Instantly the boy drew from his pocket a list of every item needed in the equipment of the testing laboratory. He had it all ready, waiting for the question. "Get it and go ahead," said the man, after he had glanced over the list.

The laboratory was installed, and saved the business a neat sum of money.

The day that the boy's period of gratuitous service was up he appeared again at the proprietor's desk and said: "My time is up, sir."

"But you stay," was the quick answer, "and the salary you get is going to cover the unpaid time in which you've been serving me."

And it did. That's wasn't so long ago. The electric plant grew until it was big enough to be "absorbed." It has been absorbed several times since; but the boy who stuck for a job stuck through every change. Each set of absorbing capitalists saw that he was the one man who couldn't be spared. They saw that he knew the business as well as he knew his old shoes. They played him for a favorite and to-day he could buy out the man who gave him his first job—buy him several times over. He is the head of a big electric corporation, and gets a salary of twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year, besides profits in half a dozen thriving interests.

Any boy who has the stuff in him to play the game to-day as that boy played it will win out. You couldn't keep him down if you buried him under the dead-weight of a skyscraper. There are plenty of boys who are waiting to accept a position—and always will be! But when it comes to boys who go out and beat the bushes for a job—just a plain job in which they have a chance to make good without regard to pay—they're so scarce they're in danger of being captured for exhibition purposes in museums.

Nothing can stand against the boy of this kind. The "give-me-a-job" boy is sure to be distributing jobs to others.—Exchange.

TALK UP THE MINISTER.

Years ago there was trouble in a certain Presbyterian church over the young pastor. Many members insisted upon his leaving. His few ardent friends insisted with equal zeal upon his remaining. Much bad feeling had been generated. The case was critical.

Finally two prominent officials called the congregation together and gave this counsel: "It is true our pastor is not a great man. He does not preach learned or eloquent sermons. But we all know that he is a good man, and that he is doing all in his power to promote our spiritual interests. Let us all agree to bear with him and instead of talking him down, let us go out from this meeting resolved to talk him up."

The advice was accepted. The result you can guess. He remained in that church nearly half a century, and remarkable success attended his ministry to the close.

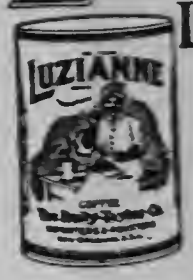
A good many people talk the minister down. They discount all his doings. They misunderstand his plainest sayings. They credit him with unworthy motives. They predestinate his failure. An angel from heaven could not succeed under such circumstances.

That is unwise. It is unfair. And it is wicked.

How much better to "talk up" the minister. The world will accept him at your estimate and respect him according to the measure of your own respect.

Talk up the minister in your home. Help him to win and save the children. Lift up the minister among the young people. Raise not a finger to break the spell of his uplifting influence.

Talk up the minister among your fellow-members. Be his solid friend. Suffer no tongue of malice to speak against him in your presence.



Talk up the minister in the social circle, on the street, in the cars, in the factory, store or office. Magnify his strong points. Minify his weak ones. Speak kindly of him or speak not at all.

Do you know what such loyalty to the minister will mean? In nine cases out of every ten it will mean success.—Bishop J. F. Berry, in The Christian Intelligencer.

A man of integrity, sincerity, and good nature can never be concealed, for his character is wrought into his countenance.—Marcus Aurelius.

Editorial

IN CONNECTION WITH THE FOURTH LIBERTY LOAN.

The news coming from Europe is every day more encouraging to the Allies. As this is written, the daily newspapers are full of the reports of the offer made by the Kaiser and Prince Maximilian, the German Imperial Chancellor, to enter upon negotiations for peace. There is good reason to believe, however, that this offer is made with the hope that the Allies may be induced to conclude a peace by negotiation that will enable Germany to retain many advantages which she will be forced to give up if the war is carried to its logical conclusion. The consensus of opinion among the Allies, thus far unofficially expressed, seems to be that no steps looking toward peace should be taken until Germany is willing to make an unconditional surrender. We fully concur in this opinion. The issues at stake are too far-reaching, and we have invested too much of men and money in the struggle for us to be satisfied with anything less than a complete victory all along the line. The Central Powers are growing weaker, while the Allies are growing stronger all the time; let us hold on until we secure everything we have been fighting for.

It is in this connection that we wish to urge the necessity of carrying to a gloriously successful issue the Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign. There should be no lessening of effort to have the loan oversubscribed because the Germans seem to be on the eve of acknowledging defeat. There is all the more reason why we should stand behind our Government in providing in fuliest measure the financial resources to carry on the war with as much vigor as ever. We must not be misled into believing that the end has come; it may be in sight, but the money to be raised by this loan is needed just the same. The mere fact that the loan has been enthusiastically oversubscribed will be one of the strongest blows that we can deliver against the Central Powers at this time. Let every patriotic citizen do his duty by taking all the bonds of this issue that he possibly can.

NOT TOO FAST.

This is a day of nervous haste in the doing of a great many things. "Speed up!" is the cry heard from many quarters. "We must hurry," is the feeling that urges us on, day by day and week by week. It is well, perhaps, that it should be so. Many urgent problems are pressing upon us for solution, and new conditions to which we must adjust ourselves almost instantly are arising all the time. The sluggard wakes up in the morning to find that he has been left far behind in the march of events overnight. But it is not well to hurry overmuch. Speed is not the only essential, or the chief essential, in getting through life rightly. A race horse may be a marvel for speed—but he is not worth much at the prosaic task of pulling a dray; yet the drays must be pulled. Some automobiles can be run at a speed of over a hundred miles an hour—but they play a very small part in the maintenance of productive industry. We must make haste, but we should do it wisely.

The student oftentimes becomes weary as he pores over his books, and imagines that he is losing time because he is not actively engaged in the world's work; let him not forget that he is developing powers of concentration and endurance that will make him winner later on. The business man becomes discouraged at the slow development of his business, and thinks it would be better for him to adopt some "get-rich-quick" scheme; let him remember that solidity is a quality of every lasting foundation. The minister grows despondent because the Kingdom does not come within a day, and he is tempted to resort to flamboyant and sensational methods; let him not forget the example of the Master. We must go forward constantly, persistently, steadily; yes, but let us not try to go too fast.

THE METHODIST HOSPITAL.

The Mississippi, the North Mississippi, the Memphis and the North Arkansas Conferences are to be congratulated on the fact that the Methodist Hospital, located at Memphis, Tenn., and owned by them, is now open and in successful operation. The Lucy Brinkley Annex, with fifty beds devoted exclusively to surgical and maternity cases for children and women, is well equipped and is rendering a great service in its special field. A new building for general hospital purposes has been planned, and it will be erected just as soon as circumstances will permit. All who have subscribed to this worthy institution will help the cause greatly by making their payments as soon as possible; those who desire to contribute, should communicate with Mr. Thos. B. King, Financial Agent, Memphis, Tenn. We are glad that Methodism in this territory is to have such a splendid example of applied Christianity.

DEATH OF ELLIS BROWN.

Just as we go to press, a telegram comes from Rev. Paul M. Brown, sent from Gettysburg, Pa., announcing the death of his son, Ellis, and stating that the funeral service will be held at De Ridder, La., Thursday afternoon, October 10. This announcement brings inexpressible sorrow to the Editor, as it will to scores of friends of the deceased throughout Louisiana. Ellis Brown was a magnificent type of Christian young manhood. He was intellectually brilliant, and we have no doubt but that he would have made his mark in the world. He was religious by training and by instinct. In response to the call of his country, he enlisted in the military service with a high patriotism that asked nothing more than an opportunity to serve where he was most needed. He never reached France; but his brave spirit will hold communion with those who yielded up their lives on the battlefield. To his father and mother, and his two brothers overseas, and to his aged grandmother, we extend the deep sympathy that springs from a keen sense of personal loss. May the good Father comfort them all.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

We must never forget that the Sunday school offers the finest opportunity the Church has for the development of Christian character and the training of its membership for efficient service in the various departments of Church work. In addition to the adults, the children and young people are brought together Sunday after Sunday for systematic instruction. It is possible to reach them then, as at no other time or place.

The movement for equipping our Sunday school teachers more thoroughly for their work, by means of the teacher-training campaign, is, in our judgment, one of the most important that our Church has undertaken. We sincerely trust that our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and teachers are taking advantage of this campaign to bring their schools up to a high state of efficiency. Trained Sunday school teachers are as necessary as trained teachers in our public schools and colleges, if the best results are to be obtained. An investment of time and effort in the movement to secure them will pay rich returns throughout the years to come.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Thirty-nine Chinese women have signed a petition asking for the establishment of a Y. W. C. A. in New York City.

We express our thanks to Rev. T. H. Mills, of Pockens, Miss., for two subscriptions which he sent us from his charge last week.

Rev. E. L. Alford, our pastor at Centerville, Miss., has been accepted for overseas Y. M. C. A. service, and will leave for his post of duty in the very near future.

We learn from the pastor, Rev. John W. Ramsey, that the New Augusta charge, Mississippi Conference, has paid its full allotment of $40 for the War Emergency Fund. Good!

Rev. J. G. Snelling, of Ruston, La., in sending us a list of eleven subscriptions from his charge, pays tribute to Miss Nellie Yarbrough, who secured the list. We thank them both.

Mrs. Bessie Alderman, of Wiggins, Miss., is a good friend of the Advocate. She proved her friendship recently by sending us eleven subscriptions. We thank her sincerely.

We call special attention to the statement, "Preacher versus Kaiser," by Dr. Luther E. Todd, on page 14 of this week's Advocate. It is a great cause that Dr. Todd represents.

We have received a card from Rev. L. E. Crooks, of Greensburg, La., announcing the arrival in his home, on Sunday, Sept. 29, of a fine baby girl. We extend congratulations to the happy parents.

The Editor had the privilege of preaching to an attentive congregation at our First Church in this city last Sunday morning. The pastor, Rev. W. H. Coleman, was kept at home by an attack of the grippe.

We have been informed that Rev. J. Lloyd Deceil, our pastor at McComb City, Miss., recently underwent an operation for appendicitis. He stood the ordeal well and is, we understand, on the road to recovery.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, United States Food Administrator, has promised to pay Louisiana a visit in the near future. He will discuss in detail the food conservation measures that are necessary for winning the war.

Mrs. M. E. Baskin, of Conway, Ark., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, which she has taken for a long time, takes occasion to say some very kind things concerning the paper, all of which we appreciate deeply.

We extend our thanks to Rev. J. F. Owen, of Smithville, Miss., for sending us recently the names of two new subscribers to the Advocate. Brother Owen is pastor of the Tremont charge, North Mississippi Conference.

Dr. W. G. Henry, our highly trained and efficient pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., has been accepted as a candidate for the chaplaincy in the United States army. He left for the Chaplains' Training Camp, Louisville, Ky., last Thursday.

Rev. C. H. Strait, of Johns, Miss., has recently sent us a fine list of subscriptions, for which we thank him. There were nineteen names on the list, and there was a check to match. Such communications encourage us mightily.

There will be more need than ever for "early Christmas shopping" this year. Business interests throughout the country have agreed not to employ extra clerks or observe longer hours than usual during the approaching holiday season.

Rev. R. M. Brown, pastor of Felicity Church, this city, was unable to fill his pulpit last Sunday on account of being ill with the prevailing type of the grippe. Rev. F. M. Freeman preached for him in the morning, and Dr. J. T. Sawyer in the evening.

General Pershing recently sent the following cablegram to Dr. Robert E. Speer: "We rely on the churches at home to keep the spirit of the people white hot with patriotism and courage until victory has been won." And the churches will not disappoint him.

Brother Vaughan, whose initials we are not sure of, a superannuated member of one of our Texas Conferences, has moved to Mississippi and will make his home at Brookhaven. We are sure he will be beartily welcomed by the good people of that progressive littie city.

Mrs. A. Purvis, of Eden, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate says this: "It has been coming to my home for about sixty years, and I wouid not like for it to stop now." May the richest biessings of Heaven he hestowed upon this faithful reader of her Church paper!

Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Whitworth Coiiege, was in the city one day last week and honored us by caiiing at the Advocate office. He stated that Whitworth had at that time 230 students, with others coming. The names, Cooper and Whitworth, stand for great things in the educational worid.

A note from Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Pine Biuff, Ark., who is engaged in a meeting at Hattiesburg, Miss., informs us that the outiook for a great meeting is most encouraging. The Hatiesburg American is giving a fuii report of the meeting, more than a column being devoted to it in its issue of last Friday.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, pastor of the Frankiinton circuit, writes us that he has just ciosed a good meeting at Zona, on his charge, where he was assisted hy Rev. T. J. Embree, of Siideii. The attendance at the services was good, and the results were encouraging. We thank Brother Sweeney for two subscriptions which he sent us.

We have just received a note from Rev. J. A. Bowen, that great evangelist of the North Mississippi Conference, in which he informs us that he expects to attend the approaching session of his Conference, and that he expects to take work next year. It wiii he good news to his many friends to know that Brother Bowen's health is improving daily.

Rev. G. B. Love, of the Marietta charge, North Mississippi Conference, in sending us an additional list of subscriptions to the Advocate, says he is going to continue to push the campaign. He has already sent us more than the quota assigned to his work in the beginning of the year. We sincereiy appreciate his efforts in behalf of the Conference organ.

We iearn from a news dispatch from Shreveport, La., tbat Mrs. George Richardson, the daughter of Rev. R. W. Tucker, our pastor at Crowiey, La., passed away in that city on Saturday, Oct. 5. She is survived by her husband and several brothers and sisters, in additlon to her father. We extend sincere sympathy to the members of the bereaved family.

We iearn from a news dispatch from Hattiesburg, Miss., that Dr. I. W. Cooper, Jr., ranking as a captain, and serving as assistant commander of the base hospital at Camp Sbeiby, has been appointed a major. Dr. Cooper is the son of Dr. I. W. Cooper, the distingulshed president of Whitworth Coiiege. His promotion wiii be heartiiy weicomed by his many friends throughout Mississippi.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, the presiding eider of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, has been assisting the pastor of the Oak Grove charge, Rev. R. H. Bamburg, in a meeting at Forest. That the preaching was good goes without saying. The results were very gratifying, thirty members heing received into the Church. We thank Brother Bamburg for sending us two subscriptions to the Advocate.

Rev. H. A. Gatiin is our pastor at Tyiertown, Miss. He is happy over the opening of his magnificent new church, whlch took place on Sunday, Sept. 22. Dr. I. W. Cooper preached the opening sermon. The reports that come to us indicate that this new house of worship, built of hrick, wouid he a credit to any communlty. We congratuiate pastor and people on the success of their great undertaking.

As one result of the great meeting held at Haynesviiie, La., recently by the pastor, Rev. John G. Sloane, in which he was assisted by Rev. A. R. Bozeman and Rev. E. B. Moil, the Advocate has received from Brother Sloane a list of fifteen subscriptions, with the statement that probably a few more wiii be sent before Conference. We sincereiy trust that the Advocate wiii be helpful in conserving tbe resuits of this revivai in that spiendid community.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, of Bernice, La., in sending us a new subscription, for which we thank him, states that he has just ciosed a good meeting at Summerfield, on his charge, in which the pastor did the preaching. His people have been active in Red Cross and Liberty Loan drives, hut they are not neglecting the interests of the Church. The parsonage has recentiy been painted, and other improvements have been made, and the prospect for iarger Conference coiiections than usuai is good.

From the Benice (La.) Journal of Sept. 13, we learn that Rev. J. M. Alford, of Mangham, La., assisted Rev. P. H. Fontaine, the pastor, in a meeting at Bernice, which closed on Sept. 8. According to the Journal, Brother Alford did some great preaching. The closing servlce was marked by the dedication of the church, the senlor member of the board of stewards, Brother J. H. Ozley, presenting tbe building for that purpose. This dedication service celebrated, also, the twenty-fifth anniversary of Brother Fontaine's entrance into the ministry. We are sure it was a very happy occasion.

The Government has issued a bulletin asking the people of the United States to heip it in furnishing gas masks for our soldiers in Europe. Tbis help can be rendered by saving the following and turning them over to any hranch of the Red Cross: peach stones, apricot pits, prune pits, plum pits, oiive pits, date seeds, cherry pits, butternut sheiis, Brazii nut sheiis, wainut sheiis, hickory-nut shelis. The carbon made from these is the best that has been discovered for use in the respirators of the masks. Here is an opportunity for a great many people to render a very important war service.

THE CENTENARY AND THE ASSESSMENTS.

The question has been raised as to whether the assessments on the pastoral charges shaii be taken as usual for those causes which are being especially advanced by the Centenary Movement.

Yes, by ali means. Let all the assessments he raised just as if no Centenary caiis were being made. These assessments represent the work which is now being done in these fieids while the Centenary work looks to future enlargements. Under the new legislation which provides for a budget system, if any cause be negiected the remaining causes will be taxed for the support of that cause which has a deficit. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that aii the benevoiences be taken as usual and reported at the Annual Conference.

Let it be noted also that when the great drive is on for the thirty-five miiiion doiiars, ail that is raised in each pastoral charge for the Centenary causes on assessments will he piaced to the credit of that charge. In other words, we are now raising for all these causes about two miiiions a year, or ten miiiions for the five years. This amount is in the assessments and the charges raising their assessments wiii be credited on the Centenary account with two-sevenths of the amount aiiotted to them as their Centenary task.

JAMES ATKINS,
Chairman Centenary Commission.

TO THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Piease permit me to caii your attention to the meeting of our "Historicai Society," Tuesday night, November 19, before session of Conference. The subject chosen by Committee on Program is "Deita Methodism." As our Conference meets this year at Ciarksdaie in the very heart of the Deita, we have a great opportunity before us. An earnest effort is being made to have a brief paper read from each one of North Mississippi Deita counties on the beginning, the growth, and present strength of our Methodism in that great and growing country. We expect to have a paper giving information in regard to first Methodist sermon, and church in that section. Other matters of importance wiii be given us.

I expect to be present at Conference, and take work. Weather conditions may prevent my attendance but I wiii take work, whether present or absent. This has been a great year for much study and preparation for better work, for my Lord and the Church. I extend my thanks to you and all my brethren for kindnesses. The bretbren of my Conference are so good to me that my language is inadequate to express to them just how much I do esteem and appreciate them. I love them more than I ever did, and hope to be able to manifest it to them more in the future than in the past. I am yours faithfully, J. A. BOWEN.

HELP THE ADVOCATE!

READ THE FOLLOWING PROPOSITION.

To the Pastors of Mississippi and Louisiana:

Dear Brethren: We will give you or any member of your congregation a $3 Teacher's Bible if you will send us 10 new or renewal subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate by November 10. We will also print your name in gold letters on the cover. This Bible is one of the best made, and retails at $3. It is bound in genuine leather and has a concordance and all the usual helps in a Teacher's Bible; it is printed with large leaded type, and is fit for a queen. In asking persons to subscribe, just tell them that you are trying to get a club of ten subscriptions for the Advocate for the express purpose of getting one of these nice Bibles, and this will help you persuade them to subscribe. If you will not yourself undertake the job, please get some winsome lady or tactful layman to work up the club. The subscription price is $1.50 a year. Ten subscriptions at $1.50 each will earn the Bible, and your name will be printed in gold letters on the cover.

If you fail to get 10 subscriptions, we will give you a $1.75 Bible for seven subscriptions. This Bible is bound in genuine leather also, and is a nice book. We will put your name on the cover in gold.

If you fail to get seven subscriptions, but secure five, we will give you a copy of "Alpheus W. Wilson—A Prince in Israel," by Rev. Carter D. Harris. This book contains the life and labors of the late Bishop Wilson. It is bound in cloth and has 210 pages.

The Advocate has always been supported by the efforts of the preachers in Louisiana and Mississippi. They have during past years kept the subscription list up to about 7500, but this year we have not received the necessary support. We are about to lose nearly 1500 subscriptions, most of them in arrears to the amount of $1.50 each, and consequently we are compelled to devise some way of stimulating interest.

If you will take this matter up for us, and work this plan, or find some one to work it with your assistance and encouragement, we will retrieve our losses. If you do not do your part, the Conference Organ will suffer. This offer will be withdrawn Nov. 10.

Will you do it, Brother?

The subject of this sketch, EDD DUFORD WILLIAMS, was born in the year of 1902, and died a few weeks ago. His death, I suppose, was caused from a blow which he received in diving into a swimming pond. It seems that the shock which he received was so great that he could no longer bear up and thus he passed away. Duford was a good boy; everybody seemed to love him, and he has left a host of friends. It has been my privilege to be his pastor this year, and in connection with same I am glad to say that I had the pleasure of receiving him into our Church; however, he had been a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. I had talked to him on the question of religion, and I believe that he was ready to go. I understand that he gave very bright evidence of his conversion, and also stated to others that he was ready to go. He was kept at home for about two weeks, and everything was done for him that relatives and friends with the best medical skill could do; but it was thought best to move him to Shreveport where, perhaps, better attention could be rendered him. But alas! all skill and good attention failed. He died in Shreveport, and the body was shipped home and buried in the old Mill Creek cemetary by the writer and Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, who happened to be present on that occasion.

Duford leaves a mother, and, I think, two brothers, and several sisters. He will be missed, and the place in his home can never be filled. He was, though young, the head of the home, his father having already passed on to the glory land above. It was my good fortune to be in that home on several occasions, and I noted with interest that his mother seemed to confide in him. She seemed to have great confidence in him, and very great regard for his welfare.

I wish to say to those who are nearest him such as mother, sister, brother, weep not for him, but strive only to be prepared to greet him in yonder world, where there is no dying. I say again, weep not.

DR. EDWIN BETTS PARTIN.

Dr. Edwin Betts Partin was born on November 15, 1854, near "Old Daleville," in Lauderdale County, Miss., and died on July 12, 1918, at his daughter's, Mrs. R. C. Horne, near Stratton.

Dr. Partin received his elementary education under direction of Mrs. Ausburn, the renowned teacher of her day. He pursued a course in Hygiene and Topical Medicine at the University of Louisville, Ky., in early manhood, and continued by taking a post graduate course at Tulane University of Louisiana a few years later. He then located in east Mississippi and practiced, for almost 40 years. During this time, his efforts were accompanied with much success. He was popular as a physician, and esteemed as a man. He was married to Miss Carrie Rives, in Marshall, Texas. Of this union, there were four children reared—one son and three daughters.

He was converted in a revival during a short stay in Texas in 1876. He became a very active, faithful and loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, serving, at some time, in almost every office of the local church. For more than six years, prior to his death, he served his Church in the capacity of a zealous local preacher. He was a persuasive talker and a profound thinker. He stood "four square" upon his convictions, and openly contended for right.

Dr. Partin leaves, in addition to his companion and children, his church and many friends to mourn his departure. The deceased body was transferred to Chunky, Miss. (his home town), and laid to rest in the town cemetery, after services conducted by his pastor and attended by a great concourse of friends. Weep not, as though some calamity had befallen you, as having no hope; this saint is at rest with his Redeemer. He now awaits the arrival of the Great Resurrection. His pastor,

C. Y. HIGGINBOTHAM.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

On Thursday afternoon at 12:15 o'clock, the pure spirit of our friend and co-worker, Mrs. Fannie Moss Williams, returned to God who gave it.

Whereas, in the death of Mrs. Williams, the Mer Rouge Missionary Society of the Methodist Church has lost one of its most loyal and consistent members, one who had served it for many years in an official capacity, one whose every act was determined by the spirit of love and the true missionary ideal, that none live for themselves alone. Therefore, be it resolved:

That in the passing away of our dearly loved member, our Society feels deeply its loss; for her many years of continued service made her a valued adviser and co-worker.

Be it resolved further, That we, the members of the Missionary Society, shall endeavor to be more like her: faithful, loyal, patient, and true to every Christian obligation, thereby filling our lives more fully by emulating that of our friend.

We sympathize with those who are bereft of a mother's love and words of wisdom, but the memory of her wise counsel and beautiful life will ever be an inspiration to them to love the best and meet her in the life beyond.

Be it resolved finally, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the minutes of the Society and that copies be sent the Mer Rouge Democrat and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. E. Wimberly, Mrs. H. L. Herron, Miss Mollie Higginbotham, Committee.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Adv.

EASIER TO BARK THAN WORK.

Fault finding is not difficult. Isaac McCurry illustrates this. A dog, hitched to a lawn mower, stopped pulling to bark at a passerby. The boy who was guiding the mower, said, "Don't mind the dog; he is just barking for an excuse to rest. It is easier to bark than to puli this machine." It is easier to be critical than correct, easier to bark than work. Easier to hinder than help, easier to destroy reputation than construct character. Anybody can grumble, criticise or censure like the Pharisees, but it takes a great soul to go on working and rise superior to it like Jesus did.—Expositor.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid disease, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

HOW TO AVOID BACKACHE AND NERVOUSNESS

Told by Mrs. Lynch From Own Experience.

Providence, R. I.—"I was all run down in health, was nervous, had headaches, my back ached all the time. I was tired and had no ambition for anything. I had taken a number of medicines which did me no good. One day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for women, so I tried it. My nervousness and backache and headaches disappeared. I gained in weight and feel fine, so I can honestly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is suffering as I was."—Mrs. ADELINE B. LYNCH, 100 Plain St., Providence, R. I.

Backache and nervousness are symptoms or nature's warnings, which indicate a functional disturbance or an unhealthy condition which often develops into a more serious ailment.

Women in this condition should not continue to drag along without help, but profit by Mrs. Lynch's experience, and try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and for special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co., Lynn, Mass.

"CASCARETS" WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP.

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—Take Cascarets To-night.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.—Adv.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

WELL-EXPANDED LUNGS NOT ENOUGH.

Pure blood is indispensable to the health and strength of the lungs. The delicate structure of these organs makes it necessary. When the blood is impure the lungs lose their tone, and even if they are permitted to expand freely, they have not the power fully to perform their important work. The fact is, there is nothing more necessary in our physical economy than pure blood—the kind of blood that Hood's Sarsaparilla makes. This medicine is the good old reliable family remedy for diseases of the blood, scrofula, rheumatism, catarrh, and low or run-down conditions of the system. At this time, when coughs and colds are so prevalent, Hood's Sarsaparilla is an invaluable tonic. Get it to-day, and begin to take it at once. Accept no substitute.—Adv.

Health

THE MAN WHO SUSPECTS that he has kidney trouble and neglects to take measures promptly for his relief is taking a dangerously unwise risk. If the kidneys are not properly performing their function of purifying the blood stream, waste products and poisonous acids remain in the system and cause nervousness, rheumatic pains, backache, languidness, sore muscles, swollen joints, stiffness, puffiness under eyes and other weakening symptoms.

Foley Kidney Pills

restore and regulate the healthy and normal action of kidneys and bladder, bringing clean blood, sound nerves, clear head, good digestion, active brain, and all 'round vigorous health.

M. W. Taylor, Calvert, Ala., writes: "My ailment is kidney trouble. I tried three different remedies, but none gave me such relief as Foley Kidney Pills." 50c and $1.00 sizes.

A Fight for Life

It has been fight or die for many of us in the past and the lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pieree's, called "An-u-ric." You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as Bright's disease, diabetes or stono in the bladder.

To overeomo these distressing conditions tako plenty of exereise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal, take Doctor Piereo's Anurie Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are ono of the firm indorsers of Anurie, as are thousands of neighbors.

SYLACAUGA, ALA.—"I suffered greatly with my back and kidneys. I called in doctors and they did me no good, but recommended an operation. I saw Anuric for kidneys and backache advertised so sent up to the drug store and got a package, and it cured me. This was one year ago. I was down in bed and had takon many different kinds of medicines but obtained no relief from them."—A. W. CUMBIE.

CAESAR, MISS.—"This is to certify I have been taking Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets for uric aeid and kidney trouble, and would say to anyone who is afflicted with sueh, please, for your health's sake, try Anuric without delay. I had used soveral different remedies but to no avail, now I am reeommending Anuric Tablets far and wide.

"I have known of Dr. Pieree's Remedies for 20 years, thoy are well worth using."—B. J. WILLIAMS.

Step into the drug store and ask for Anuric, or send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial pkg. Anuric—many times moro potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

NO COVENANTED PEACE WITH GERMANY.

America, unless we repudiate civiii-zation and abandon humanity and put a premium on savagery and brutality, can make no covenanted peace, no peace by agreement or negotiation with Germany. It would be a cove-nant with hell, a partnership with infamy.

Nor would such a peace secure peace, except so long as it suited Germany. We can judge the future only by the past, and to Germany sacred treaties are scraps of paper oniy. Germany's whoie history is a record of national treachery, national bad faith, nationai dishonor, national murder, and nationai infamy.

Articie 56 of The Hague Convention, to which Germany , soiemnly subscribed, is: "Family honor and rights, the iives of persons and private property, as weil as reiigious convictions and practice, must be respected. Private property can not be confiscated."

The world knows how Germany has observed this article. There are miiions of individual witnesses to her flagrant breaches of it. Every acre of foreign soil Germany has occupied bears mute but unimpeachable evidence of it. There is plenty of German evidence of it, too.

"The goods of different sorts seized in the enemies' territories are in such large quantities that the difficulty of knowing where to put them increases day by day. At the request of the Prussian minister of war, all chambers of commerce have been asked to give ail possible information with regard to storehouses, sheds, etc., which couid be used temporariiy to warehouse the spoil." (From the Frankfurter Zeitung, January, 1918.)

The German papers have been crowded with advertisements of saie of property taken from France and Belgium. Members of the Reichstag have boasted of, others have censured, the amount of booty brought to Germany from the occupied territory, and the destruction has been far greater than the confiscation.

Of the old men and children murdered, of the women and girls ravished, of the noncombatants taken from their homes and deported to work for their conquerors, of the merchant ships sunk and passengers and crews murdered, of the hospital ships sunk, the hospitals and unfortified cities bombed, of the mutiiation and murder by crucifixion and otherwise of wounded and captured soldiers—of ail this beastliness there is plenty of evidence, evidence that no one can disbelieve.

The best answer to German peace propaganda is sinking more U-boats, sending more men to France, speeding up our work along every line, and a heavy subscription to the Fourth Liberty Loan. Peace must mean the triumph of right and justice, the defeat of Germanism, not a truce with it, not a compromise with it.

Our soldiers in France are gloriously doing their part toward victory; the Liberty Loan subscription must show them that the people at home are doing theirs.—Government Bulletin.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF.

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a small bottle of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and iustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediateiy dissoives every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scaip; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair faiis out fast. Surely get a small bottie of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.—Adv.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. MONEY, CURSE OR BLESSING?

R. B. Eleazer, in Missionary Voice.

Money, of all material things, may be either the world's greatest curse or its greatest blessing. This is so for the reason that money is stored-up power that can be loosed in any direction its possessor chooses; able to accomplish anything, whether good or ill, within the range of possibility. It has power to feed men or to starve them, to shelter them or turn them outdoors, to liberate or enslave, to heal or destroy.

And just as money is either a curse or a blessing to the world, so too it is almost certain to be to its possessor. It is the summation of all the world's allurements and the essence of every temptation, or the ally of every good thought and purpose. From him who possesses it in sufficient measure there is no indulgence that life withholds. It is the willing slave of selfishness, ready to run to the ends of the earth to gratify the slightest whim. When Jesus looked about for the "god of this world," which would forever be set over against the God of the universe, he mentioned not appetite, nor pleasure, nor selfishness, nor even Satan, but that which in concrete, convenient, and alluring form comprehends them all—money. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." And the world bears witness to the truth of this classification in that it speaks habitually of only two things as "almighty"—"Almighty God" and the "almighty dollar."

Quite naturally, then, to him who looks upon money as a personal and selfish possession it becomes a deadly danger and its love "a root of all kinds of evil." To such a man it is the occasion of one or more of the sins "that drown men in destruction and perdition." Like the prodigal son, he wastes it in vicious living; like Dives, he expends it in selfish indulgence; or like the rich fool, he hoards it up. At very best he lets it come between him and his Lord and, like the rich young ruler, turns away sorrowful from the Christ whom he fain would follow. So deadly is this peril that the Bible is full of the most earnest warnings against it.

On the other hand, money may and should be one of earth's greatest blessings, both to its possessor and to the world. It is no less powerful for good than for ill. It can be converted into myriad forms of activity for the world's uplift. It can be sent to the ends of the earth on errands of mercy. It can be transmuted into the coinage of heaven by investment in human life and character—God's eternal values. Through its wonderful agency its possessor can enlarge to an unlimited degree his capacity for service and extend his field of activity to earth's remotest bounds. Thus he may have the unspeakable joy of co-partnership with God in the uplift of his fellow-men, and by an unselfish use of his possessions he can transform them into eternal treasures that shall be his forevermore.

EFFICIENCY MEETINGS.

There have been held, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, of the last weeks of March, June and September, in different parts of the Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference, some very unique and inspirational meetings. In the opening of the year's work, at the Preachers' Meeting, called by the presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Holder, at Sardis, in January, a committee was appointed to outline a program and so group the charges of the district that each of the pastors and officials of five or six charges could come together at some point in the bounds of one of the country charges to hold "An Efficiency Meeting."

The fifth Sunday was chosen so the pastors could be free from regular appointments. Starting with Friday night preaching, Saturday was given to discussion of such topics as: "The Church;" "The Community Church;" "Young People's Work," etc. At 11 o'clock, preaching, and, after dinner on the ground, the afternoon was given to "Stewardship and Finance;" "God's Plan of a Christian Giving;" "The Tithe Law;" and "Church Literature" (Church papers, tracts, etc.). Preaching Saturday night; and Sunday morning, Sunday school methods and, "A Real Live Sunday School in Action," followed by the regular 11 o'clock preaching service.

In the afternoon of Sunday, the closing hours were given to the vital issue of "Missions" (Principles of; Our Fields and Responsibilities); "How make the Church a Missionary Church?"; "The Centenary Movement;" "Assessments in Full;" "Specials for Missions," etc., the last item being a love feast.

The brethren reported splendid results from other parts of the district. The three meetings the writer was privileged to attend at Tyro, Pleasant Grove, and Free Springs, were sources of great profit. Our presiding elder is not only giving definite and special attention to the country charges and churches, but is using the station preachers in getting them out into touch with the needs of rural life and the opportunities in this important field.

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with worms have an unhealthy color, which indicates poor blood, and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS chill TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion, and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c per bottle.

PREACHER VERSUS KAISER

No class of men has done more than the preachers to create a national consciousness strong enough to make possible the entry of the United States into the universal war with ideals so high that our country has become the marvel of the world. Through the years these Christian advocates have faithfully toiled until a spirit and purpose of "I am my brother's keeper" has possessed the nation. While all preachers are entitled to this credit, it belongs chiefly to those who are now deceased and to those who are superannuated by reason of age and physical impairment.

The past failure of the Church to provide an adequate support for its preachers, who are retired from active work because of age and physical infirmity, has created conditions of want and deprivation among them that should shame clear-thinking and warm-hearted people into action that will free the Church from the stigma of neglect, and relieve the distress it has unwittingly caused.

Millions of Liberty Bonds have been and will be purchased to win the war. What better investment can beneficent owners make of these bonds, than to donate part of their holdings to an endowment fund for the support of superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers?

The Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., urgently requests every member and friend of said Church to donate at least one Liberty Bond for the purpose stated. If you want a part in this splendid work, write

FROM THE WINONA DISTRICT.

Dear Advocate: I am well and doing fine. The old Winona District was never in better fettle. She is still coming to the front in salaries and all other interests of the Lord's kingdom. The preachers are a loyal, faithful, high class set who are busy and their labors are telling. Then we have some of the best, truest and most liberal laymen in the North Mississippi Conference. All the interests of the Church are being observed and cared for by the consecrated pastors and broad-minded laymen, from the War Work needs to all the rest.

Brother Savage has had a great year in church building. In fact he has broken all records and built two handsome houses of worship, one at Strathmore, at a cost of about $2200, and one at Brazil at a cost of about $1200, and both these churches built and paid for all in one year and it was not a good year for building either. But Savage does not wait for time or tide, hot or cold, but goes on just the same. The district, I feel sure, is coming in full with all obligations. We have had some great revivals and many precious souls brought into the kingdom.

Good luck to the Editor and prosperity to the dear old Advocate.

L. M. LIPSCOMB.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, bilious atacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowels pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

A GREAT MEETING AT HAYNESVILLE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: I am not given to "blowing my horn" very much, but since we have had such a wonderful refreshing from the Lord, I am constrained to let the Advocate readers and especially the former pastors hear of the glorious revival in Haynesville, which we closed out in a blaze of glory last Sunday, after continuing two weeks, embracing three Sundays. I had the assistance of two young princes, Revs. R. A. Bozeman and E. B. Moll, both of whom are as safe and sane and religious as it is possible for men to be, judging by their prayer life and consecrated energy and zeal for the Lord's work, and their success as soul-winners. The beautiful harmony and hearty cooperation among all the denominations of the town were remarkable. And here I must not fail to express our sincere appreciation of the faithful service rendered in the meeting by Rev. Mr. Boyd, pastor of the Baptist church, in prayer, altar work, sympathy, and singing the sweetest solos ever written.

The revival was principally among the members of the church, who, for the first time in life, many of them, experienced genuine, heartfelt religion, and some of them entered the Canaan of perfect love. It reminded the writer of the revival of holiness in which he was converted and sanctified wholly more than twenty years ago. We received eight choice souls into the Church.

The two earnest, faithful men of God who helped this pastor are worthy of the great honor He conferred upon them in this meeting, and we cheerfully commend and recommend them to pastors desiring help in meetings.

As a result of the meeting, we have temporarily organized an Epworth League with about two dozen of the finest young people in the State.

At the closing service Brother Moll made an appeal in behalf of the Advocate and secured a fine list of subscribers which I am sending you in this communication.

We have also had good revivals and fine results at Colquitt and Dykesville, and will not be ashamed to go to Conference and tell what the Lord hath done for us.

A LETTER FROM CHAPLAIN RANDOLPH.

Dear Brother: Kindly change the address of my Advocate from Chaplain Second Engineers, to Commandant Army Chaplains' School, A. P. O. 762, France, Am. E. F.

After five months at the front, the powers that be came to the conclusion that I could best serve the cause by telling the new chaplains how the thing ought to be done. So that is now my job. It is very pleasant work, for we have a fine lot of men coming over to take up the work of the chaplainey in the Am. E. F. They are coming at an opportune time, for never have the chaplains been in such favor as they are to-day. They are being given such support as I have never before experienced. The Commander-in-Chief, who has ever been the friend of the chaplains, set the example and all along the line the others are cheerfully following in his footsteps. It brings joy to the heart of the "old-timers" to see coming to pass before their eyes the very things for which they have prayed and worked these years. If it were permissible, I should like to mention some of the parties who have helped to bring this about. However, there is still much to be done and the earnest co-operation of the churches at home will be needed to put into operation the changes that are needed to perfect the organization of the corps.

Fraternally yours,

DO YOU KNOW that indigestion can be cured, permanently cured, so that you can eat any kind of food that you crave? Strong, Forceful Men With Plenty of Iron In Their Blood—

These Are the Ones With the Power and Energy To Win

"Many a capable man or woman falls just short of winning because they don't back up their mentality with the physical strength and energy which come from having plenty of Iron in the blood," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Out-door Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. "Lack of Iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time." Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee Charles A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only twelve years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others.

MANUFACTURERS' NOTE: Nuxated Iron, which is recommended above is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

"But I am saving for the Missionary Centenary," you say.

"Good!"

The power of arms may save the world from German dominion but only the Gospel of Christ can save it from the dominion of Selfishness and Sin.

And until Selfishness is overthrown by Christian Brotherhood, the world cannot be truly safe for Democracy, nor Democracy safe for the world, nor the hope of peace more than a vain delusion.

The war against German autocracy is but a skirmish in the far greater campaign for world conquest to the Righteousness and Peace and Brotherhood of Christ.

Victory in the skirmish will avail us nothing if we fail in the greater campaign. You do well, therefore, to remember the Centenary.

THE PROSPECT OF PEACE.

Events in the world war are moving rapidly. The German Government has inaugurated a definite movement looking toward peace. The first step was a communication addressed to the President of the United States professing acceptance of the President's peace program and requesting him to propose an armistice to the Allies in order that negotiations for a settlement of the war might be entered into. The President's reply was prompt but non-committal. He asked the German Chancellor to make clear three points: Does the German Government actually accept the terms laid down by the President in his address to Congress on January 8, and in subsequent addresses? Are the Central Powers ready to withdraw their forces immediately from all invaded territory? Is the Chancellor speaking merely for the constituted authorities of the Empire?

The German reply to the President's note was prompt and, on the face of it, thoroughly satisfactory. In view, however, of the well-known disposition of the Germans to employ trickery in their diplomatic negotiations, and in view, also, of the fact that the German Government has deliberately, in its conduct of the war, ignored and repudiated the most sacred obligations entered into by treaty, there is a strong feeling that the German reply is not as straightforward as it seems. As this is written, Monday morning, October 14, no reply has been made to this second note from the German Government. We may rest assured that President Wilson will frame his reply with a full realization of the immense responsibility that rests upon him in this momentous hour. In the meantime, the American people are asked to withhold judgment as to the issue.

So far as we are able to judge from newspaper expressions throughout the country, the consensus of opinion is that unconditional surrender on the part of the German military forces should be insisted upon, with the distinct understanding that Germany shall make full reparation for the wrongs she has committed against various nations in the past and during the present war. We agree fully with this view, and we are confident that no terms will be proposed or submitted to that do not satisfy the world's sense of outraged justice. We are willing to await the President's statement of the matter.

It goes without saying, however, that there should not be the slightest relaxation of effort in maintaining a state of complete military preparedness. There should not be the slightest disposition to lag in completing the Fourth Liberty Loan. Essential industries should be carried on with the highest possible degree of efficiency. Though peace may come sooner than we expected, we should be prepared to win an unmistakable military victory on the battlefield. Our armies are magnificently going forward—they will drive the Huns to Berlin if we stand by them. And we will stand by them. When the fight is over, Germany herself, as well as all the world, will know that she has been whipped.

After the above was put in type, the President's answer to the second German note was given to the public. So far as our judgment goes, it meets every requirement of the situation. The German Government is notified that the process of evacuation and the conditions of an armistice are matters that must be left to the judgment and advice of the military advisers of the United States and the Allies. It is also specified that no arrangement can be accepted by the Allies that does not provide absolute and satisfactory safeguards and guarantees of the maintenance of the present military supremacy of the armies of the United States and the Allies in the field.

The President also notifies the German Government that the United States and the Allies will not consider an armistice so long as the armed forces of Germany continue the illegal and inhumane practices which they still persist in. The recent outrages of the submarines, and the wanton destruction practiced by the German armies in their enforced withdrawal from Flanders and France, are cited as instances of the direct violation of the rules and principles of civilized warfare.

The President goes still further in announcing that the United States will not enter upon negotiations for peace until the form of the German Government is so changed that it will be impossible for any arbitrary power, separately, secretly and of its single choice, to disturb the peace of the world.

As we view it, the President's answer means nothing less than unconditional surrender on the part of the German Government. If the German authorities refuse to act in accordance with the terms laid down in the answer, military operations will be continued as vigorously and as effectively as before. The Germans will be forced to accept in complete military defeat what they decline as offered now. In any event, the outcome is certain. The issue is very clear: the Germans must unconditionally acknowledge defeat now, or do so a little later. Their answer is awaited with full confidence in the outcome. Whatever their answer may be, victory is certain, and the end is in sight.

"DON'T GET SCARED."

Spanish influenza is epidemic thorughout the country. Many deaths have been reported among soldiers and civilians alike. By order of the boards of health, schools, churches and places of amusement have been closed, and public gatherings of all kinds have been prohibited, in many places. Stringent regulations have been adopted to prevent the spread of the disease, and the health authorities are doing all in their power to bring it under control.

It is right that we should realize the seriousness of this menace to our national health; but there is no occasion to become panic-struck. The disease yields to treatment when proper precautions are taken. An excited state of mind and failure to take precautionary measures will increase greatly the danger. The American Red Cross has issued the following suggestions to those who are stricken:

"Go to bed until the fever stage is passed. Consult a doctor immediately. See only the nurse and the doctor. Eat lightly. Take laxatives as needed. By resting, give nature a chance.

"Those who suspect they have the disease should stay away from others. To avoid fatigue, and to keep in the best possible physical condition may be helpful in warding off an attack.

"This disease is very much like old-fashioned grip. Don't get scared!"

CHURCH FINANCES AND THE EPIDEMIC.

As a result of the epidemic of Spanish influenza, practically all our churches have been closed until the disease is under control. This is in keeping with the orders of the boards of health, and it is a wise precautionary measure.

Unfortunately, however, this action comes just at the close of the Conference year in our patronizing territory, and unless vigorous efforts are made to overcome the handicap, a serious loss is likely to be experienced in church finances. The regular collections can not be taken as usual for the pastor's salary and current expenses, and the pastor will find difficulty in presenting the claims of the benevolent causes.

We should like to urge, in this emergency, that the members of our churches, without waiting to be called on, send their contributions to the treasurers of the boards of stewards as promptly as possible. It is a point of honor with the Church to meet all its financial obligations in full when they fall due. Expenses will go on practically as usual, in spite of the closing order, and in many cases, on account of sickness and the necessity of unusual expenditures, pastors will need their salaries more urgently than in normal times. It will be a very great hardship for them to have to suffer loss at this time. We even venture to suggest that some of our large-hearted and liberal laymen who have been blessed with this world's goods increase their contributions largely, if need be, in order to offset any shortage in collections that might otherwise occur. This is an important matter, and we trust our people will give it their serious attention.

THE HOLINESS OF BEAUTY.

"The holiness of beauty" is a phase Lanier used to express a conception that is wonderfully suggestive. It raises beauty from the plane of the purely esthetic to that of spiritual ministry. It involves a keenness of perception that sees a great deal more than the mere form. It purifies the mind of that which is only sensuous by emphasizing the noble and uplifting. Beauty in its essence appeals not to the eye, but to the soul. The pagan in art worships nothing more than an enemic estheticism. The true artist responds with all the powers of his being to a spirtual appeal contained in the beautiful. Thus it is that the spiritually-minded look beyond nature to nature's God.

In care for others everywhere,
When Sorrow comes.

When Sorrow comes, we must forget
The pleasant habits that we had,
Lay them away in lavender
And live in trying to be glad,
When Sorrow comes.

When Sorrow comes, we will believe,
That love will surely make all right,
That we shall have our own again,
At evening-time it shall be light,
When Sorrow comes.

When Sorrow comes, if we uplift
A grateful heart for what was lent,
God, and the loved and lost, and you
Enter a heavenly sacrament,
When Sorrow comes.

THE PAULINE TYPE OF CONVERSION.

In the vocabulary of Christian theology the term "conversion" should always be preserved, and when that theology is Biblical it will never disappear. The word occurs in the New Testament in several senses, but always implies a change, from bad to good, or from better to best. Its etymology is simple. Both the Latin verb "converto" and its consignificant Greek prototype "epistrepho" denote a turning, or a turning round. Conversion is, then, practically a right-about-face. It imports a new direction of thought, facing of desire, and trend of life. Emphatically, in the New Testament, it is equivalent to an initiation of a fresh order of being, and line of conduct. Various theological refinements have in the course of time attached themselves to this term, but substantially it denotes a change from sin to holiness—a breaking away from an evil state or course, and a pressing into a state sympathetic with God. The Greek word appears both in the transitive and the intransitive form, and so conversion has the two aspects of being turned and of turning oneself around toward God. In this act both the divine and the human activities are necessary.

In discussing conversion we can hardly do better than to take as its type the experience of Saul of Tarsus when, on the Damascus road, the old legalism lost its hold and Jesus Christ gripped Paul to Himself. It is true that in some respects what happened to Paul was unique, and not imitable in the experience of the ordinary convert. Paul based his claims to be considered an "apostle" on the fact that he had seen Jesus—doubtless a reference to the vision on the way to Damascus. It may be that some have, in ecstasy or trance, since the time of Paul, been given a like literal view of the ascended Jesus, and as to that possibility we may not negatively dogmatize; but certainly the conversion of most men is not accompanied by rended heavens and blazing theophanies. It is not necessary to enter the third heaven in order to get into the first. Moreover, there were convulsive as well as illuminative features connected with the conversion of the man of Tarsus, having relation to his temperament, history, or future mission, which are no part of the experience of the turning to God of the ordinary man—for Saul of Tarsus was both better and worse than the run of religionists. It was a life-long grief to him that he had persecuted Jesus. There was, however, the countervailing consideration that he thought he was doing God service. So Paul was on the wrong road to the right goal—he was thinking of God, which is much, even if he were not thinking of Him in the way that is best. The man who is converted always has some thoughts as to his Maker, or he would never care to turn towards Him.

In the following respects, however, the conversion of Paul is typical of all true "turnings." In the first place, it was a radical departure from things old to things new. The Paul who rose from the dust was not just the Saul who had fallen there on the highway. From that time on the man of Tarsus was renewed in the spirit of his mind, and redirected in the course of his life. Where before he had persecuted Jesus, now he adored Him; although previously he had sought to wreck the Christian Church, after that he "died daily" that he might build it up. So marked was this difference in the case of Paul that it is difficult to find the psychological hyphen connecting the two selves—the previous anti-Christian self, and the later self, all Christ's. But all genuine conversion involves just this ethical dualism—the warring of a new self against an old, the sloughing off of selfishness while Christ is being "put on." Conversion is change. Matthew Arnold was no theologian, but he knew enough to say, "After all, the object of religion is conversion, and to change people's behavior."

In the second place, Paul's conversion was a definite transaction between him and his Lord. Paul claims that he "saw Jesus," which amounts to affirming that he had a personal interview with Him, and pragmatic dealings with His will. So in the experience of every soul that is really godly there is a distant time when its attitude toward God and reality, which before was wrong, becomes right. So Jacob at Penuel made a bargain with God—that was the blunt Old Testament way; so Paul on the Damascus road made a surrender—that is the New Testament ideal; so Augustine in the garden at Milan recognized his Master and closed with His offers of grace; so John Bunyan, after musing on the wickedness of his heart, and considering "the enmity that was in him to God," bethought him of the Scripture, "He hath made peace through the blood of his cross," and on the spot attained "solid joy and peace," when he was ready to swoon with ecstasy, and "everything became clear." Conversion is a surrender that is a winning; it is a giving up which is accompanied by a taking on, so that the soul is "not unclothed, but clothed upon."

In the third place, Paul clearly recognized that he had been converted. Once and only once he claims to have seen the Lord in visible form, and to have heard His voice—the other apostles seeing the risen Savior abiding still on earth, while he saw the ascended Savior regnant in heaven—but of that sufficient "once" Paul never lost the glorious consciousness. Jesus immediately took charge of Paul's interests. "The stern will of Saul gave way before the imperial will of Jesus." After that, there was no going back; Paul "forever kept to the new turn in his life." Having obtained a transporting view of the glory of God in the face of His Son, the man of Tarsus never thereafter lost the "full assurance" of his acceptance with God. Even John the Baptist doubted once; Paul never. A like faith in the fact of conversion is a mark of normal Christian experience. The theophany is not necessary, but the definite surrender to Christ is indispensable. Conversion is a transaction, and no normal confusion or delusion ought to be allowed to obscure it in the consciousness of the individual believer. The faith to which we have referred is not cheap confidence in the initiatory power of one's own will-act, but reliance on the work of Christ in the soul of man. Memory of the very hour or day of one's conversion may not be essential—and to insist too strenuously upon that might be like asking a man who is alive to prove that he has been born—but the assurance of the fact that a man has been converted is, if not absolutely a prerequisite of entering heaven, at least a great help and comfort on the way thither.

Fourthly, the conversion of Paul, which was a point in his career, had fruit in all his after life. Conversion is punctual, sanctification is processive. No one needs to be "converted" more than once, but he continually must ratify his conversion, so to speak, and continue all his life to afford the proof that he has been turned from the sphere and spirit of sin to the love and service of God. The "turn" into the right road is taken once for all, but progress indefinitely is subsequently to be made along that King's highway of holiness. As preachers of this old, ever new Gospel, or witnesses to its truth, we must insist upon the need of conversion as the initial phase of the Christian life, and exhibit the force which comes from faith in the fact that a particular man has been converted. Unless an individual knows that he is Christ's, his whole life will be hesitant, shadowed, and equivocal. For his own good and that of others he needs to enjoy the consciousness of conversion.

The conversion of Saul of Tarsus has always been, and continues to be, a focal point around which rages the fight against Christianity. That incident on the Damascus road means too much to suit the critics and the carpers. Since they cannot explain it, many seek to explain it away. But we do not need to exhaust the mystery in order to get the meaning. It has indeed been claimed with truth by A. T. Robertson that the "new knowledge in psychology decreases the difficulties in the way of our apprehension of the phenomena connected with Saul's conversion," and it is "increasingly hard on scientific grounds to deny the possibility of the manifestation of God to man." But the supernatural element in Paul's experience of conversion abides, and the conversion of any man will be found to be a spiritual, and not just a "psychologic," phenomenon. It is a matter of being turned as well as of turning, so that the old contradiction, inexplicable in theory, but actualized in fact in the life history of every saint, remains: "Work out your own salvation, for it is God who worketh in you." The sphere of grace as well as that of nature has its mysteries. We are glad that it is so, because that shows that life is inconceivably rich, and the eternal future vastly promiseful. So to men of this mystified modern age the Master seems to be saying: Do you who are converted strengthen your brethren in their faith in this fact!

THOSE "BAPTIST PRETENSIONS."

By Victor I. Masters, Educational Secretary, Southern Baptist Home Mission Board.

My attention has been called to an article in the New Orleans Christian Advocate by Rev. Henry T. Young. In this article Brother Young takes the Baptists to task for boastful claims about their numbers.

I have been asked to give the figures which justify the claims to which Brother Young refers that were made by the Baptists at the Southern Baptist Convention at Hot Springs, Arkansas, last May, and I am very glad to do so.

Please allow me first a personal word. I was reared among the Methodists, converted in a Methodist meeting, and taught by several Methodist teachers whom I shall always reverence. Baptists quite generally recognize in Methodists their powerful and successful allies in the great work of carrying the gospel of salvation through Christ to the masses of people in this country.

We differ at certain well understood points, and each denomination respects the other in the points where it differs. Neither of the bodies has been perfect in all of its ways before the Lord. There has been wholesome emulation and rivalry, and since we were not perfect, this has sometimes, perhaps, degenerated into an unwholesome rivalry.

Church Unionists have railed and stuck out their tongues at this, but without good reason. Our differences have grown out of the free play of religious liberty, and are fundamentally matters of conscience. One respects a man of God who differs from him on a matter of conscience, but he does not respect men who, to compose their differences, are willing to let conscience go hang.

The spirit of Christian unity, which the Church

Unionist falsely confuses with ecclesiastical union, will inevitably make me respect what my brother in Christ holds sacred, as a matter of conscience, whether it be a matter of conscience to me or not. If the Church Unionist could learn this, he would be out of a job. You can't beat it into his head with a siedge hammer.

Now, as to those statistics. Dr. H. K. Carroll has for years been the statistician of the Federal Council of the Churches. In my position as Educational Secretary of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board, I have frequent occasion to deal with religious statistics. In the course of my work, I discovered certain errors in Dr. Carroll's statistics, as they related to Baptists in the South, and I had considerable correspondence with Dr, Carroll on the subject.

For instance, Dr. Carroll took the figures from the Southern Baptist Convention minutes, and they left out of count 225,000 unaffiliated white Baptists, who were accounted for in the Government Religious Census of 1906.

Again, Negro Baptists in the South by the religious census of 1906 numbered approximately 2,150,000, but as late as 1917 Dr. Carroll was still giving the number of Negro Baptists as almost exactly the same as the Government census had given in 1906. In the meantime, the Negro Baptists had grown in numbers and were claiming 2,700,000. This claim has been more than justified by the preliminary statistics of the Religious Census of 1916, which has been available from Washington since last spring. This gives the Negro Baptists 3,018,000. The above is enough to show how Dr. Carroll fell into error in his statistics concerning Baptists.

It is only necessary for me here to quote the figures from the preliminary statistics of the Government, referred to above, which show the number of members in each of the larger evangelical bodies. I hope Brother Young will order this sheet for himself. These figures are the result, for the most part, of painstaking effort by the Census Department, county by county, throughout the country. They are not without their deficiencies, as can easily be shown by reference to the comparative way in which they count Catholics and Protestants, which is entirely unfair, against Protestants and in favor of Romanists. But they are authentic, and the most carefully gotten up statistics on the religious bodies. They are the only standard figures for comparing all the religious bodies. They show the following concerning the numbers of the six leading evangelical bodies:

Baptists in America	7,236,650
Methodists	7,165,986
Presbyterians	2,257,439
Lutherans	2,463,265
Disciples	1,231,404
Episcopalians	1,098,173

Besides these, which total more than 21,000,000, there are other small evangelical bodies, bringing the total up to about 26,000,000. If Catholics were counted by the same standards which evangelicals use, they would have perhaps 6,000,000. They have grown between the census of 1906 and 1916 only about half as rapidly as the evangelicals. They actually number in America about fifteen per cent of the population, while the evangelicals are about seventy-five per cent. Still, they have been given one-third of the chaplains in the army. Our Government has accepted their boastful claims of membership, which embrace practically their entire population. It is manifestly unjust.

We Baptists are taking some pride in being even just a little ahead of Methodists in numbers, for it puts us ahead of the great group of God's people than whom none are more deservedly famed for their evangelistic zeal and devotion. We are not at all sure we can keep ahead, and, though we are not perfect in our goodness, we shall rejoice, as we have always rejoiced, in the manifest tokens of the rich blesings of God upon the Methodists of the South and the country in winning the people to our Lord Jesus.

There is no hypocrisy or cant in our gratitude. We sincerely rejoice that God has in the Methodists of America, and particularly in the South where Southern Baptists stand shoulder to shoulder with them, a group of people of such masterly power and skill in bringing Jesus into the hearts and lives of the people.

Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and the rest—we are co-workers all. We have learned from one another, and shall learn. We will, please God, none of us be less what he is, except as he may become so under the leadership of the Word and Spirit of God. But still we shall be one, as we are one in essential reality, each with his heart beating attuned to the other, just to the extent that each has had his heart attuned to that of the Christ. That is the unity of the New Testament.

This is the sort of unity we want. God give us more of it—not less of adherence to what we conscientiously believe, though we may differ at points in our belief. For, as Bishop Warren A. Candler, that great statesman of Southern Methodists, has so ably pointed out, it is exactly in the free play of denominational Christianity, which is the normal expression of religious liberty, that this country has come to be more of a Christian nation than any other nation in the world, the other nations themselves being witnesses.

I think Brother Young will have to accept the Government religious figures, as we all do. In fact, it is very evident that Dr. Carroll will do that himself. Meantime, may the Lord fill us all—Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest—with a holy passion to win the lost of this country, and let us see, after the next census period, who may still be ahead.

TO THE ADVOCATE.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D

In the generations back, there was a popular folk-song running thus, "Nellie Bly, Nelly Bly, bring the broom along; sweep the kitchen clean, and we'll have a little song." Now, about this time a little girl came into a home upon whom was fastened the "Nelly Bly." When the time for baptizing came and the pastor said, "Name this child," to the horror and amazement of all in the house, the father answered "Nelly Bly." "No, no" cried the astonished mother. "Not that, not that." Now what connection has that with this scribble? Just this much: I don't know what to call the baby! For since my last, I've seen so many things, been to so many historic places, and had so many ruminations, as Bill Arp used to say, that I'm chock-full. Not that I've had a vacation, taking in the Chautauquas, summer schools, big camp meetings or any like things, but just been out among the folks.

My, my, Brother Henry, how hot it's been in our sky-parlor apartments! So, when a friend came for us in his "Oakland" for a visit to Brunswick (not in Germany, Maine or Georgia, but on the great Mississippi), we fell over ourselves locking doors, packing grips and accepting that invitation. This is Brunswick where one H. M. Du Bose (now Bishop) began his ministry and is recollected because of certain experiences with trotting horses and muddy roads; how much those had to do with his later elevation we may never know, nor may he, but it will doubtless help him to appoint some other youngster, "lest he forget." The Davis home was pointed out to me as his resting place, and though they were Presbyterians they made him doubly welcome and turned over the keys of a splendid library to the young itinerant. Did he use those keys? To those who know the man that question answers itself, and the children, now grown and still living on the old estate, say "yes," with the rising inflection.

And how much of this library he carries about with him and to what extent it has wrought in his Bishopric, who can tell? Bishop, you are still recalled with pleasure by those friends, and they take some credit to themselves, though still Presbyterians, as having started you toward your high office.

After a Sunday at home, the next week, McVey did me the honor of being with him a four-days' at Fitlers, just above Brunswick. He allowed me to preach twice a day to good congregations, which increased with every service, though the hours were 11 a. m. and 6 p. m., Wilson time. Here we were impressed with the possible use of the automobile for church going—ten to fifteen miles being but a rabbit jump, and that, too, after stopping to take in some less fortunate family. Brunswick, Chotard, and Fitlers: as I looked upon those large plantations, peopled now by colored tenants, but with a growing settlement of whites, I coveted it for our Methodism, and even now there are possibilities which could be developed if some laymen would only come to the help of the diligent pastor (with war work in addition to his church duties that pastor has his head, hands and heart full).

One day after the evening service McVey invited me to go home with him, which was just into my hand; but what about that 20 miles? it used to take half a day; well that Ford got us there within the hour. Beniomond! Now, I must sit up and take notice, for it was here that I entered my bailiwick, which was about the same time that Du Bose rode, read and preached at Brunswick. Now and then I could recall some farmhouse, some stately tree or Indian mound, but that was about all—time, relentless time, has wrought its work.

We ran into the city of Mayersville just as the darkness was settling down. Change, change, change on every hand! But for two faces, I would have been an utter stranger. Then, too, the great Mississippi, which ran hard by the town in those other days, has left it in the inland and has thrown up an island, now heavily wooded with willows and cottonwood. The itinerant's wife soon had an appetizing supper before us, but somehow all desire for food had left me, and I was swallowing at I knew not what. This was the first house over which a certain young couple had presided; these were the rooms fitted up by an appreciative people for the boy preacher and his young wife; these were the two rooms, with chimney between, which served, one as family room, library and parlor, the other as kitchen, dining room and larder, and into one corner of which we had fixed a bed for the elder in his thrice-welcome visits; but how changed by additions, L's, etc. Memory was working overtime, recalling scenes now all changed, and faces long since removed; the young housewife of that day long since left us for that mansion prepared by the Master; and the baby boy, our first-born with whom we played upon the lawn, is elsewhere, battling with the great question of caring for a home.

In the early morning, before we took our journey to the church, twenty miles away, we took a stroll through the town to find only two familiar faces. Charley Jeffords, and the preacher's friend, Emile Myer; for forty and more years Emile has seen that no preacher has gone hungry, furnishing the meats for his table without money and without price. We had not met in forty years, yet he grasped my hand, saying, "I never forget you and Billie Griffin" (Billie, how did you do it?).

But this must have an end, so au revoir.

SPIRIT'S POWER.

We are all very much affected by the things we look at from day to day. A man will find sights congenial to his heart and mind. If he be artistic he will be on the outlook for pictures and sculpture, or beautiful scenes in nature. If he have a turn for science, he will find objects of study and delight in every field and wood. Now all these objects, in turn, react upon us. The artistic mind grows and expands by the study of beauty. The scientific man becomes more scientific by the study of nature. Apply this to the gospel. Look at Christ, look daily, look appreciatively, lovingly, in tender sympathy, and the Spirit of Christ will possess you. We may not be able to tell how the change comes about, nor why, neither need we anxiously inquire, provided we look at Christ and feel the Spirit's power. God has many ways. Stand before the mirror, and you will see the light. We care not at what angle you gaze. Look at Christ through tears of penitence, look in hope, in joy, in love; let His light stream into the heart through any one of the many avenues of thought and feeling.—F. G. Walker.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE.

By Ulysses Grant Foote.

Somewhere in France is a bonny lad,
And a fine young man is he;
His heart is brave, his eyes are glad,
And his face is frank and free.

Somewhere in France he sails the sky,
No bird more swift than he;
He guides his ship with a steady eye,
O'er the lines of the enemy.

Somewhere in France he whirls his car,
And hurries the wounded on,
To the tented hope of maimed in war;
Then off again, he's gone.

Somewhere in France he hugs his gun,
As a friend that helps in need;
Then brings the flag his valor's won,
And gets a cross for the deed.

Somewhere in France in surgeon's white,
He swathes the wounds in prayer;
For the lives of men he toils all night;
The dawn still finds him there.

Somewhere in France he sleeps alone,
Yet thousands sleep near by;
His bed is marked by a cross or stone,
With angels hovering nigh.

Some day from France our boys will turn
Their faces toward the West;
Where lights of love still brightly burn—
Then home—thank God!—and rest!

HOW GOD ANSWERS PRAYER IN CUBA.

By Rev. Henry Smith.

We all know that God answers prayer in the States, but at times we are inclined to be like Jonah and think we have a special claim upon him, and while we admit that He is the Creator of all things, and all nations, yet possibly He is not quite so deeply interested in other nations as He is in our own. However, God answers prayer just as truly in Cuba, and other parts of the world as in the United States. During my second year in Cuba I was sent with a Cuban preacher to open up a new work. We remained in the town four days, preaching at night and looking for a suitable house for the new mission during the day, but no one seemed willing to let us have a house. After service I said to the Cuban brother, "We must pray about this work, and God must open up the way here." I did not know much Spanish, and I wanted to get very clearly before God our need, so I prayed in English, and the Cuban brother talked to the Lord about it in Spanish. We waited long before the Lord. The next morning, before we had breakfast, a man came and said, "Are you not seeking a house in which to hold service." We told him we were, and he said, "I heard of a house this morning you can get." We went to see the house; it belonged to one of the old and honored families of the town. They had never rented the house, but were willing to let us have half of it, while they occupied the other. The house was entirely suited to our purpose, in the part of the town best suited for the mission. They expressed surprise that that Roman Catholic family should let us have the house; nevertheless, their influence was entirely with us, and was a great help in beginning the work.

Recently in our own Church there was, to me, a very clear answer to prayer. A very promising girl was in one of our schools last year, and it seemed very necessary that she should return, but her grandparents are very poor, and as they were paying half of her tuition and board, they said they could not pay it this year. The grandmother said in June, "If she gets to go next year, it will be purely of the Lord." About the first of August, I said, "What about Mary?" She said, "I am praying that God will open the way for her to return, but there is no evidence of the possibility of it so far;" then she added, "They promised my husband work in an office, where we would have been able to send her, but they have given the place to another, and we are left out." I saw the director of our school a few days later. She said, "Every bit of the room is taken, and there is a long list of girls waiting." When I saw the grandmother I told her about it; she smiled, and said, "I think Mary will get to go now." I spoke to her husband about it; he said, "There is no possible hope for her this year, possibly next year she can go." Two days before school opened, the grandmother, said, "Haven't you heard from the school?" I said, "Nothing." She said, "We have our part of the money and enough more to pay her little extra expenses. It came yesterday." Two days after school opened a letter came, saying, "We have made room for Mary—send her at once." I said to my wife, "We are up against it—we have no money to pay the part we were to pay on her tuition." I also had been praying and hoping for some money, but had heard nothing. She said, "Well, we will send her, and trust God to take care of that." Two days after the girl left for school a letter came from a friend, outside of the Church, with a check, and saying more money would be furnished when needed.

The director of one of our schools wanted to finish up one of our buildings before the school term opened, but the money was out. He took the matter to God. A man who had his son in school the year before, and had only paid twenty-five dollars, and who had refused to answer letters concerning the account, came in person, and paid over three hundred dollars. The same brother needed some money to get provisions to start the school term on. He went to God about that matter also. A man whom he had never met, and to whom he had said nothing about paying for the year, sent in a check for two hundred and fifty dollars on his son's tuition for the coming year.

One of our missionaries was raising money to build a chapel. He, with other members of the Church, had been asking God that, if it were his will, a certain man, who could easily do so, might give them a thousand dollars; but when the missionary went to see him he gave only $25. The next day was Saturday. A little after breakfast, the pastor of the church saw a man for whom they had been praying go into his office. He said to his wife, "You pray for me while I talk to that man." He told the man what he wanted. He said if he had asked the man for any definite amount, it would not have been at the outside more than $50, and the man said, "Well, I will give you a thousand dollars." At one time a congregation, and not the largest on the island, by far, was preparing to build a church. They decided to make a Christmas offering in that direction. The pastor of the church writes: "The giving on the part of our own little church and Sunday school of more than a thousand dollars in their Christmas offering of two years ago was due entirely to prayer."

One of our churches in Cuba ceased to grow. For months no one came into the church, and no one was converted. The pastor of the church became very much alarmed for his own spiritual condition, and for the cause of Christ in that town. With humility and heart-searching, he turned to God; the attention of the church was called to the condition of affairs. The church members began to pray; certain simple steps in organization were taken as the Spirit seemed to direct. The meeting was continued from the Wednesday night prayer meeting, mostly for Christians, until Monday morning. The people gathered as usual; with the exception of a marked quietude, a simple service began; the Holy Spirit was poured out, the people confessed their sins, the revival broke out, more than eighty people became candidates for church membership, the spiritual life of the church was transformed, the church has never been what it was before, and some of the finest Christian characters in the Cuban mission have come out of it. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

PAY THE PREACHERS, RAISE THE COLLECTIONS..

To the Lay Leaders, Stewards, and other Laymen of the North Mississippi Conference.

Brethren: The hour is critical with the Church as perhaps with no other institution among men. Spiritually, structurally, and financially is this true. It is a time for prayer and for work. As has been said, we should pray as if work was needless and work as if prayer was not indispensable. Let us prove that as Methodists we believe that both are vitally essential.

To the financial status in many charges of this Conference, I now call special attention, in order that prompt, effective action may be taken. With prices steadily rising, our people have been loyally meeting urgent patriotic appeals; and now an epidemic is closing the churches in many counties and bringing to a standstill the efforts of pastors and stewards to bring up full reports to the approaching Conference. Under such conditions, with that Conference less than six weeks off, it needs no prophet to foretell the probable unhappy results in the charges that did not heed the appeals made early in the year to raise the Church dues in the first and second quarters as far as possible. Unless sustained and strenuous efforts are at once put forth in these charges, heavy deficits will almost certainly be reported. Preachers, who can barely meet expenses these times when paid in full, will suffer as never before; and the great enterprises of the Church will be checked, if not suspended.

Lay leaders, stewards, and laymen in every charge, let us do our utmost to prevent a situation so distressing, shameful, and unnecessary, from occurring! Our pastors and missionaries, the worn-out preachers and other of God's servants, and the great causes of the Church should not be under-supported because we have bought Liberty Bonds and have had to contribute to Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and other rightful war claims. Show the people this, put on another "Every Member Convass" wherever necessary—even though services be suspended; and let us with united, earnest, prayerful effort close the year with clear consciences and glad hearts. Can this be, if we dishonor God by letting his Church decay?

STATEMENT REGARDING ERROR IN THE NEW DISCIPLINE.

We desire to call attention to an error in the new Discipline. Chapter 14, Board of Assessments, page 177, has no place in our law, having been a substitute for the majority report creating the Commission on Finance. The majority report prevailed and constitutes Chapter 17 of the Discipline and is the law of the Church. The brother whom the former editor, Dr. (now Bishop) Du Bose, employed to keep track of changes in the Discipline transmitted Chapter 14 to this office as a part of the new Discipline. The Committee appointed to harmonize the Discipline failed to notice it, and it escaped the patient reading of both the Book Editor and his assistant. It will be marked void in copies of the Discipline now going out from the Publishing House, and will disappear from the annotated edition which will appear later.

LOUISIANA METHODISTS.

Our many friends in Louisiana must realize that on account of the deplorable conditions due to the widespread epidemic of Spanish influenza, whereby nearly, or quite, all the leading churches and Sunday schools of our Conference were closed last Sunday, the effort to secure the necessary money with which to operate our Orphanage during the coming winter months was almost a total failure. We fully expected to raise $10,000 on this "Work Day;" it is now doubtful if we secure $1000. In consequence, we must face the winter with practically an empty treasury.

This comes in the nature, and with the effect, of a calamity to this great cause. But few places in the State could observe the day. Our only hope is for the Sunday schools and churches to arrange to observe this day, and make the effort just as soon as possible; for the individual friends of the Orphanage to send in their contribution as soon as possible, and for all who will to help by making a liberal contribution at once.

To add to our difficulties, the Government cannot permit the transportation of the free cars this year. These cars have been of great value to our work every year. This year, with the added burden of expense, we must manage without this help. Our only hope is for our friends to come to our relief and in every possible way help us tide over these perilous times.

Thanking you in advance, and praying God to bless you as you try to help others, I am,

Faithfully,

ROB'T W. VAUGHAN,

Superintendent, Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

ASSESSMENTS FOR CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS.

I find that there is considerable confusion througbout the Church concerning the assessments for the ensuing year for the Conference Claimants. In order to clarify this matter I am writing you this open letter and sincerely trust you will publisb it in the next issue of your paper as an item of very important information to the Church.

There are three assessments on every Annual Conference in behalf of the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers. Two of these assessments are levied by the General Conference on the Church at large, and one is levied by the Annual Conference on its constituency for the support of its own claimants.

(1) The first General Conference assessment is that one which has been known as "the one per cent assessment on the combined salaries of pastors and presiding elders, for the Superannuate Eldowment Fund." This law was enacted by the General Conference at Oklahoma City, in 1914, and has not been changed. See 1918 Discipline, Paragraph No. 432-A.

(2) The second General Conference assessment is for $17,000, levied against the Church at large by the General Conference which convened at Atlanta, in May, 1918, for the expenses of the new Board of Finance, which said General Conference created. The purpose of this assessment was to provide for the expenses of the Board so that it could do its work without drawing on the interest from its loans, which must bo disbursed to the Conference Claimants for their support. This assessment was included in the general budget of the General Conference on the whole Church, and it so happened that this $17,000 was just one per cent of said budget. This assessment is handed down to the Annual Conferences in the General Conference budget, and will be collected by each Annual Conference in its budget. Thus it may be seen why there are two "one per cent assessments" for Conference Claimants.

(3) The third assessment for Conference Claimants is that which is assessed by each Annual Conference on its own constituency for distribution to its own claimants.

In collecting the three assessments named above, the one per cent assessment on the salaries of pastors and presiding elders should be added by the Annual Conference Board of Finance to its assessment on its Conference, same as has been during the last four years. For instance, if the Annual Conference Board of Finance levies 5 per cent on the salaries for distribution to its claimants, let said Board add to this 5 per cent the 1 per cent on the salaries for the Superannuate Endowment Fund, which will make a total of 6 per cent. The collections on the 6 per cent thus assessed will be received by the Conference Board of Finance and 5 per cent retained by it for its claimants, and 1 per cent sent to the Board of Finance for the Superannuate Endowment Fund.

The $17,000 assessment by the General Conference, which is levied in its budget on the whole Church for the expenses of the Board of Finance, will be handed down to the Annual Conferences, and 1 per cent of the collections made by each Annual Conference on its General Conference budget, must be sent to the Board of Finance, 801 Mercantile Building, Saint Louis, Missouri.

BACK HOME.

By Willie Conger Page.

Last night I was tired, and lay down upon a couch beside an open window, and tried with every art, wile and whimsical fancy I knew, to woo Morpheus, the god of slumber, to come to my relief; but he smiled elusively, poised his dainty wings and flew out into the night, leaving me wide awake. My mind drifted back to the scenes of my childhood, now long past, for I have wandered far in distance, as well as in years, from those happy, never-forgotten days. Methought I entered my garden of dreams, a place so entrancingly beautiful, that my spirit is uplifted and strengthened for a long while after each visit. I paused inside the vine-covered gate, in the quickening twilight, to enjoy the wondrous sight and sounds, the soothing sweetness of the wide-opened flowers, the evanescent glow of the fireflies as they flitted about on silent wings.

Looking up, I beheld a star beckoning me to come. It guided me along a little path, all dewy and sweet, winding its way through a dusky, fragrant woodland, out to an open meadow where bloomed many flowers, and where the song of the thrush and meadow-lark could faintly be heard; through the center of this field ran a small brook, murmuring, singing its merry way, on and on, to a broad, shining river. I lingered, loath to leave this charming scene; but the star beckoned me to come. Then on, through a lane lined with white daisies and moon-rays, I went. There was a languorous fragrance, a faint, well-remembered perfume; it was where the lilies and wild violets grew. The breath of the wet moss and sweet grasses came to me like tender, caressing voices of the past.

Beyond this, in a shady dell, there flowed a stream of water, cool, clear as crystal; in my long pilgrimage through life, whenever I was sick, I have begged for a drink from this refreshing, life-giving stream. Above this flowing water, was a knoll on which grew a giant beech-tree, on the trunk of which was carved the names and ages of my brother and sisters (Harold, aged 12), (Marion, aged 10), (Cecele, aged 8). How my heart trembled at the familiar manes! for there, loved playmates had gone, and left me in their early youth, had crossed the ebbing tide, whence they come not again, had gone to behold the face of the King. I bowed my head and prayed humbly, that I might so live as to be accounted worthy some day to see those flowers who were so frail and sensitive to the cold winds on earth that God had transplanted them to His own garden; and there beside the River of Life they flourish and bloom for Him. As I brushed away the tears that would fall, sweet voices called, "Sister." Those coming down the path were three little children, all clad in white, with arms outstretched.

Time had gone back in its flight—we were children again. How long we played I do not know; we made daisy-chains, played with sailboats in the brook, lived again in that happy fairyland of childhood. Then as quickly as they came, they vanished. From where I stood, I could plainly see the old-fashioned home, a long rambling house with gable, over which honeysuckle and jessamine had climbed and blossomed; the yard where the rows of hollyhocks and merigold nodded and swayed in the moonlight. Suddenly, down the old familiar steps came a vision so lovely I ran to meet her—it was the spirit of my lost youth, fair, slender, with starry, wistful eyes, eager to begin life's journey, to meet the unknown.

I offered a prayer of thanksgiving, for I knew after long year of pining I had found the forgotten way to youth and childhood—back home—in dreams.

THE FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING.

I recently sat at a dinner with a missionary who had just returned from Africa. Twenty-five years ago he plunged into the jungle and has only just emerged from it. One of the guests at the table asked how he was accustomed to preach to the gross barbarians. He replied, "You are mistaken in calling them 'gross barbarians.' They think as coherently as we do, and they reason about the great problems just as we do. A year ago," he continued, "I visited the kraal of a chief who had summoned me to palaver before him. I read the story of the Cross and preached a sermon on the atonement in the old-fashioned way. Its substance was 'God so loved the world that he gave His Only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life.' He asked me if I believed that; and, when I assured him I did, he asked me to repeat it, which I proceeded to do. Again he asked, 'Do you believe that?' And when I affirmed again that I did, he replied abruptly, 'Then your God is a fool!' Was I shocked? Not more than you are by the same reply couched in more civil phrase. I turned to the first chapter of I Corinthians and read: 'The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolish, but unto us which are saved it is the wisdom and power of God; because the foolishness of God is wiser than men!'"—David J. Burrell.

GOD'S CARE.

God gave the sky its boundless blue,
The stars their golden sheen,
The sun its warmth, the moon its light,
The earth its robe of green.

He gave the graceful tree its bend,
The flower its varied hue,
The bird its song, and all were given,
My little child, for you.

There's not a sparrow falls to earth
Unnoticed by our Lord,
Who calls the many stars by name,
That stud the heavens broad.

And since he gives each blade of grass
Its needed drop of dew,
Do you not think, my little child,
He'll also care for you?

THE HOME I LOVE.

What is home? Is it a stately mansion, with its large retinue of servants, its costly furnishings, its multiplied objects, its tranquil atmosphere?

More often it is the unfashionable house where there are inkstains on the tablecloth in the shabby sitting room, and where the stair carpet is threadbare, and the husband and father scarcely knows from dayfall to morning rise whether he can feed the hungry mouths. To those who must fight for its possessions, home is dear. Yes, if home is where love is, no less surely is love born of sacrifice.

Dear old shabby sitting room! To those so fortunate as to have once gathered within its dingy walls its memory grows more precious each day, and its inspiration continually strengthens. They remember the mother toiling at her sewing late into the night, the children bending over their schoolbooks, or busy with little tasks their mother had no time to perform. They remember looking around the sitting room with heavy hearts, wondering how much longer it would be theirs, and thrilling with a passion of tenderness for each faded article of furniture. From such rooms have gone forth the great men and women of the ages. Dear old sitting room!

One wonders sometimes if this latter-day prosperity and vanity are responsible for the tendency to hire a hearth in some hotel or apartment. Mothers, if you would rest secure in the love of your children, accept from them some little sacrifice for you and for their home.

A plain marble stone in a New England churchyard bears this brief inscription: "She always made home happy."

This epitaph was penned by a bereaved husband, after sixty years of wedded life. He might have said of his departed wife, she was beautiful and accomplished, and an ornament to society, and yet not said she made home happy. He might have said she was a virtuous woman, and not have been able to say: "She always made home happy."

What a rare combination of virtues and graces this wife and mother must have possessed! How wisely she must have ordered her house! In what patience she must have possessed her soul! How self-denying must have been her life! How thougthtful for the comfort of all about her!

Her husband did not seek happiness in public places, because he found purer and sweeter enjoyment at home. Her children, when away, did not dread to return home, for there was no place to them so dear as home. There was their mother thinking for them, and praying for them, longing for their return. When tempted, they thought of her. When in trouble, they remembered her kind words and her ready sympathy. When sick, they must go home; they could not die away from their dear mother.

This wife and mother was not exempt from the cares common to her place. She suffered many disappointments and bereavements; she was afflicted in her own person, but yet she was submissive and cheerful. The Lord's will concerning her was her will also, and so she passed away, leaving this sweet remembrance behind: "She always made home happy."

We shall never know, till we are ushered into eternity, how great has been the influence which one gentle, loving spirit has exercised in a household, shedding the mild radiance of its light over all the common events of daily life, and checking the inroads of discord and sin by the simple setting forth of that love which "seeketh not her own," but which "suffereth long, and is kind."

Above all things, there should be no gloom in the home. The shadows of dark discontent and wasting fretfulness should never cross the threshold, throwing their large, black shapes like funeral palls over the happy young spirits gathered there. If you will, you shall sit on a throne and be the presiding household deity. O faithful wife, what privileges, what treasures greater than thine!

And let the husband strive to forget his cares as he winds around the long, narrow street and beholds the soft light illuminating his little parlor, spreading its precious beams on the red pavement before it. He has been harassed, perplexed, persecuted. He has borne with many a cruel tone, many a cold word, and nerved himself up to an energy so desperate that his frame and spirits are weakened and depressed. And now his limbs ache with weariness; his temples throb with pain-heat caused by too constant application. He scarcely knows how to greet his wife with a pleasant smile, or sit down cheerfully to the evening meal, which she has provided with so much care and love.

But the door is opened—the overcoat thrown hastily off. A sweet, singing voice falls upon his ear, and the tones are so soft and glad that hope, like a winged angel, flies right into his bosom and nestles against his heart.

A home where gloom is banished—presided over by one who has learned to rule her household. O, he is thrice consoled for all his trials! It is impossible he can be unhappy. That sweetest, best, dearest solace is his—a cheerful home. Do you wonder that the man is strengthend anew for tomorrow's care and task, that he enters the morrow with a new hope which assures him larger measure of success? The house illuminated against gloom is the throne of our world. Is your house near the throne?—Earle William Gage in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

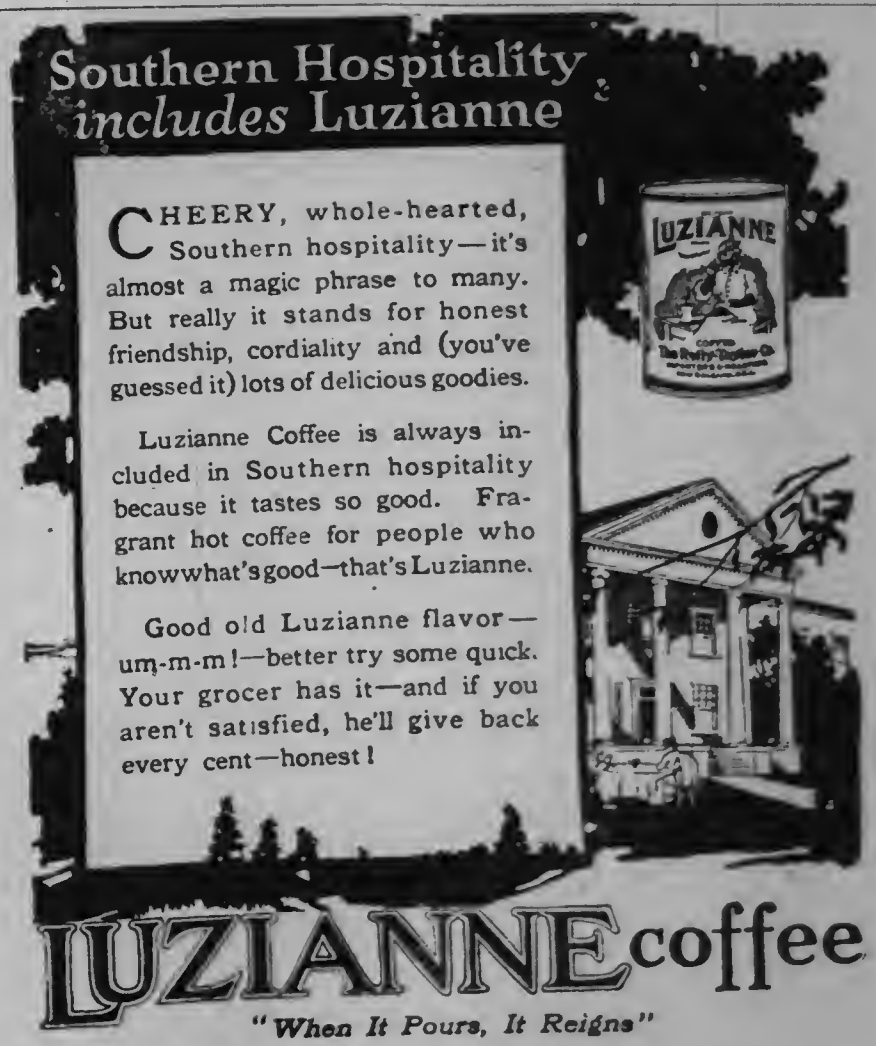
You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one.—Froude.

"THE OLD SADDLEBAGS."

I asked my grandfather the other day if he remembered when the parson used to carry saddlebags.

"Saddlebags? Why sure, son! It seems to me that I can see him now, a coming down the road with those old bags a-flapping at the sides of his horse. He'd rein him up and tie him at the rack and then take those old saddlebags from his back. He'd carry them across his arm and walk sedate and slow into the church, where he'd open them, and taking out his Bible and hymn book lay them upon the stand. Then he'd come back to the old stove to warm and shake hands with all the folks before the meeting would begin.

"My! how he would sing and pray and preach to us. And how I'd wish he would make the sermon short; for I knew that he was going to our house for dinner and would show us all the contents of those mysterious saddlebags. The latest book, "The Advocate," and tracts, he'd show to father while we children sat and listened to their words with wonder.



"Those saddlebags sometimes were mighty lean when he would come, but when he left they made his old horse straighten up and look around at him. For mother could fill saddlebags as well as preachers with good things to eat. You know the quarterage was mighty small in those days and I don't see what he would have done if mother hadn't filled his saddlebags."

"But what made you think of saddlebags, my boy?" he asked in surprise.

And then I showed this envelope to him with Peter Cartwright's saddlebags on it, and told him all about the big campaign to provide the worn-out preachers and their widows with means to keep the wolf of hunger from their doors.

His eyes grew dim with tears as he took out a dollar from his time-worn purse and said, "My boy, I wish I could put more within the saddlebags—I'd do it too for mother's sake, the dear old parson's sake, the sake of Him who sent, with love and faith, the parson with the lean old saddlebags."—C. W. Hammond, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

When I go out of doors in the summer night, and see how high the stars are, I am persuaded there is time enough here or somewhere for all that I must do; and the good world manifests very little impatience.—Emerson.

REPORT OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of our New Orleans Christian Advocate met in annual session, in the Advocaté office, in New Orleans, La., on October 10, 1918. The following members were present: J. M. Henry, W. W. Drake, J. F. Foster, J. H. Felts, T. H. Lipscomb, J. T. Leggett, C. W. Crisler and J. R. Jones.

J. F. Foster was elected chairman, J. R. Jones, secretary, and J. H. Felts, treasurer.

The Committee took unusual interest in all matters pertaining to the publication, circulation and success of the Advocate. Every item of business before the Committee was thoroughly discussed, and passed upon with that end in view. Every vote taken was unanimous, from the election of editor, and the employing of manager, down to the smallest item of business.

The reports of Brother Carley, Editor, and Brother Chalmers, Manager, showed the Advocate to be in reasonably good financial condition, growing in favor with pastors. presiding elders, and our Methodist people generally. This was encouraging news to the Committee, whose every desire is to give to the Church the best paper possible, and no doubt it will be encouraging to the thousands of Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana, who, through the years, have read and appreciated this weekly visitor.

The Committee was glad to note that wherever the campaign, which was launched at the beginning of this Conference year for new subscribers had been diligently pushed, it had borne much fruit. It was also noted with much appreciation that many of our pastors and presiding elders are taking unusual interest in securing new subscribers. It is greatly desired that this shall be the attitude of all. Upon this an increased circulation of the paper depends.

It was decided that next year a campaign, duplicating that of this year, be launched for renewals and new subscription, the campaign to open not later than that of this year. J. M. Henry, J. H. Felts, and J. R. Jones were appointed to represent their respective Conferences in this matter. J. F. Foster was elected general manager of the Campaign.

It was reported to the Committee that the Government is urging the cutting off of all delinquent subscribers from our list with the view to saving paper. There is close on to 1500 of these delinquents. The Committee decided to ask all of our pastors and presiding elders to try to save as many of these as possible. Pastors sending to the Manager the names of post offices in their charges will be furnished with lists of these delinquents with an urgent request that each delinquent be persuaded to renew. The Committee felt that if this were done many of these could be saved. It must be done quickly as the Government expects all delinquents to be cut off by November 1. Brethren, this will take some of our time. but as the matter is urgent, let's do it, and do it now.

On account of the unsettled condition of things incident to the war, it was thought best to elect an Editor, and employ a Manager for only one year. This was entirely satisfactory to Brother H. T. Carley, who was uananimously elected Editor, and who would have been unanimously elected for the full term, had conditions been normal.

The Committee decided to have the Advocate published for the Church, and hence a Manager was employed on a salary, instead of publisher as heretofore. Mr. C. O. Chalmers was employed.

The officers; chairman, secretary and treasurer, were elected as executive committee.

The following resolution of appreciation of Dr. R. A. Meek's services as editor was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas Dr. R. A. Meek for eight years, from December, 1910, to June, 1918, served the New Orleans Christian Advocate as editor, filling this responsible position with conspicuous ability and devotion to the Church and its every interest, therefore be it Resolved, That the Publishing Committee in annual session at New Orleans, La., express to Dr. Meek its high appreciation of his services rendered, and its abiding reward and esteem."

The Committee gladly commends the Advocate, its brilliant young Editor, and our painstaking Manager to thousands of our loyal Methodist people in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Let's co-operate with them for the success of our Conference organ! Let's strive to put it, at least, in the home of every official in the bounds of our patronizing territory! Let's not be satisfied with less than 10,000 subscribers before the middle of our next Conference year!

J. R. JONES, Secretary.

BY WAY OF CONTINUING—PERSONAL.

In the Advocate of June 20, in connection with my election to serve as Editor until the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee, in place of Dr. R. A. Meek, who had resigned, I made a brief statement under the heading, "By Way of Beginning—Personal." The Publishing Committee held its meeting on Thursday, October 10. When the election of Editor was entered into and the ballots were counted, the Chairman announced that I had been unanimously elected. I feel that it is now in order for me to make a few additional remarks.

First of all, I desire to express my sincere appreciation of the confidence of my brethren involved in my election to the editorship. I reaffirm the purpose and hope I expressed in the beginning of my work here—to devote all my energies to making a paper that will promote the welfare of the Church, and to minister to the spiritual life of all our people. I can conceive of no nobler task, and I can dedicate myself to no higher ministry. I desire, also, to express my grateful appreciation of the kindness of so many friends who have encouraged and helped me with their sympathy and prayers. I feel that I may confidently rely upon their co-operation in the future.

A most serious practical problem confronts all Church papers at the present time. There was never greater need of the wide circulation of religious newspapers than there is now. But the cost of producing such papers has increased enormously, and at the same time, from patriotic motives, restrictions have been placed upon the circulation of all newspapers by the War Industries Board that threaten them with the loss of hundreds of subscribers who have allowed themselves to fall into arrears. By order of the Government, all such subscribers must be cut off unless they renew their subscriptions promptly. On November 1, the Publisher will probably have to make a sworn statement to the Post Office Department concerning the enforcement of this order. It can readily be seen under these circumstances, that there is urgent need of securing every renewal possible before November 1.

The preachers of the Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the North Mississippi Conference have always been the friends of the Advocate. I feel perfectly free, therefore, to call upon them at this time to help us maintain our circulation by securing the renewal of as many subscriptions as possible within their charges. I realize that compliance with this request involves some time and effort. But it is a matter of such great importance that I believe they will cheerfully undertake the work. The members of the Publishing Committee are fully acquainted with the situation, and they are actively interested in maintaining our present subscription list. This work needs to be done now. I earnestly urge every preacher to send to the Publisher a list of the post offices in his charge, with the request for a list of the subscribers at those points. The list will be sent at once, showing the date of expiration of every subscription. With this list as a guide, it will not be a difficult matter to see those whose subscriptions are in arrears and secure their renewals.

This is an appeal for a co-operation that I feel that I can depend on in this extremely important matter.

Again I ask the prayers and sympathy of all.

H. T. CARLEY.

DEATH OF REV. J. C. PARK.

We received a note on last Saturday from Rev. W. L. Duren, presiding elder of the Columbus District, announcing the death of Rev. J. C. Park, our pastor at Starkville, Miss., on Thursday morning, October 10. This announcement will be received with profound sorrow throughout the Church. Brother Park was a man to whom no guile was attributable. His transparent character and brotherly spirit had won for him the love of all his brethren. His loss will be severely felt, not only because of the esteem in which he was held, but also because he goes at a time when it seems we needed him most.

According to the meager details in Brother Duren's note, Brother Park had been in a meeting at Friar's Point. On his way home, being tired, he slept part of the way on the train and was taken, presumably, with influenza. Pneumonia developed and he passed away at 4:15 Thursday morning. He was buried at Houston, Miss., the funeral service being conducted by Rev. J. R. Countiss and Rev. R. A. Tucker. Brother Duren was not able to attend the funeral on account of injuries he had recently received from a fall.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to all those who have been bereaved by the death of this great and good man. We are sure a suitable memoir will be furnished the Advocate for publication in due time.

CHURCH STATISTICS.

At the courteous request of Dr. Victor I. Masters, Educational Secretary of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, we are printing this week his reply to a recent article in the Advocate by Rev. H. T. Young, the capable and energetic Louisiana Conference evangelist. We have not had the opportunity of examining the statistics to which Dr. Masters refers in his communication. As a matter of editorial courtesy we are perfectly willing to allow him to state the grounds upon which the Baptists claim numerical superiority in the United States. We suggest, however, that the difficulty of securing thoroughly reliable statistics of the membership of Negro churches is so great as to make any computation based upon them uncertain, even though they are given out by the Government. Evidently the Negro Baptists themselves did not claim as large membership as the Census Bureau credits them with. Anyway, the difference between the membership of the two denominations is not large enough to justify any extravagant boasting. We agree heartily with Dr. Masters that the important thing for us all now is to whip the Hun, and hasten the coming of the Kingdom. So long as we do our duty in full measure, the statistics will take care of themselves.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We desire to express our thanks to Rev. J. F. Dring, of Ringgold, La., for three subscriptions which he sent us recently.

We learn from the Texas Christian Advocate that Bishop Mouzon has been ill with the Spanish influenza, but that his condition is improving.

Brother M. L. Felts, of Money, Miss., says he can't do without his Church paper. We thank him for renewing his subscription to the Advocate.

Rev. R. A. Tucker, of Grenada, Miss., has our thanks for a list of five renewal subscriptions to the Advocate, which he sent us recently.

We extend our thanks to Rev. J. L. Cady, of Clinton, La., for three subscriptions which he recently sent us. On other occasions he has similarly helped us.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. Early Gray, of Logtown, Miss., has been seriously ill recently. We are glad to know, however, that his condition is improving.

Rev. C. H. Strait, of Johns, Miss., in sending us four subscriptions, for which we thank him, says that his work is moving along nicely, and that everything will be in full at Conference.

"Messages of Cheer for Mothers of Soldiers" is a little pamphlet compiled by H. H. Smith, of Ford, Va. We have read it with much interest. It may be had of the compiler for five cents a copy.

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir, our pastor at Franklinton, La., was in the city last week and called at the Advocate office, as we think all Methodist preachers should do. He gave a good report of his work.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, the pastor, announces that Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, will dedicate the Methodist Church at Louin, Miss., on the Bay Springs charge, on the first Sunday in November.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, president of Centenary College, accompanied by his son, Robert, honored the Advocate office with a call on Tuesday, Oct. 8. He reported that Centenary has a fine attendance and that the school work is moving along smoothly.

Rev. R. G. A. Carlisle, of Longview, Miss., writes that he has had a good year on his work. He had some gracious revival meetings, with a good many accessions to the Church. He serves a fine people. We thank him for three subscriptions.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orlens District, requests us to announce that the quarterly conference for the Talisheek charge that was scheduled for October 20 has been postponed until further notice.

Mrs. F. B. Hill, the wife of our pastor at Patterson, La., has been called to Jeanerette, La., to assist the Red Cross and the doctors in fighting the influenza. She is also rendering help at Patterson by conducting classes for nurses.

Rev. C. A. Schultz, our pastor at Gallman, Miss., in remitting for a list of subscriptions he had sent us, says that he has had a fine year on his charge, and he expects to be able to report everything in full at Conference.

Rev. J. L. Sells, of Wiggins, Miss., sent us last week four subscriptions to the Advocate, for which we thank him. He has secured the full number assigned his charge in the campaign for the Advocate at the beginning of the year. Well done!

According to the Christian Advocate (Nashville), Dr. John A. Rice, for four years pastor of St. John's Church, St. Louis, has been transferred to the Upper South Carolina Conference. That Conference has not yet been held.

Rev. T. J. Embree, of Slidell, La., paid the Advocate office a visit last Friday. He reported his work to be moving along nicely. According to his statement, Slidell made a record for itself in the Third Liberty Loan campaign; its quota was $18,000, but it raised $182,000.

The announcement has appeared in the secular press that the Holston Conference, which was appointed to meet at Johnson City, Tenn., on October 9, will not meet as appointed, on account of an epidemic of Spanish influenza, but will meet at Knoxville, Tenn., on October 16.

We learn from an exchange that a wealthy layman of Southern Methodism has promised, through Bishop Hendrix, to give $100,000 to the Centenary fund, with the statement that he will probably make it that much a year, or $500,000 for the whole campaign.

Brother P. M. Franklin, of Oxford, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says that he has been taking the paper about twenty years, and that he expects to continue to take it. "It is worth its weight in gold," is the way he expresses his opinion of it.

Rev. F. M. Freeman, pastor of our Parker Memorial Church, this city, is in bed with the prevailing type of the grippe. Rev. W. H. Coleman, and Rev. R. M. Brown are slowly recuperating from attacks of the same disease. Members of the families of all these brethren are reported to be stricken.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, our pastor at Oxford, Miss., a member of the Advocate Publishing Committee from the North Mississippi Conference, was unable to attend the meeting of the Committee last week on account of the prevalence of the influenza in his community. He was greatly missed.

In a recent notice of Bishop Thirkield's book, "Service and Prayers," we failed to give the publisher and the price. It is published by the Methodist Book Concern, New York and Chicago, and the price is 55 cents, postpaid. It may be had, however, of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Tex.

We learn from a correspondent that George and Ransom, sons of Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference, are sick with influenza and pneumonia. We pray earnestly that the disease may be checked, and that these fine boys may soon be restored to health.

We have seen the statement recently that the Y. M. C. A. secretaries distributed last year to the soldiers 300,359 copies of the New Testament. The Y. M. C. A. deserves the support of our people.

The meeting at Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., in which Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Pine Bluff, Ark., was doing the preaching, was brought to a close on Tuesday of last week by order of the health authorities. Every indication pointed to a great revival. Dr. Copeland endeared himself to all who met him.

Our Church at Covington, La., has been bereaved in the death of Brother R. N. Leonard, one of the leading stewards of that charge, who passed to his reward last Friday night. The Church has lost an active official and the community a good citizen. We extend our sympathy to the sorrowing family.

Rev. Henry T. Young, the efficient evangelist of the Louisiana Conference, writes from his home at Jena, La., that he is enjoying a period of enforced rest now, on account of the epidemic of influenza. He deserves it, however, since he has preached on an average of more than twice a day since February 1.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, of Harperville, Miss., writes as follows: "We have had a good year. We have bought a parsonage, and have had very good meetings all over the charge. The people are growing in grace, we believe. We want to have a good report at Conference." Brother Clegg sent us two subscriptions, for which we thank him.

Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, has received an invitation from the faculty of the University of Upsala, Sweden, to visit the university and deliver a course of lectures in the near future on the Olaus Petrie Foundation, taking as his subject, "American Christianity and Church Unity."

Just before going to press on Tuesday, the Advocate received the following note from Mrs. P. D. Hardin, wife of our pastor at Hattiesburg, Miss., whose illness was reported last week. "Mr. Hardin has been quite ill with facial erysipelas. His condition is very much improved, with indication of recovery." This will be good news to Brother Hardin's hosts of friends.

Rev. J. B. Williams, of Many, La., in sending us his renewal, says that he cannot afford to be without the Advocate. Of course we know our preachers read it; but we wonder how so many of our official laymen manage to do without it. Perhaps they are not as well informed as to Church matters as they should be. They ought to take the Advocate.

Rev. M. F. Adams, of Flora, Miss., has our sincere thanks for a list of twenty renewal subscriptions which he sent us recently. He has done what we hope all our pastors will do—saved us the necessity of dropping a good many names that otherwise would have to go, under the ruling of the War Industries Board. We commend him for his faithful work.

A note from Rev. H. K. McKee, of Picayune, Miss., received last Thursday morning, informed us that our pastor at that place, Rev. W. F. Baggett, and all his family were very ill with Spanish influenza. Brother McKee was helping Brother Baggett by attending to his pastoral duties, being engaged at that time in a meeting at Nicholson. He stated that the situation in that section is serious on account of the epidemic.

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) gives the folowing as the vote on laity rights for women in the Conferences thus far held: Northwest, 33 for, 1 against; Western Virginia, 74 for, 6 against; Missouri, 132 for, none against; Southwest Missouri, 119 for, none against; Denver, 18 for, none against; Kentucky, 94 for, 39 against; Illinois, 37 for, none against; St. Louis, 105 for, 1 against. The totals are: 612 for, 47 against.

Rev. P. H. Grice, our pastor at North Gulfport, Miss., was in the Advocate office Saturday afternoon. His little daughter has been in the Touro Infirmary for five weeks, critically ill. She is making a brave fight for life, though the improvement in her condition is very slow. Brother and Sister Grice have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in this time of anxiety.

We have just received the following note from Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Winona, Miss.: "Dorothy Sue, the little seven-year old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. N. Duncan, of Winona, Miss., slipped away to Heaven on October 7. She was an unusually sprightly, beautiful and attractive child. Our love and prayers go out to the bereaved father and mother." We pray that God may sustain the heart-broken parents in their hour of sorrow.

Rev. W. R. Harvell, our pastor at Mer Rouge, La., has brought us under obligations by sending us two subscriptions, with the request that we send him a list of the subscribers on his charge. We gladly complied. We like to get such requests—they enable us to secure a good many renewals that we otherwise might lose on account of the regulation requiring us to drop the names of those who are in arrears.

Rev. W. R. Harvel reports that he has had Rev. H. T. Young with him in two meetings recently, one at Mer Rouge, La., and one at Oak Ridge, La. Both meetings were good; Brother Young did fine preaching, and the people want him to come again.

A note from Rev. W. M. Williams, of Collins, Miss., requests us to send the Advocate to his son, Frank S. Williams, at 2 A Yu Yuen Road, Shanghai, China. Brother Frank has been teaching in Soochow University, but has resigned that position to enter the employ of the American Building and Trading Company. He feels that he can be as useful in exemplifying the Christian religion in commercial life to the Chinese as he could be in the schoolroom. We are sure he has a great opportunity for usefulness.

A short time ago we announced that Rev. Sam R. Hay, D.D., presiding elder of the Dallas District, had been transferred to the Memphis Conference. Since that time, however, Dr. Hay has been transferred to the New Mexico Conference and stationed at Deming. This change was made on account of the fact that Dr. Hay's physicians prescribed a dry climate for certain incipient troubles which will yield readily to such treatment. We make this statement on the authority of the Texas Christian Advocate.

We have just received the following note from Rev. J. D. Nesom, of Eunice, La.: "R. B. Sloane, of Maxie, La., passed to his reward, at his home, Thursday night at 10:15 o'clock. He was the father of Rev. J. G. Sloane, of the Louisiana Conference. He was 78 years of age. His was a long, active and useful life. The community, the Church, the family and myself sustain an irreparable loss in his going." We extend our sincere sympathy to all those who have been bereaved by the death of this good man.

Rev. W. A. Mangum, our pastor at McDonoghville, La., was ordained elder by Bishop Kilgo last Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the First Methodist Church, New Orleans. Brother Mangum was elected an elder at the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference last year, but on account of sickness in his family was not able to be present for ordination. The Bishop was assisted in the service by Dr. U. G. Foote, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, Rev. C. C. Wier, Rev. H. W. May, and Rev. A. S. Lutz.

Bishop John C. Kilgo spent a busy day at Laurel, Miss., Sunday, October 6. At 11 o'clock in the morning, he preached and dedicated the beautiful First Church building. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, he dedicated the West End Methodist church. Reports coming to us state that the Bishop preached two great sermons. The pastor of First Church, Dr. H. F. Tolle, announced that he had taken 88 members into the Church this year, and that the congregation had raised over nine thousand dollars. Laurel Methodism is vigorous.

All the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference were in New Orleans last Wednesday to meet Bishop Kilgo in consultation concerning the work of the Church. Bishop Kilgo did not arrive until Wednesday evening. The union prayer meeting and informal reception, which had been planned to take place at Rayne Memorial, was not held on account of the influenza situation. Bishop Kilgo spoke at the luncheon of the Liberty Loan Campaign Committee on Thursday. The daily nswspapers reported that his speech produced a great deal of enthusiasm. The Bishop left New Orleans Thursday afternoon.

Rev. H. R. McKee, our pastor at Rose Hill, Miss., requests us to announce that Bishop Kilgo will dedicate the church at that place on October 25. The preachers of the Conference, especially those of the Newton District, are cordially invited to be present. It is greatly desired to have present all those members of the Conference who have gone into the ministry from that church, about ten in all. There will be two sermons delivered, and there will be "dinner on the ground." We thank Brother McKee for a cordial invitation to be present on that occasion. The pastor is serving his fourth year on that charge, and he has succeeded in paying some long-standing debts. His successor will find the work in good condition.

In the army camps of seven Southern States, there are 919 Y. M. C. A. secretaries. Of these, 204 are ordained ministers of the following Churches: Methodist, 60; Presbyterian, 58; Baptist, 50; Christian, 20; Congregational, 14; Episcopal, 2. In the total number of secretaries, preachers and laymen, 17 denominations are represented. Those having more than 5, with the number of each, are: Methodist, 322; Baptist, 222; Presbyterian, 206; Episcopal, 60; Christian, 46; Congregational, 34; Lutheran, 10; Moravian, 6. Of the 919 workers, the Methodist, the Baptist and the Presbyterian Churches furnish 750. These figures are taken from a recent official bulletin of the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A.

Hunting trouble is too fashionable in this world. Contentment and jollity are not cultivated as they should be. There are too many prematurely wrinkled, long, and melancholy faces among us. There is too much swearing, sweating, and slashing, fuming, foaming, and fretting, around and about us all.—Artemus Ward.

Saturday, September 21, at 4 p. m., Brotber GEO. F. WHITE passed from time into eternity. He had been in failing health for some time and his death was not unexpected. Brotber White was in his seventy-third year, and the years of his life were spent in the Sixtb Ward of East Feliciana Parish, where he was born on December 7, 1845. He was married on February 5, 1868, to Miss Mary E. Nesom, who was awaiting him in Heaven. Brother White for more than fifty years was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He served on the board of stewards for many years. He enjoyed having his pastor in his home. It can be truly said that his house was a house of prayer. Surviving members of the family are: Mrs. W. L. Haney, of Clinton, La.; Mrs. John R. Chatman, of Port Arthur, Tex.; Mrs. C. W. George, of Montpelier, La., and Mrs. W. P. Cobb, of Houma, La.

While we realize that his children have lost a loving father, the Church a loyal member, and the country a true citizen, we know that he has gone to be with Christ and tbe Redeemed for ever. His pastor, J. L. CADY.

Clinton, La.

SCATTERED TO THE FOUR WINDS.

A Hebrew woman spread false reports about a neighbor. Later, repenting of the sin, she came to her rabbi inquiring what she could do to remedy the wrong done her neighbor. He directed her to pull the fathers from a fowl and go down tbe lane scattering the featbers until all were gone and then return to him. She did as directed. Then he said, "Go now and gather up the feathers, every one, and bring them to me." "But, Rabbi," sbe said, "that will be impossible, for since I scattered the feathers winds have arisen and have blown tbem far and wide over the fields and I could never get them togetber again." "So," said the rabbi, "since you told an untruth about your friend others and still others have repeated it until it is now scattered far and wide over the countryside and you can never gather up the false reports again. You can only seek the forgiveness of your friend and God."—Exchange.

NEWLY DISCOVERED USES FOR GLUE.

With our Government demanding all possible conservation in American households, several newly discovered uses for glue present to the thoughtful woman opportunities to prolong the life of household articles.

As every family has, or should have, on hand a bottle or tube of good glue, the following practical suggestions can be acted upon without delay or expense.

To Put New Life in an Old Broom.

A teaspoonful of glue mixed in a basin of hot water poured over a broom and then allowed to thoroughly dry will greatly stiffen it, and prolong its usefulness and life.

When Shoes Become Barked or Scarred.

Very often a small piece of the leather is lifted or loosened. Don't cut it off and try to cover the place with blacking. Flatten the piece in place with a little glue and allow to dry. Then apply blacking and the surface will be as good as new.

For Tears or Rents in Silk.

Another piece of silk or fabric of the same color placed under the tear with a thin coating of glue will bring the edges more firmly together than can be done with a needle. Allow to dry thoroughly and rent will be almost invisible.

A Splendid Way to Keep Rubbers from Slipping.

Rubber overshoes often become so loose that they slip off at the heels, especially in the winter and spring when the ground is muddy or slushy. This annoying trouble can be entirely eliminated by gluing a felt band around the inside top of the rubber.

To Protect Furs and Woolens from Moths.

It is commonly known that moths very much dislike the odor of ink in old newspapers. Several thicknesses of old newspapers firmly glued together may be made into the form of a bag and the garment placed inside. After the ends and all joints are firmly sealed with glue, the bag is absolutely moth and dust proof, and your protection from moths has cost practically nothing.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY ADOPTED BY THE BOARD OF STEWARDS, CROWLEY, LA.

Whereas, our pastor, Rev. R. W. Tucker, has been recently sorely bereaved by the death of his beloved daughter, Mrs. Hettie Richardson, who was so suddenly cut off in the prime of her life—a life rich in promise and full of service—

Therefore, be it resolved, that we extend our love and sympathy to our faithful pastor and his bereaved family, and sorrow with them. We all know that we sorrow not as they without hope, for she has entered into a larger, fuller and more perfect life.

"She has passed away, but her sweet good will,
Like a fragrant ordor, lingers still."

LIBERTY BELL.

Here are some things about the Liberty Bell to cut out and paste in your scrap-book:

July 8, 1776, the bell was rung for the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence.

On October 24, 1781, the bell rang out for the surrender of Cornwallis.

April 16, 1783, it rang out for the proclamation of peace.

September 29, 1824, it rang to welcome Lafayette to the Hall of Independence.

July 4, 1826, it ushered in the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth anniversary of the republic.

July 24, 1826, it tolled for the death of Thomas Jefferson.

July 4, 1831, is the last recorded ringing of this famous bell to commemorate the day of independence.

February 22, 1832, it rang to commemorate the birthday of Washington.

In the same year it tolled the death of the last survivor of the Declaration, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton.

July 2, 1834, it tolled once more. Lafayette was dead.

July 8, 1835, while being tolled for the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, a crack was developed, starting from the rim and inclining in a right-hand direction toward the crown.

Its voice is silent, but its deeds will ring in the hearts of all patriotic people so long as the name of Liberty shall last.—Selected.

RENWAR RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says: "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanitarium treatments, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should anyone doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists, price 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, streaked locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.

THIS WOMAN SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, One of Thousands of Such Cases.

Black River Falls, Wis.—"As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation, I cannot say enough in praise of it. I suffered from organic troubles and my side hurt me so I could hardly be up from my bed, and I was unable to do my housework. I had the best doctors in Eau Claire and they wanted me to have an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me so I did not need the operation, and I am telling all my friends about it."—Mrs. A. W. BINZER, Black River Falls, Wis.

It is just such experiences as that of Mrs. Binzer that has made this famous root and herb remedy a household word from ocean to ocean. Any woman who suffers from inflammation, ulceration, displacements, backache, nervousness, irregularities or "the blues" should not rest until she has given it a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. A Stubborn Cough Loosens Right Up

This home-made remedy is a wonder for quick results. Easily and cheaply made.

Here is a home-made syrup which millions of people have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up stubborn coughs. It is cheap and simple, but very prompt in action. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, whooping cough, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you get a full pint—a family supply—of much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for three times the money. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its prompt healing effect upon the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

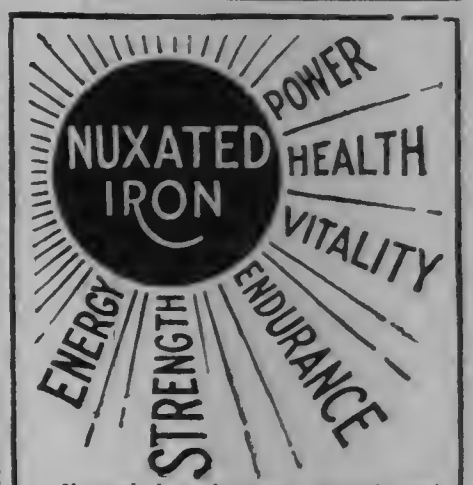
We shall have much to learn in a future world, and I think we shall be children to begin with when we get to heaven, whatever our age when we die, and shall grow on there. My idea of heaven is to be engaged in perpetual ministry to souls in this and other worlds.—Tennyson.



TIME WILL PROVE IT.

Regardless of the merits of the case, no statements in regard to the merit of any article can be so clearly proven as through time itself. If the article has no value it cannot live. If it has merits, it will be everlastingly in demand. It is just so with Gray's Ointment; for ninety-seven years a family word in every household. Almost a century ago the same claims were made of its merits as to-day: that it is healing and antiseptic, the very best aid in cases of burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sores, stings and other skin infections. It has won on its merits. A ninety-seven year record is ample proof. Write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for sample.—Adv.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, Poulty Expert, 9257 Reefer Building, Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million-dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar to-day or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

THE SOUTHERN NEGRO AND SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHER.

By Rev. P. H. Fontaine.

Having been born and reared on a Southern plantation, the writer can speak from first-hand information in regard to certain characteristics of the Negro that have a resemblance to those of the Southern Methodist preacher.

The Negro moves often, and consequently there is a freqent exchange of homes. He usually moves at the end of the year and finds a dwelling with its premises badly in need of repair. He at once pays a visit to the landlord, and getting the necessary material, makes just enough repairs barely to "do." At the end of the year he moves again and then to prevent his sucessor from enjoying the frults of his labors, uses for fuel the fences he built and everything else he dares, and leaves the place in worse repair, if possible, than when he found it. He then moves to another place, and, sad to relate, finds that his predecessor has done just as he dld and left a dilapidated place.

This thlng has been going on ever since 1865 and the whole South has suffered from it.

Now wherein can we find that such a thing is represented by the conduct ef the preachers of the M. E. Church, South? The writer has had under his care, elther as a dwelling or otherwise, fourteen parsonages slnce he has been a preacher-ln-charge, and has found but three of these in good condition. He has found some vermin-infested, fences down, front yards and other parts of the premises littered with rubbish and altogether a reproach to the ministry. He is thankful to be able to state that hls successors have always found the exact opposite to the above, but he has had occasion to vislt a few of these parsonages he toiled so hard to improve and left so nice, and, alas! the careless preacher had been there, and all was dilapidation again.

Parsonages are secured and maintained solely for preachers' homes, and if all of us should take proper care of them, then, when we move, we should be sure of finding a good home.

We need an awakenlng and a reformation.

A GROWING BLESSING.

Rev. Earl B. Moll conducted two meetings in our community recently, one at Grand Bayou, the other at Ringgold. We can never thank God enough for the good that he accomplished. Many souls were saved at both places, and greater zeal has been manifested in Sunday school, prayer meetings and other church activities, than ever before. The fruit of his good work is multiplylng each day. He was ably assisted in this work by our ever faithful pastor, Rev. J. F. Dring.

We pray God's richest blessings upon this young servant of our Master. We know that his life will be one of continuous soul-winnlng, for he has been and is filled with our Redeemer's great love.

One who was thoroughly converted through hls earnest and fervent appeals.

A GOOD REPORT FROM HAZELHURST, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Just a few words from Hazlehurst. We are closing out our second year here, and two very pleasant years they have been; and I trust that they have not been altogether unprofitable ones. We have just closed our meeting here in which Miss Bessie Cook of Hattlesburg, Miss., led the singing, and she did it well. Miss Cook delighted our people and brought us a great blessing in song. We had a good meeting, in splte of the fact that the pastor had to do all the preaching. The Lord was good to us. "We have had a good year, Bishop." It may not mean much for me to say it, but you are giving us a good paper. With the hope of doing some preacher a service, I would say that any one needing musical assistance in his meetings would do well to write Miss Bessie Cook, Hattiesburg, Miss. She is good help.

With kindest regards, I am your brother, L. L. ROBERTS.

Hazlehurst, Miss.

NEWS FROM WIGGINS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a fine meeting at Stillmore, Sunday nlght. Brother J. L. Smith, of Saucier, had been with me three days and gave very helpful service, but was compelled to leave Saturday night in order to be with his own people. Three services were held Sunday, 4 persons being received by letter, 4 by baptism, 3 by vows, 4 lnfants baptized, a number of new subscribers to the Advocate were secured, and a good offering for Brother Smith was given. No more loyal and liberal people can be found than those of Stillmore, in proportion to their ability.

My fourth year on the Wiggins charge is now closing. They have been pleasant years, spent among a very klnd and appreclative people. During that time 129 persons have been received on profession, 165 by certificate. The stewards have been especially helpful to the pastor, looking after all finances and seeing that all claims are met in full. A live prayer-meeting, a good Sunday school and Junior and Senior Leagues in the hands of efficient helpers have all combined to make this preacher's stay in Wiggins one of the most enjoyable pastorates of his life. We hope to be able to use the time-honored phrase at Conference, "In full Bishop."

A BUSY SUMMER.

Dear Brother Carley: I guess you would not object to my giving to your paper my labors for the last three months. The first Sunday in July, I helped Brother Clegg in a meeting at Oak Grove, or Pea Ridge, northern part of Scott County. A real helpful meeting was had. The second Sunday and week after, I helped Brother Flurry (one of the best men we have in the Mississippi Conference), at Mar's Hill. A very fine meeting resulted. There were several accessions to the Church. There are some very fine characters here. The third Sunday in July, Brother Bennett helped me at Gasque Chapel. We had a splendid meeting, and several accesslons to the Church. On the fourth Sunday in July, Brother Bennett helped me at Homewood. We had another splendid meeting, 17 accessions to the Church. Brother Bennett is fine in meetings, true and loyal. The first Sunday in August, I held a meeting at Lovett schoolhouse. Brother McJunkins, a Presbyterlan preacher, came out from Forest and helped; also Brother R. L. Myers, a local preacher, heiped. We had a good meeting.

On the second Sunday in August, I helped Brother Cooley at Beach Springs, in Neshoba County. Here we had a good meeting, 11 accessions to the Church, and an interest in a new church house.

The thlrd Sunday in August I held my meeting at Carr Church. A. J. Boyles, local preacher, did half of the preaching. He is a fine boy. There were several accessions to the Church.

On the fourth Sunday in August, I held the meeting at Pulaskl. Brother Miller having gone to the camps, the churches were left vacant. Here we had a very fine meetlng. I am supplylng this church untll Conference. A number of accesslons to the Church resulted there.

On the first Sunday in September, I held my meetlng at High Hill. Brother Warner Davis, a young preacher from Meridian College, helped me there. We had a fine meeting; several joined the Church.

On the second Sunday in September, I helped Brother Cooley at Stratton. Here we have no church. We had a good meeting. As a result, we will have a church house, then organize. Things are very flattering there.

On the thlrd Sunday ln September, I helped Brother Flurry at North Bend. Last October I helped ln a meetlng there. As one of the results, Brother Flurry has a $2000 church there; so I went back this year, and we had a great revival, there being about 30 accessions to the Church. This closed my summer's work in meetings. Nearly 250 persons have been brought into the Church during these meetings. The pastors whom I helped are fine fellows, very affable and thoughtful.

Homewood gets on well. I see much improvement. A teacher-tralning class has done much good here; nine have their diplomas, and all are striving to complete the work.

We appreclate Brother Linfield very much. He is kind and full of energy. We are hopeful that Newton District will come to the front this year.

I would like here to urge the pastors and Sunday school superintendents to make a strong effort to have a teacher-training class ln every Sunday school. If they knew the good that would come of it, they would. If the pastors of the Newton District will give me the name of a sure-enough efficient person at each Sunday school, as superintendent of training course for Newton District, I will see what I can do towards helping them. I have had some experience, and I think I can help them.

Yours for Liberty Bonds,
M. L. WHITE.

FULL CHURCH MEMBERSHIP FOR THE WOMEN OF THE METHODIST CHURCH, SOUTH.

Believing that the time has come when the work of the Church cannot be carried to its consummation without the fullest co-operation of men and women, the women of the Missionary Society of Louisiana ask the careful reading of the following statement, and of the articles that shall appear from time to time in this column, bearing on this subject.

"The General Conference in session in Atlanta, Georgia, May, 1918, granted the petition of the Woman's Missionary Council, and a number of other organizations, asking for full church membership for the women of the Church, by an overwhelming vote.

"The following day, the College of Bishops gave to the General Conference their opinion in writing, that the granting of laity rights to women was a constitutional question. As such, it could not become a law until ratified by the Annual Conference.

"Accordingly, the General Conference immediately reaffirmed the action by a vote of 265 to 57, thus referring it to the Annual Conferences where, for ratification, an affirmative vote of three-fourths of all the votes cast in all the Annual Conferences is required.

"On May 15, the following was passed: 'Resolved, That this General Conference request the Bishops to submit the questions of laity rights and the Creed to the Annual Conferences during the first year of the quadrennium.'

"On May 18, the following was passed: 'Resolved, That in determining the constitutional questions involved in bestowing laity rights upon women in accordance with the action of this General Conference taken May 14, 1918, the Bishops be requested to submit to the Annual Conferences the following question: Shall lay members be eligible to all the conferences and boards and lay offices of the church, without regard to sex?'

"The recital of this record of the last General Conference indicates clearly the unmistakable fact that a very large majority of the representatives of the Church, who were charged with the weighty responsibility of enacting laws which would make for the greatest efficiency in the machinery of the Church, and for the greatest contribution to the Kingdom of God, believe that the speedy enactment of this legislation is for the best interests of the whole Church in this, its most crucial hour."

The Vote to Date.

The vote on the question of granting full lay membership to women in the Conferences that have been held has been as follows:

CHRISTMAS PACKAGES FOR SOLDIERS OVERSEAS.

Only one parcel will be accepted by the War Department through the American Red Cross for each soldier overseas, it is announced in regulations from Washington.

Each soldier will be provided with one Christmas parcel label. This label will be forwarded by him to the person in the United States from whom he wishes to receive his Christmas package. Packages that do not bear this label will not be accepted by the American Red Cross for delivery to postoffice authorities. Labels that are lost will not be duplicated. Christmas parcels must be placed in cardboard boxes three inches by four inches by nine inches in size. These boxes will be provided to holders of labels by the American Red Cross. They may be obtained at American Red Cross chapters and branches after November 1.

With each box will be given complete instructions regarding articles which may be sent and a list of articles which are barred by postal authorities. Study these instructions and avoid mistakes. No message or written material of any kind will be allowed in the boxes. When the boxes are packed, but unwrapped, they must not weigh more than two pounds and fifteen ounces. If the parcel is overweight, some article must be romoved.

Do not put perishable food, soft candy, liquids or anything in glass containers in the package if you wish it to reach its destination with the other contents unspoiled. Do not mail the box yourself. When packed the box should be taken to the nearest collection station designated by the American Red Cross, unsealed and unwrapped ready for inspection.

The American Red Cross representatives are authorized to remove objectionable articles from parcels. Shippers will then affix sufficient postage on their parcels to carry them to Hoboken, N. Y. Parcel post rates will be charged. Parcels are to remain in custody of the American Red Cross until delivered to postal authorities.

No Christmas parcel will be accepted by the American Red Cross for shipment after November 20. Keep this fact in mind when planning Merry Christmas for the boys over there.—Red Cross Bulletin.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

September 28 and 29 were spent on the Hub charge, with Brother Allen. Baxterville and Hub were visited and some work was done at both places. Teacher-training books were sold. The Girls' Intermediate Class at Baxterville was organized, and they took a $10 share in the Mexican work.

Sarepta, Patterson, Tillman and Hermanville were visited on the Hermanville charge. I had the pleasure of being at the third quarterly conference and heard the presiding elder say it was the best third quarterly conference he had held on the charge since he had been on the district. There was much evidence of progress. Brother Ferguson is doing a good work.

I feel that my visit was profitable; twelve teacher-training books were sold, two classes were organized, three Cradle Rolls were organized, and two Home Departments were put in. Three of the schools pledged themselves to observe Missionary Day; $11 raised for the Orphans' Home and $3.50 for missions. Two high schools were visited.

I was at Sumrall with Brother Jones in the Centenary Drive and enjoyed the visit so much. Pray for me.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you —Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.—Adv.

A CRY IN THE NIGHT.

In behalf of the long neglected superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the M. E. Church, South. This Church claims a constituency of 2,225,000 adherents and property values that stagger the imagination. For this, much credit is due the above named men. This appeal is to save these valiant though aged and physically infirm heroes from real want. For years they have suffered in silence, receiving an annual pittance from the Church which they have helped to establish.

Men and women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose hearts pulsate in sympathy and love, can you rest complacently in the midst of your material possessions while the retired preachers, who did so much to sharpen your spiritual perceptions, languish in need of the bare necessities of existence? Shall they, who have given their all to create for you priceless values both material and spiritual, be forgotten and neglected when the wolf howls at their doors?

A voice is calling through the land: "Buy Liberty Bonds," and millions of free men, women and children swell the grand chorus "Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond!" And for what? To win the great battle of Humanity versus Kaiserism. The person who can and does not respond to this call is unworthy the name of American.

When you have purchased your Bonds, why not donate at least one to the Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., for the Superannuate Endowment Fund? By so doing you will not only perform a patriotic duty, but also you will assist in bringing sunshine and happiness into the lives of the blessed old retired preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of said Church.

A NICKEL FOR THE LORD.

Yesterday he wore a rose on the lapel of his coat, but when the plate was passed to-day he gave a nickel to the Lord. He had several bills in his pocket and sundry change, perhaps a dollar's worth, but he hunted about, and finding this poor little nickel, he laid it on the plate to aid in the fight against the world, the flesh and the devil. His silk hat was beneath the seat, and his gloves and cane were beside it, and the nickel was on the plate—a whole nickel.

On Saturday afternoon he met a friend, and together they had some refreshments. The cash register stamped thirty-five cents on the slip the boy presented to him. Peeling off a bill, he handed it to the lad and gave him a nickel tip when he brought back the change. A nickel for the Lord and a nickel for the waiter!

And the man had his shoes polished on Saturday afternoon and handed out a dime without a murmur. He had a shave, and paid fifteen cents with equal alacrity. He took a box of candies home to his wife, and paid forty cents for them, and the box was tied with a dainty bit of ribbon. Yes, and he also gave a nickel to the Lord?

Who is this Lord?

Who is He? Why, the man worships Him as Creator of the universe, the One who put the stars in order, and by whose immutable decree the heavens stand. Yes, he does, and he dropped a nickel in to support the cause of his Creator.

And the man knew that he was an atom in space, and he knew that the Almighty was without limitations, and knowing this, he put his hand in his pocket and picked out the nickel and gave it to the Lord.

And the Lord, being gracious, and slow to anger, and knowing our frame, did not slay the man for the meanness of his offering, but gives him this day his daily bread.

The nickel hid beneath a quarter that was given by a poor woman that takes in washing for a living.—Selected.

TRY THIS FOR YOUR HEALTH.

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism uric acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spent months at the Spas of Europe and were almost invariably benefited, or permanently relieved.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered, and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three weeks' treatment (two five-gallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if it fails to benefit your case I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a hundred, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is restoring thousands. It restored my health when my friends and physicians thought my case was incurable, and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win, you become a life-friend of the Spring. If I lose, I will be sorry for you, but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial and will gladly refund your money on request. Sign the following letter:

Shivar Springs,
Box 17E, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instruction contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

FAMILIAR HYMNS.

"Father, Whate'er of Earthly Bliss."

It is certainly true that the world owes its sweetest songs to those singers who have known the greatest tribulation. After all, this is not strange. As in the natural world the lily breaks from the mire, the rainbow arches the storm, the snow's white purity is wrapped in dark, cold clouds—so in the spiritual world beauty is born of pain. The inner history of almost every well-known hymn will bear witness to that truth.

A striking example is that familiar hymn, "Father, Whate'er of Earthly Bliss." In one sense it is not a notable composition: neither in music nor in literature can it claim a high place, though its fine simplicity and sweet brevity are very close to real artistic merit. It is the spirit of strong resignation, of certain faith and contented trust, breathing through every line, that makes the hymn truly great. And its worth is all the more forcibly brought home to us when we know that the lines were written by a life-long sufferer and are, therefore, the fine flower and fruit of disciplining grief.

Anne Steele, the author, was born over a century ago, the daughter of a Nonconformist minister of England. An accident in childhood laid the foundation for a life of physical suffering, and in her girlhood the sudden death of the man whom she was about to marry threw another black shadow over her days. The loss of her father followed, and the lonely invalid found herself thrown back utterly on the things that do not fail. She bore her lot with resignation and spent her time in doing good deeds and writing hymns and other poems. Dying at an advanced age, her last words were, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

One biographer, in outlining her life, paraphrases her own sweet hymn. Earthly bliss was denied her, he says, but she had a calm and thankful heart, and the presence of God shining through her journey, crowned at last that journey's end.—Southern Churchman.

Ever Salivated By Calomel? Horrible!

Calomel is quicksilver and acts like dynamite on your liver.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It makes you sick the next day; it loses you a day's work. Dodson's Liver Tone straightens you right up and you feel great. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.—Adv.

STRANGE BREADS OF OTHER LANDS.

Recent dispatches from Germany have referred to bread made of beechnuts and acorns. This serves to recall that in the earliest days both of these were put to the same usage. Acorns are still made into bread by certain Indian tribes, and in colonial times acorn meal was common among the natives. It is said that after being boiled several times the acorns lose their bitter taste, becoming sweet and wholesome.

Almost everything that grows has been called upon to make bread for man. In remote ages the Egyptians of the Nile Valley prepared bread from the seed of lotus flowers. These flowers grew abundantly in the mud of the river bottom, and when the annual overflow receded there was a harvest of lotus flowers, just as we harvest wheat to-day.

Early records of the North European peoples, particularly in Scandinavia, show that the poor subsisted partly on bread made of nothing more substantial than ground moss. But this had such slight nutritive value that it was almost worthless as a food. The Germans are eating potato flour bread, also a familiar makeshift of other days. When the ground potatoes are mixed with rye or wheat the bread is not unpalatable.

The Italians are adding to scant war rations with chestnut bread. The chestnuts of Italy and Spain are much larger than those of America, and chestnut bread is a familiar article of diet in both lands. We also hear much of banana flour, which is used to some degree in South America. Numerous attempts have been made to introduce it into this country, and it is now being manufactured commercially. If we may believe those who profess to know, banana flour is both nutritious and palatable.

The Mexicans and South Americans grind peas and beans into a meal, which is then made into little cakes and fried. All kinds of cereals are eaten as bread the world over, millet being one of the most popular in the east. Should the war continue for a number of years, it is just possible that the American people may be compelled to make the acquaintance of other breadstuffs than those to which they are accustomed.—The Mediator.

Fifty Against Two. It is not reasonable to expect two weeks of outing to overcome the effects of fifty weeks of confinement. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla along with you. It refreshes the blood, improves the appetite, makes sleep easy and restful.—Adv.

REVIVAL AT MASHULAVILLE, MISS.

We closed Sunday night, Sept. 29, a great revival at Mashulaville. Evangelist W. M. McIntosh did the preaching, bringing the gospel messages with power that brought conviction to the unsaved, and kindled a desire in the careless Christian to do his best for God and the Church.

R. E. Huston, of Greenville, Texas, led the choir. Brother Huston is a man of God, with a deep conviction, and a desire for souls. His heart is in his work. He knows how to sing and how to get others to sing.

The meeting resulted in 42 professing faith in Christ and a great spiritual strengthening of the Church, 9 members being added to our Church, and a number pledging themselves to join other churches at their first opportunity. GUY RAY, P. C.

P. S. We have had a good year over here with these good people. We have had 26 additions on profession of faith; we are behind some on our finances, but hope to have everything in full at Conference. G. R.

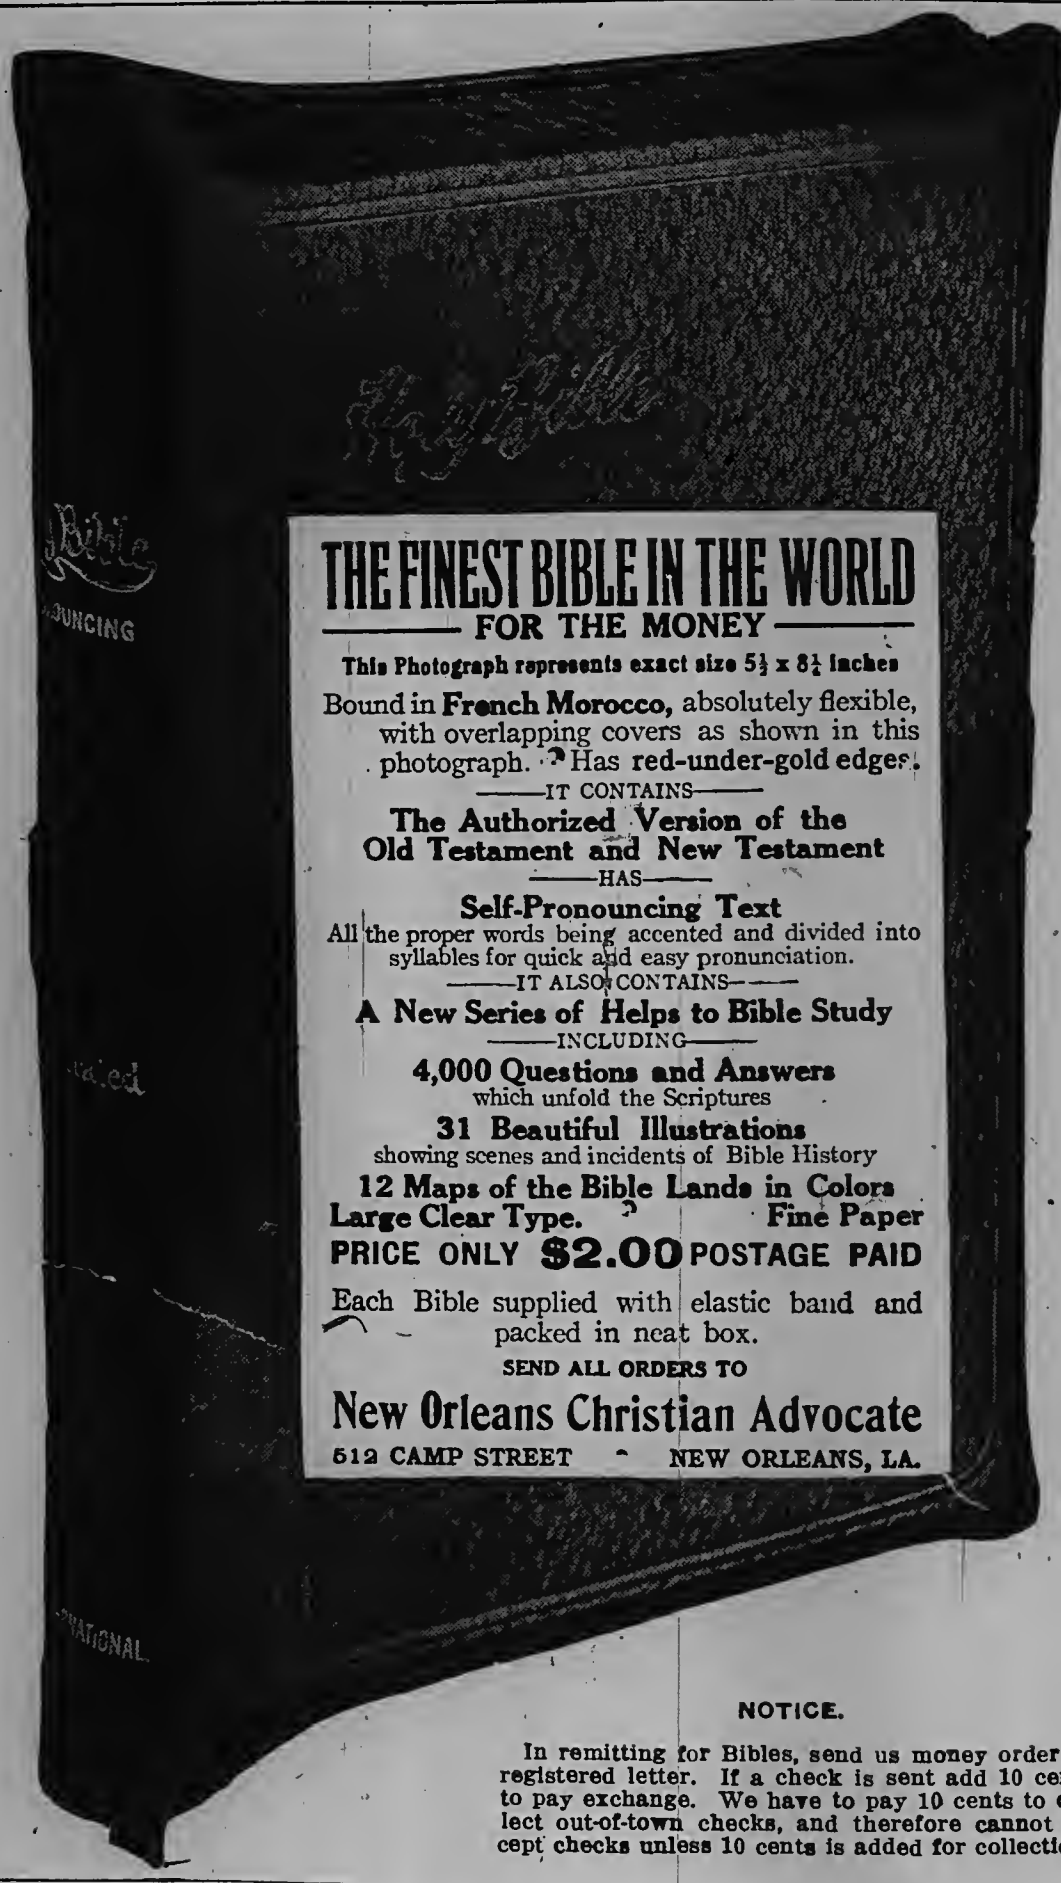
LOVE OF COUNTRY.

By Rev. E. Nash Broyles, Chairman of Fourth Liberty Loan Organization, Noxubee County, Mississippi.

The Fourth Liberty Loan Campaign is now on. The organization is endeavoring to reach every man and woman in the country with this opportunity for patriotic investment, sacrifice and service. Men and women of vision and national loyalty are giving the campaign their very best support. Big-souled men and women will not require that the solicitation be urgent.

There is much we can do for our Government now. If we have money, we can buy bonds. If we have credit, we are asked to lend the Government our credit or a good portion of it. If we are qualified, we are asked to give the Government our services. We believe a person has no right to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness under the American flag, nor do we believe a person has a right to transact business under the protection of the United States Government, unless said person is willing to discharge the obligation implied in the contract into which we enter with the Government when we subscribe to its Constitution.

Under the Constitution we are promised life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, preservation of life and property protection, in so far as the Government is able to comply, and in return we as citizens obligate ourselves to deliver to the Government our lives and property upon demand in case of national necessity. Common honesty requires that we satisfy our contract. Patriotic public opinion should compel us to be honest with our Government and meet squarely its demands.



The United States Government is not a thing apart. We are the Government, obeying the great principle of majority rule. The Government will be no stronger than its people, requires the loyalty of its people; and people who fall short of public duty in a time like this, or show reluctance in the sharing with our Government upon call of property, credit, purchasing power, on the basis of equity, manifest a shocking indifference to our governmental life; and extension of the policy in these dangerous times might meet with an interpretation in the minds of a serious public which would result in reaction hurtful to individuals or institutions living so much apart as not to hear or heed the government appeal.

We should regard the Liberty Loan Campaign as our opportunity to have a part in this, the greatest conflict the world has ever seen. It should be our ambition to have a part in this battle for righteousness. It should be our purpose to participate in some way in the battle which shall save our republic and bring about world democracy. The honor of participation in that great victory is of more value than individual life or property.

When the victory shall have been won and the terms of peace concluded, the most glorious portion of the world's history will have been written. We want to share in the glory. Can it possibly be the desire of any man or woman of normal faculties to live through these times a non-participant, a non-patriot? Our light affliction which is but for a moment is as nothing compared to that great and eternal weight of glory which shall grow out of this contest in the realization of world democracy and in the preservation of God's Kingdom.

One day the boys will come back home. Some of them will be shot to pieces, living with clear recollection of comrades, brave comrades who died heroically on the battlefield. These men will have made the supreme sacrifice. Some of them will be buried under little white crosses in the battle scarred war zone; others with empty sleeves and scarred bodies and artificial limbs will remind us continually of gallant charges and heroic suffering and sacrifice. How can we meet these boys when they come back? What have we done to make possible this victory for which they shall have given so much? Let us answer with candor, our money, our credit, our services, our life belong to our Government. We offered them all. When we have done this, we shall look with a new joy upon our returning heroes. When we have done what we could, we shall grasp with a new love our standard, kiss with new fervor our flag. When we have toiled and suffered with loyal patriotic purpose, then shall we rejoice with the nation and enjoy the new peace and security.

THE PIONEER.

The pioneer is a rare spirit. He ventures joyously into unknown fields. Dangers there may be he knows, but he is unafraid. The loneliness of the way has no terrors for him. He does not forget the old associations, but he cannot be satisfied with what has become commonplace. The charm of the unexplored draws him like a magnet, and the eager spirit of inquiry drives him constantly forward. Across the rivers, over the mountains, into the vast wildernesses where the silence of the ages broods, he pushes his way. He sends back reports to his satisfied friends of the hardships he has encountered and of the difficulties he has overcome, but there is no word of discouragement and no longing for the easy paths of the long-settled community. Day after day his eyes look upon wonders that men have not seen before, and his heart thrills with emotions that no plodder can feel. Steadily onward he goes, knowing in his soul that he is adding new domains to the cherished possessions of oncoming generations. But he does not know that those generations will build monuments to his memory and celebrate his deeds in song and story. The enlargement of his own horizon and the satisfaction of his own eager desire for knowledge and the sure attainment of that which is beyond, though they constitute a legacy to all mankind, are for him their own sufficient reward.

Thus it is with the pioneer in the realm of the intellectual and the spiritual. He rises above crystallized conceptions of truth and conventional statements of fact. His eager spirit soars, like the eagle, into the vast, limitless stretches of potential knowledge, not afraid to look the sun in the eye, not afraid that his strength will fail, not afraid that he will pass the confines of a sphere beyond which God has said, "Thou shalt not go." The infinite longings of his own soul will not be mocked, he knows, by a barrier placed by the Infinite One. As he glances earthward he may see multitudes of trembling mortals lifting their hands in terror and crying, "Hold!" But as he turns his eyes heavenward he sees God holding out his hands and saying, "Come!" And upward he struggles into a brighter light of revelation and a fuller knowledge of truth and a closer fellowship with God. And those multitudes below follow in the way he has gone, and themselves come into possession of that knowledge that makes them more truly the sons and daughters of the Almighty.

THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

The doctrine of the immanence of God is not an abstract theological conception; it is one of the most practical truths of experimental religion. God is with us not in theory only, but in very fact. The heavens declare his glory and the firmament shows his handiwork. And these revelations of his presence are so unmistakable and so convincing that only the wilfully skeptical can call them in question. But there is more satisfying revelation of a present God than these, to the man whose heart is fixed to do righteousness: the sense of His presence and the glory of His being flood the soul. That strange warming of the heart that has been the experience of so many Christian men and women grows out of contact with the great Soul of the universe. It is the result, not of an impersonal influence but of a personal presence. God makes himself known to his own by an intimate companionship that is as real as when friend communes with friend.

The privilege of our daily life, which is also something of a problem, is to adjust ourselves to the actual presence of the Infinite One. We may forget it—but we should not; at times, we may resent it because of the grossness of our own feelings—we do so at our peril. "Thou, God, seest me" may strike terror to our souls when it should make us happy. If we connect with the idea of God's constant presence the idea of his infinite love, we shall magnify the privilege and solve the problem.

THE UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN.

Shortly after the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign closes, another campaign will begin for a very much smaller sum of money but for a purpose that is of the utmost importance. The Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the National Catholic War Council (Knights of Columbus), The Jewish Welfare Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army will unite in raising $170,500,000 for the support of the work carried on by these organizations in behalf of the men enlisted in military service. This campaign will begin on November 11 and continue one week.

There can be no question as to the value of the service rendered by these agencies in promoting the welfare of the men in camp in this country and in service overseas. The testimony of our highest miltary authorities and of the men themselves is unmistakable on this point. The numberless things that our soldiers need to have done for them that cannot be provided for by the Government, have been undertaken by these organizations in a patriotic, self-sacrificing way that has won the respect and admiration of the whole world. The conveniences and comforts of home-life have been supplied in as large measure as possible to our men, many of whom have, for the first time, been placed in unfamiliar surroundings. Not only has physical welfare of the men been provided for, but their religious and spiritual needs have been carefully looked after as well. The morale that has distinguished the American fighting forces among the armies of the world is largely attributable to the magnificent work of the Y. M. C. A. especially.

Considerable dissatisfaction has been expressed in some quarters because a Roman Catholic organization has been allowed to maintain its own work in the camps and has been included in the united campaign, while the work of the Protestant Churches, carried on by camp pastors appointed by the different denominations, has received the disapproval of the War Department to the extent, at least, of an official order greatly modifying the conditions under which camp pastors may do their work. There is a feeling that, in all justice, the Roman Catholic Church should not have been given a privilege that was denied the Protestant Church. We confess that we share this feeling. We think it was unwise, to say the least, to place the National Catholic War Council upon the same footing, so far as the collection and distribution of funds are concerned, as the great non-sectarian organization, the Y. M. C. A., for example.

President Wilson, however, in giving his approval to the united campaign, did so on the ground that all these organizations are doing a common service, and on the ground of the practical necessity of limiting our appeals for funds in such way that two or three comprehensive campaigns shall take the place of a series of independent calls upon the generosity of the country. At the same time, the President makes it perfectly clear that he is not seeking in any way to interfere with the religious convictions of our people. In his letter to the Fosdick Commission he says: "In inviting these organizations to give this new evidence of their patriotic co-operation, I wish it distinctly understood that their compliance with this request will not in any sense imply the surrender on the part of any of them of its distinctive character and autonomy, because I fully recognize the fact that each of them has its own traditions, principles, and relationships which it properly prizes and which, if preserved and strengthened, make possible the largest service."

We adopt this point of view. We agree with Dr. John R. Mott that the work to be done is too great to allow any differences of opinion that we may hold to interfere with it. Dr. Mott himself, according to his signed statement, which appeared recently in the Advocate, as well as in the press generally, vigorously opposed the merger by which all war work organizations were included in one financial campaign. But when President Wilson gave his approval to the plan, he patriotically submerged his own feelings for the sake of the cause, and he is throwing himself energetically and enthusiastically into the campaign.

We cannot afford to do anything less. The practical welfare and efficiency of our soldiers is above every other consideration. We would not have one of them suffer because of any personal opinion we may hold. As patriotic citizens, we have supported the policies of our great President thus far, and we should continue to do so until the victory has been won. For the present, we should do all we can in behalf of the United War Work Campaign. After the war is over, there will be time and opportunity enough to consider matters that may safely be held in abeyance now.

Sanctified afflictions are an evidence of our adoption; we do not prune dead trees to make them fruitful, nor those which are planted in a desert; but such as belong to the garden and possess life.—Southern Churchman.

THE WAY OUT.

By Wm. C. Allen.

The tragedy of life is sin. The problem of the age is sin. It rears its ugly head within us. It disturbs our happiness. Theological discussions as to its origin and nature are superfluous. It is futile to deny its existence—its bitter fruits are everywhere. We hate it, we cry against it, yet too often refuse to get from under its baleful influence and power. Why?

Sin is wilful transgression of the divine law. We read our Bibles, and particularly the pure teachings of the New Testament, or watch for the stirrings of the Holy Spirit within us, if we want to learn what sin is. Do some inquire, "How shall I recognize the Spirit of God?" An answer is found in the fact that God cannot contradict Himself, and impressions stimulating us to actions in harmony with New Testament admonitions may be acknowledged as the voice of God Himself calling us to righteousness. Obedience to this simple rule will save us from many bitter experiences. How generous is our Creator to grant us such light in darkness!

Our Lord came into the world not just to give us a new profession but a new nature. Let those who read these lines ponder on this. He was crucified once that we might not crucify Him again. Do we talk about His teachings and fail to live by their spirit? Do we speak about love and fail to live the life of love? Do we bear Jesus' cross in this life that we may wear His crown in the next? If in these matters we do not accept His obligations, are we not sinners? If we admit our lapses, there is hope for us.

Two facts stand out vividly as the vital experience of those who go to Jesus for relief from sin. One is emphasized in the statement, "The blood of Jesus, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." We cannot to-day see the blood that flowed from the pierced side and mangled feet, but we may observe the marvelous effect of simple belief in it. Under tropic skies and by frozen seas men and women have been reborn, purified, made happy in the acceptance of it. We see that the old bad passions have disappeared—Jesus reigns within them. Observers believe that the Lamb of God who was slain in their behalf has taken away their sin. The second reality is that much sustaining spiritual assistance is given those who seek Jesus as Savior. "My grace is sufficient for thee," is no meaningless promise. In many lands, beneath many shades of human skin, in the mansions of the wealthy, in the abodes of the poor, I have seen Christ's transformed people loving Him, dedicated to Him, faithful to Him through days of peace or pain, and all witnessing to the imperishable beauty of their Lord's keeping power. So it comes about that it pays even the hard-hearted, the hypocritical, the proud, the deceitful, the dissolute, the little offender or the great transgressor to repent and cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" Are we willing to humillate ourselves and do this?

Some of us wish we could lead others out of darkness into the consecrated light. This we cannot do—we can only point the way. The despicable passions, the foul diseases, the Sabbath-breakings, the often unholy pleasures of the age testify to the accursed forces of evil in our midst—these justify the indignation of a loving Father toward His wayward children. Have not many of us individual responsibility in this matter? Are we always clear and clean? What is the way out of this materialistic mess? To whom shall we go? Is there not a Way—is it not Jesus? Are we personally willing, with genuine contrition for past acts, to cast ourselves upon God's mercy and resolve to live the life that Jesus asks? Let us go while the door stands wide open—the night sweeps on apace—tomorrow may be all too late.

MONEY FOR CHURCH WAR WORK.

By Rev. E. O. Watson, D.D., Secretary, War Work Commission, M. E. Church, South.

Now and then we get a letter saying that in view of the recent order of the government concerning camp pastors, the need for money for the war work of the Church is not apparent. This is a grave and surprising error.

The vision of our Church concerning war work runs far beyond the work of the camp pastor. It includes a present plan of reinforcement in winning the war, and a plan of world reconstruction the foundations of which, in many instances, must be laid now. Great as is the camp pastor work, it is only a small part of the great program our Church must carry forward to be worthy her place in the field of service.

First of all, there is the equipment of chaplains. No man, we firmly believe, has ever before enjoyed so great an opportunity for spiritual service as the chaplain in the American army to-day. The Church must stand back of him and furnish all equipment needful to do his great work in the most effective way. Our Church has already put forward more than one hundred men for this work, and will have to put forward at least another hundred to supply the demand of the rapidly increasing army under the new draft. These men must have equipment. The Government pays a salary that is less than many received before entering the chaplaincy, but more than others have been receiving. Yet when the changed conditions of life are considered it is a real financial sacrifice for nine out of ten married men who go into this service. These men cannot equip themselves with all that is needed adequately to do their work. Initial equipment expense estimated at $250 each, with annual expense in carrying on the work of $300 each, calls for an expenditure of $100,000, and could be doubled without wasting a cent. The Church must provide this. Other churches are making such provision. Ours can not lag behind.

Then, no matter what is or is not done in the matter of camp pastor work, there should be in every city adjacent to our large camps church headquarters, keeping open house, with a pastor, and a church mother, at least, attracting our boys on leave, ministering to them, affording a place for them to meet friends from home, and elsewhere, tying them to the Church, and rendering service in myriad ways. However necessary work inside, there is no work more imperative, if we would save our boys, than work done for them when on leave in the city. Think of the great camps located within the bounds of Southern Methodism. Think of the cost of adequate service in the cities near these camps, and even in rural communities nearby. Remember, too, that the camp pastor order does not affect the navy and marine camps. There are a dozen or more such camps where the headquarters idea should be developed and where also, without let or hindrance, the camp pastor work may be continued. Provision can and should be made, too, for tours of all the camps by some of our Bishops, our best evangelists, and leading men with a message for men. There will be no difficulty about getting a hearing for these. The writer often, when camp pastor at Camp Jackson, had the privilege of carrying into the camp the vocal teacher and violin teacher of Columbia College with a quartette of picked pupils from each of these departments. We were not only permitted but begged to go from ward to ward of the hospital for a twenty minutes' service in each ward of song, violin music, prayer and gospel message. Thousands of our young men heard with joy, and with shining faces begged that we come again, and assured us that they would hear that sweet music in the struggle of battle on the "other side." Such groups could and should be organized to visit all our camps. We can get volunteers, but the tour itself will cost money. With all volunteer teams from our college could do, there is yet need for at least one team of such workers, the best talent in consecrated Methodism, to be regularly engaged for this work under the direction of our Commission.

Another great field of war work has just begun to appeal to us. The Government is establishing great munition and ship building plants. Like magic these spring up almost over night. At Nitro, W. Va., such a city has sprung up accommodating fifty thousand. The writer visited the plant last Sunday, and had the privilege of speaking to 1500 men representing at least a dozen nationalities. The hearing accorded and the response to a gospel message was the most remarkable ever witnessed and will live always in memory with yearning for its repetition. We are trying to get a footing there. This is army work. It is at the very foundation of winning the war. Work on a large scale and on right lines there will not only help win the war, but lay foundations for world rebuilding when the war is over.

We could go on and on with such instances. They abound. One more, in this connection. At Quantico, Va., there is a Marine camp of some 10,000, a little town alongside and a shipbuilding plant just starting up beyond the town—all in easy reach. We have a church organization there, a little 20 by 30 building, and a pastor that serves in connection with a large circuit. We have there the great opportunity of building a real community church working plant, putting an outstanding man in charge, and ministering to a growing town, a shipbuilding plant and a camp. We have the right of way. There is no other church there. Are we going to lag back for lack of a few dollars?

Then look "Overthere." Bishop Lambuth, Dr. Selecman, and Rev. G. C. Emmons are now in France. The purpose of their mission is ministry to our boys over there, but the far-reaching vision of our great missionary Bishop is the establishment of future work in France. One chaplain now in France writes: "What a wonderful field France will be after the war in which to sow the seed of evangelical truth. I have been most wonderfully impressed with this fact as from day to day the citizens ask me about the Protestant religion." We must establish headquarters there, and equip in such way as shall enable us to render a great ministry to our boys coming and going, and, at the same time, lay the foundations for a great work in the future. Then look on into Belgium, and on into Russia, and into Italy, and even into Germany.

With all this, be it remembered the work of camp pastor is not ended. Arrangements have already been made in some of our camps for continuing the work under far better conditions than before the order was issued. The Government has been "pestered" no little under the old order of camp pastor work. Many unauthorized men got a footing as camp workers, some of these made all sorts of demands upon the military authorities, some even talked the poison gas of peace, and it is stated that somewhere German propaganda posed under the guise of camp pastor. The Government had to get control of this situation. A weeding out was needful. The recent order will accomplish this. A strong committee has the matter of modified form under advisement and will, within the next few days, lay the whole matter before the War Department. It is matter of rejoicing that our Government, as no Government ever has, recognizes the place and power of the gospel in creating and maintaining the morale of a soldier. We are assured that in some way, under proper regulation, all proper agencies for religious ministry will be provided for.

All in all, a great vision of present and future ministry in winning the war and ushering in the fulness of the Kingdom of God is before us. A great and effectual door is open. The fields are white unto the harvest. We need men and money, the best of the one, and the most of the other, that our great Church may serve mankind as never before. The brand of Cain is now "SLACKER." The Church to-day that withholds men or money for this work will bear the brand, and bearing it have no place in the future.

A NEW AGREEMENT CONCERNING CAMP PASTORS.

The following agreement has been reached by Committee in Conference concerning special ministry to enlisted officers and men:

Attention is called to No. 4 and No. 5, War Departments general memorandum A, G, 68044, subject, "Services of Clergymen as Camp Pastors and Voluntary Chaplains," which permit the following plan for directing, hereafter, the religious work among our soldiers.

A. The importance of training our Chaplains for service overseas must be emphasized.

B. The help of clergymen, to whom the Churches of America have looked for inspiration and leadership, is appreciated and an arrangement is desired by which such men, barred perhaps by advanced age or personal responsibilities from entering the army as Chaplains, may continue to help at the training camps.

C. The War Department desires the best efforts of all the Churches—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—to influence experienced and capable men who are eligible to apply at once for commissions as Chaplains.

D. The names of such men as those classified by paragraph "B" may be submitted by all the Churches to the Executive Committee of the General War Time Commission of the Churches, or similar committees representing the Catholic and Jewish Churches, and by these committees a certified list may be furnished for the use of the War Department.

E. The attention of all Chaplains will be called, by the War Department, to these certified lists and they will be permitted to invite, with the approval of their commanding officer, such representative men to visit the camp for the purpose of helping the Chaplains with their work with enlisted men and officers.

F. All clergymen invited to camps under this order shall report to the Chaplain in charge of such services and shall proceed in co-operation with, and under the direction of said Chaplain.

G. The term of service of any clergymen under this order in any camp or post shall be determined by the Chaplain in charge, with approval of the War Department.

H. The War Department looks with favor upon efforts of the various churches, located in cities adjacent to camps, to shape their services with special reference to needs of the soldiers on leave, and urges all Chaplains to call the attention of their men to such services when provided.

I. That an important result very much desired and expected under the plan proposed, will be the assurance that the visiting clergymen will keep the "folks back home" informed of conditions in the camps.

BISHOP LAMBUTH IN FRANCE.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Dr. C. C. Selecman, and Rev. G. C. Emmons have been hard at work in France for some weeks. Dr. Selecman, after careful study of the work and situation generally, has returned to this country and will enter at once upon service representing the War Work Commission at Annual Conferences beyond the Mississippi.

Bishop Lambuth has decided to remain somewhat longer, possibly through the winter, in France. He is rendering large service "Over there" in behalf of the Negro troops, and especially in contributing to the spiritual life and service of the chaplains and other workers. He is also seeking just the right opening for definite work by our Church. He writes that it takes far more time on that side to get things going properly than is required here.

Extracts from the Bishop's last letter will be of great interest to all, and are herewith appended.

"The more I look back upon the work of camp pastor and its opportunities, the more I am convinced that it is an opportunity for great service. I am anxious that the relation and all it involves should be thoroughly understood and carefully defined. It must be handled with great care."

(The new order of the War Department provides a plan that can be administered effectively. We are planning a corps of visiting clergymen for the camps, and will everywhere develop, as rapidly as is consistent with efficient service, the opening of headquarters in the cities adjacent to camps with pastors in charge to minister especially to soldiers on leave.)

"The chaplains are widely scattered and encounter the difficulty of having to minister to thousands instead of hundreds. They are good men and true. I am not speaking simply of our men, but of the body as a whole. There are a few who let down and fall to measure up to expectations and demands, but the proportion is not greater than in the pastorate at home.

"The attitude of our boys is one full of encouragement. They appreciate a strong, clear statement of gospel truth. They love their country and cling to its ideals. While some, perhaps many, may yield to the fierce temptations to which army life in a foreign land exposes them, I believe that the large majority of the men will return with a deepened sense of thankfulness for our institutions, our churches and our homes. It is immensely important, however, that we who are here should bring every effort toward strengthening the convictions of these splendid men, and steer them safely back to their own shores and to the home neighborhood where the bonds of friendship and love can be renewed."

Conversation with Dr. Selecman showed clearly that our Bishop is doing great work in France, and has many more calls than even his wonderful energy can stand up under. We thank God for such a man to minister over there, and all the

MEETING OF THE BISHOPS AT NOEL MEMORIAL CHURCH.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

The Board of Stewards of the Noel Memorial Church last spring invited the College of Bishops to hold their fall meeting in Shreveport, and tendered the use of this church, as the place of meeting. The invitation was cordially seconded by the Board of the First Church, and also by the Chamber of Commerce, through a letter from Mr. F. T. Whited, president of the body. At the meeting in Atlanta during the session of the General Conference, this invitation was accepted by the Bishops, and November 1, 2 and 3 set as the date of the meeting.

Plans are being made for the meeting, and it is being looked forward to as an occasion of inspiration to the Methodism of Shreveport and of this section. It is probable that twelve or thirteen of the Bishops will be present, several of the College being in foreign countries and several others, including two or three of the superannuated Bishops, not being able to come for other reasons. It is probable that a meeting in the interest of the Missionary Centenary, to be addressed by several of the Bishops, will be part of the program, and many of the pulpits of the city will be filled by the visitors on Sunday. Others will preach dedication sermons in near-by communities.

When these distinguished visitors come among us, they will find the Methodism of Shreveport in a prosperous and growing condition. The First Church is closing a prosperous year under the pastorate of Rev. A. G. Shankle, and will show a considerable gain in membership for the year.

The Noel Memorial Church, the meeting place of the Bishops, is fast coming to be one of the outstanding churches of the city and of Louisiana Methodism. Founded about ten years ago through the faithful and efficient pioneer labors of Rev. R. J. Harp, and housed for a few years in a temporary building, loaned by Mr. J. S. Noel, it now occupies a building hardly surpassed by any in the Louisiana Conference in beauty and convenience. The large auditorium is flanked by a spacious Sunday school room, surrounded by class rooms on two floors, all opening into the main Sunday school room. A spacious basement gives ample room for several departments of the school and for social gatherings. This building, erected at a total cost of nearly $75,000, was given to the congregation by Mr. J. S. Noel in memory of his son, J. S. Noel, Jr., and forms a worthy monument. The present building has been the home of the congregation for the past five years.

J. S. Noel, Jr., Memorial M. E. Church, South, Shreveport, La., where the fall meetings of the Bishops will be held, November 1-3.

The list of pastors during the short history of the church is as follows: Rev. R. J. Harp, 1908; Rev. J. G. Snelling, 1909-10; Rev. F. A. Downs, part of 1911; Rev. Felix R. Hill, Jr., part of 1911, and 1912; Rev. W. W. Armstrong, 1913; Rev. E. K. Means, 1914; Rev. R. W. Tucker, 1915-16; Rev. W. W. Drake, 1917-18. For several years past, there has been steady growth in membership, in Sunday school attendance and in financial offerings. The present membership lacks only a little of being 500, showing an increase for the present year of 85 and for last year of 73. It is expected that the Annual Conference report will show a membership of over 500. With a splendid location in the midst of a growing residence section, the church has a great opportunity for spiritual and material development.

Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport Methodism and the Methodism of the Louisiana Conference extend a hearty welcome to our chief pastors for their fall meeting.

Church will pray for him and Brother Emmons, who works with him as Timothy with Paul, that all strength and blessing may be theirs for this great ministry, and that they may he returned in safety when they have fulfilled their great mission.

NOT IMPOSSIBLE.

By Rev. A. A. Bernard.

Truly, we are fallen on wondrous days! The amelioratlng justification of the burden of battle in the days of the ancients was interpreted principally in terms of the hope of material gain and the glories and splendors of conquest. The homes from which the conquered receded were to be their homes no more—with the home gone nothing remains. The howling wilderness shall ever be the howling wilderness, with the constant increase of its shrleking fauna. And so the bleak sands of the barren shore, kissed perpetually by the liquid lip of the sea in an endless, meaningless ebb and flow, shall ever he the scene of either the advent or recession of the god of day.

Things have been changed in the last two centurles, and we are standing for the changes that are coming. We are no longer drenching the earth with human blood—that whole earth that is not worth one human soul—for the hope of driving, further on, the stoop that marks the borderland, but we are glving what we are and what we have, to maintain an ideal ever pure and undefiled. The virtue of our effort is being crowned wlth a growing confidence on the part of a struggling mass that has come to realize that this ideal is no idle dream of ours, but has long been the practical hasal principle of our daily life. Out of thls awful struggle we shall come to learn that the observance of an ideal, unto the uttermost sacrificial intent of the heart, is not the greatest debt the trial balance sheets of life are showing that wc owe to our day and that of future races. Beautiful things of every element are worthy of observance, hut notwithstanding, in the observance alone of them, men have lost their liherties and their lives. Semething more than simple observance is needed. Under the miasmatic lethargy of a false security, men and women have sat at the bargain counters of compromise and bartered out of their obligations every yestige of the potent command, "contend;" and of the supreme command, "go," with all its multiplled inferences and certain possibilities. Liberty is the synonym for struggle. Where you find liberty you can find the history of a struggle writ ln letters of hlood. Liberty that is won in the vortex of struggle cannot be preserved in the calm of lethargy. If our fathers have not struggled in the propagation of that which we have, then their children must struggle for its rescue, hc it economic, civil, political or religious.

Many of the things that men have ever fought for were fraught with little or no hope. Some one was there to help them catch the vision of their ideal, though meager it may have proved to be. Some one has led the race to-day to believe that the ohligation to life is settled if it makes an effort to satlsfy the cravings of its appetites and appetences. And so we have all helieved this to some extent and have all tried, within this circle, to round out our day's task. But as I have intimated, the war has not only broken the bonds of our local and national circles, hut its lesson is going to result in a new ideal to be attained. Is there nothing higher to he achieved than the plaudits that come of victory in a field where hosts are, and have fallen? If men can struggle and suffer and lose, many of them, while few win, should we not tell them, then, that there is a field in which, and an ldeal for which, they may all strive and all win the crown, and that the incentive shall be found in who shall be the first to win his crown? Heretofore we have all striven for self, in that the best of us have had the great Partner only on a tenth basls. Now there is a field of wondrous need and of responsive gratitude that stands in view at every portal! Shall we not transform our efforts from those of laymen of a common destiny into those of lay-ambassadors of the Prince of Peace?

We believe that we have found the moving, transforming genius of our age, our ideal—the Christ of God. Ideals, like everything else, grow by propagation. We have been working at the propagation of the gospel for years, and we have come away from the struggle, while with an undying confidence, yet, somehow, with a wonderment that has engaged our silent meditations, and have found our consolation in the thought that perhaps it is not God's good time. For years and years our faithful missionaries have stood as the silent, prophetic outposts of our great religion; through all the long, dark night and blight of sin, have they been standing. Every message they send back is a Macedonian call. "Oh, when will the Church respond!" More missionaries? That is one way. We have been working less than one quarter of our force. For every missionary that we send with the Bible in his hand, four others should go with plows and tools in theirs.

This article is an answer as to what I felt after I had talked with a man who found himself too old for war; too old for the Y. M. C. A., and finally satisfied his mind by informing our Government that he was at its disposal. I came away thinkling, and on my way home found the last issue of the Voice in my mail. I read all the articles in it under the heading, "The Regions Beyond." Read them. Then I read the article, "Facts That Should Make Us Ashamed." Figuratlvely speaking, do as I did when you have read lt, go out on the ash heap and pile ashes of shame on your head and keep them there tlll you get a new vlslon. No wonder I am trying to tell you what I thought, trying to bring you the vlslon of our wondrous day.

Here is my friend wlth no place in the regular ranks of the armies of our country. Somehow we may call him a reserve. Then I thought of the multitudes of reserves in the camps of the armies of God. Oh, for the multitude of such that are struggling, with no hope other than the struggle, no reward other than the bread that goes to feed the body! Oh, that they, many of them families, would place themselves at the disposal of the Church and go out, side by side with our missionaries, a company of lay missionarles, and settle in the hills and valleys and prairies of ignorant, and no, not down-trodden, but of mentally deprived and spirltually robbed generations, settle there and become the nucleuses of gatherings for the perlodical coming of the missionary on the border lands of civilization! Our forefathers struck out into dense wildernesses all alone and became the nucleuses of an economic, social and political civilization. That we might have men and women who would throw themselves into such a great Christianizing movement! What will the Church do with her reserves —her great lay army? We believe if she calls for this army there will be as large and as generous responses as there are from the ministerial sections. Why could I not be an emigrant for God and build a home for his sake in a forelgn land, even as we expect our missionaries to do, and even as my forefather built for me by his toil ln this land?

Is it impossible?

READING BETWEEN THE LINES No. 2.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D.

After reading in the Advocate that Rev. J. Loyd Decell, of McComb, had recently undergone an operation for appendicitis, I hesitate to read any more beween the lines. Had I dreamed of such a serious result, I should have written under, "This Is a Little Nonsense," &c.

However, I must insist that there is much work as well as fun in being host of a Methodist Conference, for it requires a great number of cabinet meetings, the hearing of a great many special requests (pro and con), and much diplomacy to meet all conditions and fully satisfy hosts as well as guests. When there has been request from half a score of homes for Brother Smith of High Steeple, it brings a sigh of relief to hear, "I'll take anybody;" but what a disappointment when, after locating Brother Particular, to have a request, "Send me anyhody but Brother Particular."

Yes, and sometimes it is the judgment of the committee that Brother Three-Score should be located nearer the place of meeting, but Sister Boss, with her, "If you don't give me Brother Three-Score, I won't entertain anybody"—spoils the plan. So Brother Three-Score must suffer the exposures that Brother Two-Score is more able to meet. But how thoughtful is Sister Lydia, with her, "Give me the old men, because I live near the church," and oh, how Brother Barnabas comforts when he 'phones, "Send me all those that nobody else wants!"—I shall ever hold one fine fellow in remembrance who sent for me to come to his office (and at the courthouse, too,) just to say "Go to—(which was the best boarding house in town) and make provision for all the left-overs." My, my, how I did sleep that night; such a sleep as had not greeted me for a fortnight.

Oh, exultant Decell, rejoicing Barry, "Happy Bond!"—but not too quick, Buds, here comes the brides for us;" then another: "Dear Brother Decell, I must ask you to keep a secret—Miss Mary Sweet and I are to be married, very quietly, on Sunday before Conference opens, and I wish you would put us close to the church, as the weather might be inclement and she is not very strong." Up goes Brother Beatus, for Sister Eunice and Grandmother Lois have said, "No Conference brides for us;" then another, "Dear Brother Decell, I am sorry to give you trouble, but my wife has been going to Conference so long that the year won't seem complete unless I can bring her. We can put up with anything, and we will be on the afternoon train Tuesday." Oh, how lucky it is to have Sister Electa who loves everybody!—but, "Brother, I'm sorry, but I'm full to the last cot." Letter No. 3: "Dear Brother Decell, I shall bring my wife and three children and the nurse. You know I have served a very poor charge this year, and we shall expect you to make provision for us in some nice home, for we are used to good entertainment by our people." Did it thunder, or was it a stroke of paralysis? No, that's some of Dan Kelley's wild Irishman tricks.

But the fun is not all over yet, and here they come: "Where do I go, Brother Decell?" "What's your name?" "Tardy." "Tardy? Not on my list." "Why, didn't Colonel Cavalry give you my name for local deacon? and here's Brother Also for local elder." Great beads of sweat! only one cot at the parsonage, and what is that with two big brothers on hand?

But enough, enough, lest Barry and Bond, too, are rushed to the operating table. Now, since I have taken in hand to write of Conference entertainments, and more especially to trace many things, let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: "No kicking; everybody sit steady;" while to Decell, Barry, et al., "Trust to luck, trust to luck! Stare fate in the face, and your heart will be easy if it's in the right place." Ho, for McComb! We're coming two hundred strong, unless the Flu protests!

WHAT CHRIST HAS DONE.

A Christian worker in the mountains of Kentucky was visiting the penitentiary. There he found a man imprisoned on the charge of murder. He tried to reach his heart with the Gospel story, but seemingly without fail. On one visit the man spoke of his little boy. The evangelist saw his opportunity. "My brother," said he, "what would you be willing to do for that child of yours?" The rugged mountaineer's eyes flashed. With tremendous intensity, he answered, "Minister, I'd stand between that boy and hell!" "Well, my brother," quietly replied the other, "that is exactly what Christ has done for you."—Exchange.

NOTICE TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Though I have recently undergone an operation for an aggravated case of appendicitis, and on account of certain after effects it will be several weeks before I regain my strength, this will in no wise interfere with an adequate provision for the Conference.

No pastor ever had a truer and more loyal membership than the pastor of Centenary, McComb, has, and they, with physician and nurses, have been everything to me they could be. In fact, the friends of all the churches and town have been.

Our Committee are composed of capable and willing people, who, with Brother Barry, seem eager to reduce my labors as much as possible.

Dr. Pinson writes that the General Board of Missions will request that the Conference set apart the second day, Thursday, December 5, as "Centennial Day," exercises beginning Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and concluding with the night service. Of course, the taking up of two hours of the Conference session, and the setting aside of a "standing rule" relative to the evening preaching services, will require Conference action, but it is all but certain that the request will be granted for the full time, and I feel safe in urging the brethren who are lay leaders of the various churches to plan to be here for the full day of Thursday, December 5. My information is that Team No. 4, which is composed of Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Dr. J. J. Stowe, Mrs. Bessie W. Lipscomb, and two of our returned missionaries, will have charge of the Centennial Program for our Conference. This is a strong team and it will be worth while for us all to emphasize it and make the day a red letter day for our Conference.

Brethren, let us continue to pray so that the coming of our Conference will be a New Pentecost where we all shall receive such refreshings of the Holy Spirit as shall give us a larger vision of our opportunities and possibilities; and make real the fellowship of Him who is our Savior, and blessed forevermore. Your brother,

J. LOYD DECELL.

A GENEROUS PROPOSITION.

Dear Advocate: For a long while, my heart and thought have been enlisted in the interest of world evangelism, orphans' homes and funds for superannuated preachers. And now, since our country has been cruelly forced into an expensive war, she needs from her citizens much treasure, and she has asked for a loan of a small part of their surplus, issuing to them her interest-bearing bonds, the very best and most admirable collateral security on earth.

To my mind, it is an opportune time for all good, loyal Methodist citizens to contribute to at least two different endowment funds, our Orphans' Home, at Ruston, and our superannuated preachers' fund; and the Methodist Missionary Centenary is not to be overlooked. We should buy liberally of these Liberty Bonds, and then donate one, or even a dozen, to each of these three different interests.

As a starter, or nest egg, for this proposition, I will this week buy a $50 U. S. bond for each of the three aforementioned funds, and leave them on deposit in the bank of Baton Rouge, Baton Rouge, La., subject to call of legal claimant.

I trust that this notice will cause not a few of our liberal and warm-hearted members to become awakened and deeply concerned, so that immediate co-operation will be given cheerfully to this much-needed and practical scheme for the management of our great family institutions. It is incumbent upon us, as loyal citizens of both Church and State, to provide such benevolent funds against times of emergency.

May God's blessings attend the effort.

Patience is not willingness to be satisfied with less than the best; it is the determination not to give up until the best is attained.—Selected.

MISSIONARY INSTITUTES IN SEASHORE DISTRICT CALLED OFF.

Owing to the prevailing epidemic of influenza, and quarantine regulations, the Missionary Institutes appointed to be held in the interest of the Centenary Movement at Lumberton, Gulfport and Pascagoula, are hereby called off for the present.

I trust every pastor will push the Campaign of Intercession and Stewardship as soon as conditions will justify. Some have done this already, and I am sure others will do it. I feel confident that our district will not fall behind in this forward movement of the Church.

I am sure every pastor, and our good and loyal laymen in the district, will diligently look after all matters pertaining to a successful closing of our financial obligations for the Conference year. The time is short, and what is done must be done quickly.

Brethren, let's do our best, and certainly not fall below our record in the past. Sincerely,

J. R. JONES, P. E.

TO ALL PATRONS OF THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

We wish to ask that you help us bear our burdens.

If your orders are not delivered as promptly as you wish, please remember that this is a time of war and business cannot be transacted as under normal conditions.

We cannot get material promptly. For instance: we have had delivered during the past week a shipment of paper which was ordered in June, and ordinarily would have reached us in ten days.

Mail, express, and freight lines are congested, and practically every shipment is delayed.

We have lost employees from every department because of the war, and when we have succeeded in filling the vacancies at all it has been with inexperienced men and women who must be trained before becoming efficient.

If delays occur they are inevitable in almost every case.

Remember the conditions and remember that your Agents are doing the very best they can to overcome these obstacles and serve you promptly.

At a meeting of Denominational Publishers held at Cincinnati in September it was revealed that the same conditions are affecting all in equal measure.

Be patient, and above all, send your orders to us so as to allow a liberal margin of time for delivery. Many orders come to us for Sunday school literature each quarter so late as to make it physically impossible to deliver the goods in time for use on the first Sunday of the quarter. Many reach us after the first Sunday.

Help your House in this time of trouble.

A TRIBUTE TO CHRIST.

"I know men," said Napoleon at St. Helena, to Count de Montholon: "I know men, and I tell you that Jesus is not a man! The religion of Christ is a mystery, which subsists by its own force, and proceeds from a mind which is not a human mind. Jesus is not a philosopher, for his proofs are miracles, and from the first his disciples adored him. Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne, and myself founded empires; but on what foundation did we rest the creations of our genius? Upon force. Jesus Christ founded an empire on love; and at this hour millions of men would die for him! I die before my time, and my body will be given back to the earth, to become food for worms. Such is the fate of him who had been called the great Napoleon. What an abyss between my deep misery and the eternal kingdom of Christ, which is proclaimed, loved, and adored, and is extending over the whole earth!"—Biblical Encyclopedia.

DON'T CARRY BURDENS YOU CAN SET DOWN.

An aged, weary looking woman, with a heavy basket upon her arm, entered the train at one of the way stations. Carrying her burden with some difficulty down the aisle, she found an empty seat, of which she took possession. Instead of placing her burden upon the floor or upon the seat beside her, she continued to hold it, shifting its weight now and then from one knee to the other. A working man across the aisle watched her for some time in silence, but at last, when he could stand it no longer, he reached over and touched the woman upon the arm. "Madam," he said, "if you will set your basket down, the train will carry both it and you."

How much of human nature there is in this little incident! Some people never try to "ease the burden" which circumstances have decreed shall be theirs. They insist on carrying it even when they might temporarily lay it down and ease their breaking backs.—Farm and Fireside.

TWELVE REASONS FOR PROPORTIONATE GIVING.

By Dr. Robert E. Speer.

1. The Gospel ought to lead and enable men to do more than Pagans and Jews.

The Jew in the old dispensation was expected to bring his titbe in addition to his taxes and his various offerings. Unless the motives of the Gospel are able to lead men to give more generously than Jews and pagans give, then the motives of the Gospel must be inferior to Judaism and paganism.

2. The Jew and the Pagan faced no fewer difficulties in the way of practicing such principles than we face.

As a matter of fact tbey were confronted with greater difficulties than we are. The Jew was a poor man and lived in a poor land.

3. We need some practical abiding principle like this to make sure that the principle of stewardship is a reality in our lives and that we do not inwardly find ourselves swept into self-deception.

I will ask any man who has adopted the minimum principle of the tithe if he did not discover that in the old days he was outrageously robbing God.

4. The tithe had its reason in a deep need of human nature, or God would never have ordered it.

Our moral nature is the same, across the land and across the centuries. God does not need tithes for himself. Tithe giving is needed by man.

5. Money is the most perilous thing with which we have to cope, next to the baser, sensual natue.

We all know how constantly the warnings are given throughout all our Lord's teachings. We can think of friend after friend who in these last years has had wealth piled in upon him, and we have seen his spiritual atrophy, unless he clung to some simple principle of action like this to hold him secure.

6. Our Lord Himself recognized and approved the validity of the principle of the tithe.

He said to the Scribes and the Pharisees: "You give tithes, and this you ought to have done." So many times now do we say that the Old Testament laws are abrogated in Christ. The types and shadows were fulfilled and terminiated in Christ, but the moral law was not terminated in Christ.

7. There is no objection that holds against the principle of the tithe that does not hold also against the principle of the Sabbath Day.

Both rest on the same ground of Old Testament sanction, New Testament recognition, moral claim, and adaptation.

8. It is the only sure way of giving God his right share.

The only sure way of securing to God in the extension of His kingdom what He needs, is to set aside carefully for Him the first tenth.

9. It is only so that the causes of Christ in the world will get what they need.

The general adoption of the principle of the tithe throughout the Church would pour into all the treasuries of the agencies of the Church all that they would need for the work that must be done, and we shall not be likely to accomplish it in any but this simple, fundamental, ethical way.

10. I think every man will find, as every man who has passed through the experience can testify, that the acceptance of a principle like this marks a district era of spiritual enlargement in his life.

I am not speaking here out of the air. I am speaking out of the experience of many in this room who look back to such a time as marking the beginning of a new era in their lives.

11. It may bring the great religious expansion and awakening for which we long.

I suppose we have many times stumbled at Horace Bushnell's word on this subject, and perhaps have wondered whether for once one of the greatest spiritual voices of his time had not missed the true note when he said: "One more revival, only one more is needed, the revival of Christian stewardship, the consecration of the money power to God. When that revival comes the Kingdom of God will come in a day." May this not be true?

12. I believe in this principle because, regardless of anything that will flow from it, it is fundamentally right.

It does not matter what effect it may have on our lives, whether it pinches or cramps. We believe in it because it is right.

* * *

The Methodist Church will render a great service to the entire Church of Christ if it will lead a movement which will secure the joyous giving of the tithe by as much as a tithe of the Church membership. If true principles of giving were adopted by the whole Church, not one ministry of religion or of phllanthropy throughout the whole of Christendom would suffer for lack of support, and there would be such blessing of God, such enlargement of the human spirit, such delight in brotherly helpfulness, as would make the world a different place.

A HINDU TITHER.

A missionary from India tells of a native helper, Bhelsari Naiah by name, who was converted to tithing. After he had tithed three months be was asked if it worked. "Certainly, sir." "And bow is that? You were always complaining of being hard up, and even in debt, when you used your whole income for self; now you give one-tenth to God, you have no complaints." "Ah sir, the nine-tenths with God's blessing is better far than the ten-tenths used to be without it."

Bhelsari's testimony is a typical one among tithers. When one obeys a command of God, he receives a blessing. Tithe paying always brings with it a blessing. Of course, none pretend that a tither is to be a recipient of blessings when his only good quality is that of tithing.—Rev. A. B. Strickland.

SOME TITHING CHURCHES.

Chas. S. Smith, Presiding Elder, Beaumont District, Texas Conference.

In March of the present year, in a series of revival services in which the pastor of Jasper station, Rev. R. A. Gates, was assisted by Rev. O. F. Zimmerman, emphasis was laid upon tithing. Many of the membership including almost every member of the official board, and probably every steward, agreed to become tithers. The number was sufficiently large to cause the Church to be regarded as a "Tithing Church." The official agreement was to tithe throughout the Church, and to bring into the storehouse (the Church) the tithes and offerings. It was decided to take no more collections, but at each entrance of the Church there has been placed a table on which are two stationary boxes, one for the "Tithes" and the other for "Offerings." No outside collections are solicited, nor is the basket passed at any of the services. All moneys, for every purpose, are deposited in the boxes.

How does it work? Salaries, all current expenses of the local Church, and Conference assessments, though larger than ever before, are provided for with an ease that is pleasing indeed. Other benevolences are more generously provided for than at any time during the long and honorable history of the Church. Nor has the Church at any time during its tithing experience been pressed for funds. The report of the treasurer at the third quarterly conference showed a balance of $450.

Roberts Avenue (Beaumont) and Sour Lake Church, of the Beaumont District, have each many tithers, and use methods much after the order of the Church at Jasper. The finances of these three pastoral charges are decidedly more satisfactory than those of any other charges of the district. They also more nearly measure up to their financial ability.

HALF-PAST EIGHT.

Half-past eight's the meanest time!
When I'm seated in my chair,
And I see my breakfast there.
Then that little clock will chime!
Up looks father o'er his plate:
"Hurry, son, or you'll be late;
It's half-past eight."

After school, though, I do things—
Fly my kite or play baseball—
Till I hear our Hannah call
When the supper bell she rings.
After tea they light the grate,
And I read there while I wait
For half-past eight.

Seems to me I haven't read
Half a page, when I hear Pa
Put his paper down, and—"Ma,
It's time for John to go to bed!"
So I have to yield to fate.
If there's any time I hate,
It's half-past eight!

—Johnson Morton, in Children at Work.

MABEL'S NEW NURSE.

Out on the piazza the block forts were going up beautifully while just inside, where the breath of the flowers and all the pleasant summer sounds could come, mother was reading to Mabel.

It was not "a very sick," but just a "sick enough to have to stay in bed" that was the matter with her, Mabel said. It was rather nice when it came time for cream toast, and while mother read to her; but it was hard to lie still when mother had to go away and when Mabel could hear the other children playing without her. By and by Bridget looked in at the door.

"The washer-woman's little boy has hurt his foot ma'am, and she wants to know will you come down a bit?"

"Oh! dear," said Mabel. "Everybody wants you. Who'll take care of me while you're gone?"

Mother thought a minute. "I know some one who can help you to be the best kind of a little invalid, if she will," she said. "I'll write her name on this slip of paper, and you can open it, after I'm gone, and see if you want her."

Mabel waited only long enough to hear mother's steps pass out of the hall before she opened the paper and read, "Mabel Gray."

"Why, that's just me!" she said. "I thought it was going to be somebody."

At first her lips pouted, but then at the thought of being her own nurse, funny little dimples and smiles began to come. She told herself to be good. "Lie still, my dear, and try to sleep now." And soon she laughed outright. Then she began to tell herself stories, and by and by she was sound asleep. She did not hear when mother came in, but when she awoke the dear face was smiling down at her.

"Well, how did the new nurse get along?" mother asked.

"Pretty well," answered Mabel. "She asked me wasn't I ashamed of myself to be so selfish, when I had you all the time and that poor boy only wanted you a little while. And then she said I must be good and keep still; she didn't just tell me to; she made me do it."

"I thought she would," laughed mother. "Little girlie, I am glad you have learned that, for it is true when you are well just the same as when you are sick."—Exchange.

A GRAIN OF SAND.

"Mother, mother, there's somethin' in my eye. Please take it out quick."

"Why, what is it?"

"I do not know. It's an awful thing. The wind blew it in my eye a minute ago."

The mother examined the afflicted eye carefully, but could not find anything except tears. "I don't see anything in it, dearie."

"But it's there, mother. Please get it out. It makes me feel so uncomfortable."

"Well, Flossy, I think we had better go to Dr. Wright and see what he can do."

"Ah!" said the doctor. And in an instant he held his instrument toward her. "Here it is."

"Where?" asked the mother. "I don't see anything."

"I don't either," said Flossy, "but my eye does not hurt any longer."

"It's just a tiny speck of sand," replied the doctor, "too small to see unless you know where to look for it."

Some days afterwards, Flossy was fidgeting about the room where her mother was sewing. It was rainy weather out of doors, and Flossy was in a bad humor! nothing pleased her.

"Please don't, Flossy," said her mother over again. "You make me very uncomfortable. If you do not stop worrying, you must go away by yourself."

Flossy sat down by the window, pouting. In a little while her face brightened, and she came to her mother and put a little soft kiss on her cheek. "I'm like the grain of sand, mother. Don't you think so?" she said.

"What do you mean?"

"I'm not very big, but I make people uncomfortable when my temper gets in the wrong place. I love you truly, and I would not hurt you, as that sand did me, for anything. The sand could not help itself, but I can and I will right away."—Our Boys and Girls.

THE TRUE STORY OF MARY AND HER LITTLE LAMB.

Thousands of children have been delighted with the nursery tale about Mary and the lamb which followed her to school one day, much to the amusement of the other pupils and the discomfiture of the teacher, and it is still cherished by thousands, both youngsters and grown-ups. It is not generally known, however, that there was a real Mary and a real lamb, originals of the jingle. C. Purdy, of De Land, Florida, tells the following interesting facts about them:

Mary Sawyer, the heroine of the story, was born on her father's farm near Sterling, Mass., in 1806. The old home is still standing. One cold morning in March, 1814, Mary's father found at the sheepfold a pair of twin lambs that had been born in the night. For some reason the mother sheep rejected one of them and it was nearly dead from cold and hunger when found by Mr. Sawyer. Mary begged the privilege of caring for it and it was given into her hands to raise. By careful nursing and judicious feeding with milk and minted teas the little girl saved its life and in a short time she and the lamb were devotedly attached to each other.

It was not long until the lamb became as lively as any of you could wish to see. It was Mary's constant companion and playmate, taking the place of a doll in her play. Frequently she would dress it up in clothes just as other little girls dress their dolls. One day as she went off singing on her way to school the lamb heard her voice, broke out of its pen, and was soon at her heels.

Mary's brother suggested that she let the lamb go with them to school, and she did so. Arriving some time before school began, she placed the lamb under her seat, where it lay quietly and contentedly. All went well until it came time for Mary to go to her class. Then, as she walked up the aisle, her pet got up and trotted along behind her, to the delight of the pupils and to the surprise and discomfiture of the teacher.

What else could be expected than that it would make "the children laugh and play to see a lamb at school?" The discipline of the school could not be sacrificed for the fun of the pupils, so the pet lamb was put outdoors, where it had to wait for its mistress.

Visiting at the school that day was a young man named John Roulston, a Harvard University student. The incident impressed him as so funny, yet pathetic, that he was inspired to write the lines of the well-known classic, "Mary Had a Little Lamb." Roulston has never been classed among the poets of the country.—Queen's Gardens.

AN EMERGENCY CALL.

The following telegram was received by the Advocate last Monday from the Board of Missions:

"Shortage in missionary income now would be a calamity. War emergencies multiply; war prices increase demands everywhere; exchange doubles expenditures in China. In view of the Centenary, shortage would work embarrassment for next five years. Full collections are, therefore, imperative. Pastors and all concerned are urged to use all diligence to prevent serious burt to the cause.

W. W. PINSON."

We can scarcely add anything that will emphasize the urgency of the situation as stated by Dr. Pinson. We realize tbe difficulties that confront us on account of the epidemic of influenza, and on account of the calls that are being made in behalf of war work; but these great interests of the Church must not be allowed to suffer. It will take hard work, and, perhaps, considerable sacrifice on the part of our people, to bring our collections up in full. But we ought to do it, and we can do it by the proper effort. Let us not fall short of our duty.

WE CAN DO IT.

"Let's not be satisfied with less than 10,000 subscribers before the middle of our next Conference year!"

The above is the closing sentence of the report of the Publishing Committee as published in last week's Advocate. It expresses a sentiment that ought to receive a hearty "Amen" from every preacher in the Louisiana, the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences. And we believe the "Amen" will be forthcoming.

The goal thus set is not at all unreasonable. When we stop to realize tbat the statistics of these three Conferences for last year show that there are more than 157,000 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi, the wonder is that there are not already more than 10,000 subscribers to the official Church organ in these two States. Certainly we can take no pride in the fact that for a long time our subscription list has hovered around the 7000 mark. The numerical strength of Methodism in this territory is such as to make it a very reasonable supposition that ten thousand Methodists can be found who are willing to pay $1.50 a year for fifty-two issues of a sixteen-page paper that is owned and controlled and published by their Church as its official journal. Without any question, we have the field for at least a ten thousand circulation.

Ought the Advocate to have a wide circulation among the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi? The question answers itself. We do not propose to base tbe answer largely upon Church loyalty, though that consideration does, of course, enter. Methodist people ought to support their own institutions and enterprises. We base the answer, first, upon the proposition tbat every Church member NEEDS his Church paper in order that he may develop an intelligent interest in Church affairs that will qualify him for the most effective service in the kingdom of God. If the Church were an insignificant local organization, with interests no wider than the circle of its own community, it could get along very well without an intelligent membership, and the members themselves would need very little literature of any kind. But membership in an organization of millions of members, witb definite interests that extend all over the world, certainly imposes some obligation to keep more or less in touch with the affairs of that organization. In passing, we have never been able to understand the point of view that would allow a man to hold an official position in his Church without taking at least its official organ.

We base the answer, secondly, upon the proposition that the Church needs to have its publications read in order that its appeals for the maintenance and extension of its work may have a sympathetic hearing based upon knowledge. The people perish for lack of knowledge, and the institutions that they would gladly support if they had knowledge, suffer likewise. We believe it would pay the Church in dollars and cents if some way could be devised by which a Church paper could be put into the home of every communicant.

We base the answer, thirdly, upon the proposition that tbe New Orleans Christian Advocate is a paper of such kind as to meet the needs of the Church and its members in its territory. We are not so presumptuous as to base any claims upon its editorial efficiency; but from tbe standpoint of mechanical make-up, the amount of reading matter in each issue, and the range and variety of its contents, we are not afraid of comparison with any similar publication that has come under our notice—and we have occasion to read a good many Church papers every week. We do not claim that it is an ideal paper—far from it—but we do believe that its wide circulation would help materially every interest of the Church.

A subscription list of ten thousand is not an unreasonable goal—we have the membership to justify it. The Advocate ought to have a wide circulation—it is needed by all our people and by the Church as an organization. Can we get it? We answer that question categorically—"Yes." If all our preachers will throw themselves earnestly into the campaign that the Publishing Committee has provided for, early in the coming Conference year, if they will present the matter seriously and forcibly, and definitely, we can have the ten thousand by the middle of the year. It is merely a question of co-operation and work.

Let's do it!

REMEMBER THE ORPHANAGES NOW.

Unfortunately, the suspension of all Church services throughout Louisiana and Mississippi, resulting from the epidemic of Spanish influenza, came just at the time appointed for observance of Work Day for our Orphanages. As a result, these institutions, which depend largely upon the Work Day offerings for their maintenance, have been placed in an embarrassing situation. An assured income of considerable proportions has suddenly been cut off. We can very readily understand that the faithful superintendents of these institutions, who have the responsibility of caring for scores of dependent children resting upon them, are greatly perplexed.

It would be a fine thing if hundreds of our people who would have made an offering on Work Day, but have not had the opportunity of doing so on account of the epidemic, would immediately send to the superintendents a liberal contribution for the support of their work. This action would be a prompt recognition of the fact that an emergency exists and it would be a sure way of meeting tbe emergency.

For the convenience of our readers, we give the names of the superintendents, to whom contributions may be sent. For the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage: Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Ruston, La. For the Mississippi Orphans' Home: Rev. B. F. Lewis, Jackson, Miss. Let the checks, money orders and registered letters go forward.

WHY NOT THE SALOONS?

When the Spanish influenza became epidemic in New Orleans, the Board of Health promptly issued an order closing the public schools and the churches. We are in full sympathy with that order, believing that the eminent specialists who are fighting the disease would not impose a restriction that they do not think is in the interest of the public health.

But we cannot altogether understand tbe attitude that insists that the churches should be closed while, at the same time, the saloons are permitted to continue their business in the same old way. When the suggestion was made to the Board of Health that there would be practically no danger arising from the usual Sunday services, the answer was made, according to the newspaper reports, that there is not a church in New Orleans that is properly ventilated. That may be true, according to exact scientific standards; but we are reasonably sure of one thing—there are more cubic feet of fresh air available, per member of the congregation, in the average church of this city than are available per member of the crowd in the average saloon. We have been in a good many of the churches, and we have not been in any of the saloons, but we know that the churches, as a rule, are open on all sides, while the saloons are crowded into narrow quarters. We presume that nobody would claim that the average saloon is kept in better sanitary condition than the average church.

We believe it was wise to order the closing of the churches and the schools for the period of the epidemic. For the life of us, we can't see why the saloons should be allowed to stay open.

BISHOPS' MEETING POSTPONED.

A telegram from Rev. W. Winans Drake, pastor of the Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, La., received after the part of the paper carrying the article concerning the fall meeting of the Bishops had gone to press, announces that the meeting has been indefinitely postponed on account of tbe prevailing epidemic of Spanish influenza. This will be a great disappointment to the Methodism of Shreveport and of the State, but the wisdom of the action cannot be questioned. We trust that normal conditions may soon be restored, that the great work of the Church may go on as usual.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, of Cleveland, Miss., is the efficient secretary of the North Mississippi Conference Historical Society. All papers read at the meeting of the Society at Clarksdale on November 19 will be turned over to him.

The American Y. M. C. A. shipped abroad, from July, 1917, to September 1, 1918, over eleven million dollars' worth of supplies. Large amounts were purchased abroad in addition. The Y. M. C. A. is something of a business concern.

The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, with headquarters at Chicago, has suggested the launching of a world-wide crusade against beverage alcohol as soon as the campaign for national prohibition comes to a successful culmination.

Mr. Henry P. Crowell, president of the Quaker Oats Company, and Mr. E. K. Warren, president of the Warren Featherbone Co., were recently elected president and vice president, respectively, of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

We learn from a personal note from Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, that there have been fifty cases of influenza in that institution; but all the patients were doing well at the time of writing.

Rev. W. A. Terry, of our Broad Street Church, Hatiesburg, Miss., is closing his third year in that charge. He reports that all departments of the church work are in good working order. We thank him for sending us a subscription to the Advocate.

Rev. Plato Durham, of the Candler School of Theology, Atlanta, Ga., was recently overcome by an attack of nervous prostration, according to an exchange. We are glad to learn from the Raleigh Christian Advocate that his condition is improving.

Rev. C. Wesley Baley, pastor of the Prairie and Strongs charge, North Mississippi Conference, in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, states that this has been a good year with him. He will be able to report at Conference progress along all lines.

Rev. C. H. Herring, of Harrisville, Miss., in renewing his own subscription to the Advocate, writes that he expects to see all his people as soon as he can, and get as many renewals and new subscriptions to the Advocate as possible. We thank him.

Three-fourths of the books issued by the libraries at our military camps are non-fiction. This fact shows that our soldiers want history, mechanics, war strategy, electricity, geography, civil engineering—showing the spirit of self-improvement.

According to a statement by the American Red Cross, hundreds of thousands of peach seeds and nut shells have been collected in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama in the last two weeks and made into carbon to be placed in gas masks for American soldiers in France.

Mrs. Nellie Emmerson Harwell, wife of Hon. J. M. Harwell and only daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Emmerson, died at her home in Meridian, Miss., on Sunday, October 13, following an attack of Spanish influenza. We extend our sincere sympathy to the stricken family.

General Pershing has sent a message by cable to Dr. H. A. Garfield, United States Fuel Administrator, as follows: "The more coal you produce, the sooner we shall have peace." This is a challenge to the people of Louisiana and Mississippi to save coal by using wood as far as possible.

Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, pastor of Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., has offered himself for army Y. M. C. A. work pending action on his application for the chaplaincy. Brother Lewis has done a fine work at Gibson Memorial. He will complete the year's work in that appointment.

Rev. J. Lambuth Evans, of the Haughton charge, Louisiana Conference, writes that the epidemic of Spanish influenza is interfering very greatly with church work, but that he is doing everything he can to bring up his Conference collections in full. We thank him for a new subscription to the Advocate.

We are glad to be able to report that Rev. J. Loyd Decell, pastor of our church at McComb, Miss., is recovering from an operation from appendicitis which he recently had to undergo. He expects to be able to perform his duties as host of the approaching session of the Mississippi Conference.

We learn from a personal letter from Dr. R. H. Wynn, president of Centenary College, Shreveport, La., that school work has been suspended during the influenza epidemic. Professor J. G. Sawyer, the efficient dean of the college, has had a severe atack of the influenza, but is regaining his strength.

Rev. C. C. Selecman, who accompanied Bishop Lambuth to France, has returned to the United States. He will visit the Conferences west of the Mississippi in the interest of the War Work program of our Church. He is available for any service he can render in the short intervals between these Conference sessions.

The Non-essential Building Committee of the State Council of Defense of Louisiana has been resolutely refusing to approve any permits for building that it did not deem absolutely necessary to the furtherance of war work. The committee has received a strong letter of approval of its course from the War Industries Board.

Rev. John D. Ellis, our pastor at Canton, Miss., has been called for service by the National War Council of the Y. M. C. A. He will go to Blue Ridge, N. C., on October 24 for twenty days' training, after which he will be assigned to some American Hut. Methodist preachers are doing their part in all movements for the welfare of our soldiers in winning the war.

We acknowlelge, with thanks, the receipt of a copy of the "Directory and Historical Sketch, Okolona Station, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference." Rev. J. B. Randolph is the pastor of this splendid church. The Directory contains a great deal of valuable information of a general interest as well as much matter of local value.

The Fourth Liberty Loan campaign closed last Saturday. As was to be expected, the loan was largely oversubscribed, notwithstanding the serious conditions arising from the epidemic of Spanish influenza, which has largely paralyzed business throughout the country. If there was any thought on the part of the Kaiser that his peace move would interfere with the success of the loan, he is undeceived by now.

Rev. Chas. D. McGehee, of Indianola, Miss., has been accepted as a candidate for the chaplaincy and ordered to report for training on November 15. We thank Brother McGehee for a copy of a pamphlet arranged by him for evangelistic work, entitled, "The Sword of the Spirit." It is one of the finest things of the kind we have seen. It cannot fail to be of great service to those who will make use of it in personal work.

Rev. W. N. Ware, writing from Walnut Grove, Miss., states that he has had seven revivals on his work, and that much good has been accomplished. He was assisted in his meetings by the following brethren, who did splendid work: Rev. I. L. Peebles, Rev. A. J. Boyles, Rev. L. M. Sharp, Rev. A. A. Simms, Rev. H. J. Moore, and Rev. J. C. Long. We thank Brother Ware for sending us two subscriptions to the Advocate.

We are glad to be able to announce that the little daughter of Rev. and Mrs. P. H. Grice, of Gulfport, Miss., who was critically ill in the Touro Infirmary, in this city, for several weeks has improved sufficiently to be carried home. Brother and Sister Grice desire to express through the Advocate their grateful appreciation of the many expressions of sympathy that have reached them during their long period of suspense.

We have just received a note from Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, containing the sad news that Gordon Huntley, the son of Rev. W. H. Huntley, of the Mississippi Conference, was buried at Brookhaven on Tuesday, October 15. He died in the service of his country at Miami, Florida. Gordon was a young man of fine character, deeply devoted to his father. We tender our sincere sympathy to the bereaved loved ones.

A recent personal note from Rev. C. M. Morris, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, but now stationed at Rock Hill, South Carolina, informs us that he is happily situated. In the salubrious climate of that section, the health conditions of his family have improved. A new member of the family is Frances Helen, born on August 20. Brother Morris still takes the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and he says he enjoys reading it every week.

The Federal Council of Churches has just elected Dr. Charles L. Goodell as Secretary of the Commission on Evangelism to have charge of its program in a country-wide movement. Dr. Goodell is especially known throughout the country as an evangelistic pastor. He has built up some of the largest churches in Methodism. A good many of our preachers had the privilege of hearing him in a course of lectures at the Seashore Divinity School about a year ago.

We acknowledge the honor of a visit by Bishop W. P. Thirkield, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, one day last week. Bishop Thirkield had just returned from a tour of his episcopal assignments in California. He expressed regret that he did not meet with Bishop Du Bose in his travels in the West, though he earnestly desired to do so. It will be of interest to our readers to learn that Bishop Thirkield's book, "Service and Prayers for Church and Home," is now in the second edition of ten thousand copies.

A layman of the Oakdale Methodist Church, Louisiana Conference, has given us some interesting items concerning the work there. The church has had the best year, financially, in its history. All indebtedness has been paid off, the current expenses, including the pastor's salary, have been paid promptly on the first of each month, and all the Conference claims will be provided for by the time of the fourth quarterly conference. The pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper, is in great favor with his people. "We claim there is no better preacher in the State," is the way our correspondent puts it.

Rev. W. J. Wood, pastor of the Winona circuit, North Mississippi Conference, reports that he has had a good year on that work. He has six churches, and seven Sunday schools. Children's Day was observed at every church, and the collections amounted to $50—more than twice the amount raised any previous year. There have been good revivals at each church, and the financial condition of the charge is good. We thank Brother Wood for his promise to look after the Advocate circulation on his charge at once. We hope all our pastors will do what they can to secure all renewals possible before November 1.

We have just received a note from Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, announcing the desperate illness of Rev. Louis Fayard, a Frenchman who has served our Wolf River Mission for more than a dozen years. He is a rare character, loved by all who know him. Nobody could take his place among the thousands of people to whom he has ministered. He has probably baptized more people during the last ten years than any other preacher in the Mississippi Conference. Earnest prayer will be made throughout the Church for his recovery. He is suffering from an attack of the Spanish influenza.

QUALITY OF SERVICE.

A young clergyman who was in the habit of spending his summer vacations in North Dakota one day visited a town some miles away from the one where he was staying. He went to the local barber to get a shave. The barber, like all his fellows, was a more or less loquacious soul. He showed a friendly interest in the stranger, who, by the way, was not dressed in clerical garb. He began to question him:

"Stranger here, ain't you?"

The parson admitted it.

"Travelling man? said the barber.

"No," said the parson.

"You don't live here, do you?"

"No," said the parson.

"Where are you staying?" asked the barber.

"Over at X—" said the parson.

"Whatcha doin' over there?" asked the barber.

"I am supplying the pulpit," said the parson.

"Supplying the pulpit!" achoed the barber, who had never heard the phrase before. "What with?"

That question set the clergyman thinking. He began to ask himself what he actually was supplying that pulpit with. It made him examine the quality of the service he was giving. It made him resolve to improve it. The chance remark of that barber made a changed man of him. It knocked the self-satisfaction out of him, for one thing. It made him realize that he had been taking things too much for granted, and that what he was getting had perhaps been more in his mind than what he was giving.—Selected.

Mrs. SUSAN WESLEY HUNTER, daughter of Benbury and Nancy C. Walton, was born on Monday, October 3, 1842, and was baptized by Bishop Andrew on Monday, Oct. 31, 1842, at her home—Pilgrim's Rest—Lagrange, Tenn. She moved to Oxford, Miss., at the age of nine, and joined the Methodist Church when twelve. She moved to Sardis, Miss., in 1856. She married Theo. Hunter in 1866, with whom she lived happily till 1902, when her noble husband was called to his reward. Sister Hunter was a very superior woman—a type of the old time Southern lady—cultured, refined, noble in thought and act. She was a woman of a high order of intellect. She was interested in and acquainted with the leading questions of the day. She was intensely religious and spiritual. She loved the worship of God's house, and was a devout worshiper. Her life has been a benediction to this entire community. Without knowing it, by her beautiful Christian character she has filled this whole country with a charm that will last through all of the years. Truly her children will rise up and call her blessed. Mother's sweet presence will linger with them till they meet her again. Her example and tender admonitions will always strengthen them for all of the battles of life. Such a life can never die. We placed her frail body in the tomb—but her life is the priceless legacy of all who knew her. She was a source of joy to those who loved her best, and a benediction to all who came in contact with her. Sleep on, sweet mother, till the daylight dawns across the eternal hills of God. We shall meet again in the sweet bye and bye.

Four children survive this sweet-spirited mother: B. Walton Hunter, Chicago; Mrs. J. T. Simmons and Mrs. P. T. Crutcher, Pine Bluff, Ark., and Mrs. J. M. Anderson, Sardis, Miss., in whose home she fell asleep on September 18, 1918. We shall miss her from the house of God on earth, but we shall meet her again in the Father's House above, where congregations never break up and partings are no more. May God bless her memory and keep by His counsel those she loved.

Her pastor, W. D. WENDEL.

Miss MAGGIE GALLOWAY, daughter of Dr. Charles B. and Elizabeth Dinkins Galloway, was born in Kosciusko, Miss., October 18, 1852, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Sophia Weems, at Newton, Miss., on May 12, 1918. Her father moved to Canton, Miss., to practice his profession of medicine when she was nine years old. After his death in 1877, Miss Maggie lived for some years with her brother, Rev. Charles B. Galloway, an itinerant preacher of the M. E. Church, South, who in the meantime was elected one of the Bishops of his Church. And then her home was with her uncle, George W. Galloway, of Canton, Mississippi, for some twenty years or more and until about three years before her decease, when she went to live with her sister, Mrs. Sophia Weems, widow of the late Rev. J. M. Weems, of honored memory. These last years were full of care, because of the fact that her sister had become almost an invalid, besides being almost totally deaf and blind. However, the one who went to minister was the first to succumb before the Great Reaper, and first called to her eternal home. But the separation was for only the season of the summer time, for in the early autumn the sister, too, was called.

Just as Miss Maggie had tenderly cared for others, so she was lovingly ministered to during her last days by her brother, Rev. James G. Galloway, and his wife. Living a life of modest maidenhood, she yet touched and influenced for good the lives of many. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South; and for several years, while at the home of her uncle, George W. Galloway, at Old Madisonville, near Canton, she acted as steward of the church. The mortal remains were interred at Canton.

HENRY G. HAWKINS.
Camp Shelby, Miss., Oct. 15, 1918.

The immortal ranks of the Gray have lost another choice spirit. Captain John C. Ross passed away on September 11, 1918, after a long, useful and eventful life. Born at Eufala, Ala., on October 28, 1839, Mr. Ross responded to his loved Southland's call, went into the Eufala Rifles and was with his company acting as escort at the inauguration of Jefferson Davis. He served through the entire war, acting as First Lieutenant, then was elected later Captain of his company. He fought in many battles in Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Alabama and Tennessee. He bore wounds from Atlanta and Missionary Ridge. At the close of the war he came to Mississippi on business, but settled down here. In 1871 he was married to Miss Fredonia A. Birdsong, who lived near Brownsville, Miss., Dr. C. G. Andrews officiating. The wife and four children survive him. For some thirty years Captain Ross has been a faithful member of our Methodist Church, which he and his good wife helped to found when Flora began to be. His family was the second to move into the new town and since then the Ross home has been a landmark.

His body was laid away, on September 12, 1918, at the Flora Cemetery under a canopy of lovely flowers. All who knew him loved him and all feel a personal loss. The parsonage has many times already missed his cheerful smile. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to the bereaved wife and children.

M. F. ADAMS, Pastor.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Death has come into our Missionary Society and claimed Mrs. T. M. Heidelberg, a beloved member.

Therefore be it resolved, first, While we humbly bow in submission to God's will, it grieves us much to give her up. We thank Him for her willing service in reading so beautifully to us when called upon to do so.

Resolved, second, That we extend to her loved ones our heartfelt sympathy. May they realize that God loves them, though He chasteneth, and look to Him for consolation and comfort in their bereavement.

Resolved, third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the Missionary Voice and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. C. G. McCormick, Miss Sallie Dantzler.

THE MEMPHIS HOSPITAL

YES, the Memphis, Mississippi, North Mississippi and North Arkansas Conferences own and are operating a well equipped hospital in Memphis known as the Methodist Hospital, Lucy Brinkley Annex, with fifty beds devoted exclusively to surgical and maternity cases for women and children. Special terms will be made to the wife or child of a Methodist preacher.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. We call upon everyone to send in all past due subscriptions and to talk and work and pray for new ones. We need all the help possible.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone an entbusiast on inside-bathing.

KILLS CATARRH GERMS

Famous Hyomei—Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of tho blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Australia where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science—Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific. You breathe Hyomei. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalation to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs soothes and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. Spanish Influenza—What it is and How it Should be Treated

NOTHING NEW—SIMPLY THE OLD GRIP, OR LA GRIPPE THAT WAS EPIDEMIC IN 1889-90, ONLY THEN IT CAME FROM RUSSIA BY WAY OF FRANCE, AND THIS TIME BY WAY OF SPAIN.

Go to Bed and Stay Quiet—Take a Laxative—Eat Plenty of Nourishing Food—Keep Up Your Strength—Nature is the Only "Cure."

ALWAYS CALL A DOCTOR

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC.

Spanish Influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearance of grip or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-90.

There is no occasion for panic—Influenza itself has a very low percentage of fatalities—not one death out of every four hundred cases, according to the North Carolina Board of Health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a rundown condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough, or those who get up too early.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grippe, or influenza as it is now called, usually begins with a chill followed by aching, feverishness and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucuous membrane, or lining of the air passage—nose, throat and bronchial tubes—there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night—often times a sore throat or tonsilitis, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nouishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, Aspirin or Dover's Powder, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may arise. Influenza so weakens the bodily resistence that there is danger of pneumonia or bronchitis developing, and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons, it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong, stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to stimulate the lining of the air pasages to throw off the grippe germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passage open, thus making the beathing easier, Vick's Vapo Rub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder blades to open the pores. Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on quickly and covered with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breadth, carry the medication directly to the parts affected At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds—which means avoiding crowds—common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air, and good food. Above all, keep free from colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or beter still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

Note.—Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve form, Menthol and Camphor with such volatile oils as Eucalyptus, Thyme, Cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors.

VapoRub is comparatively new in New York State and New England and a few Western States where it is just now being introduced, but in other sections of the country it is the standard home remedy in more than a million homes for all forms of cold troubles. Over six million jars were sold last year. It is particularly recommended for children's croup or colds, since it is externally applied and therefore can be used as freely as desired without the slightest harmful effects. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists.—Adv.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

TO RESIST THE ATTACK

of the germs of many diseases such as Grip, Malaria means for all of us—fight or die. These germs are everywhere in the air we breathe. The odds are in favor of the germs, if the liver is inactive and the blood impure.

What is needed most is an increase in the germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," or soil for germ-growth.

We claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery that it does all this in a way peculiar to itself.

It cures troubles caused by torpid liver or impure blood.

HAMPTON, GA.—"I have used Doctor Pierce's medicines in my home for over 40 years, and can say to those suffering with torpid liver, it will pay you to use Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. You will find it all he claims it to be."—THOMAS C. JONES.

WOODFORD, TENN.—"This is to certify that I have used Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for my two little boys. One had night sweats, poor appetite, sallow complexion, and had quit growing, but after giving him part of a bottle of the 'Discovery' he again started to grow. He dosen't have the night sweats and looks much better. My other little boy had scrofula and this medicine cured him after the doctor's medicine had failed. I do not hesitate to recommend the 'Discovery' at all times."—MRS. ROSA LEE LOGAN, Route 1.

Memorial from Louisiana Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session in Atlanta, Ga., in May, 1918, by an overwhelming majority vote, declared itself in favor of granting full lay membership to the women of the Church; and

Whereas, The same General Conference, after the College of Bishops had declared that the matter involved a constitutional change, re-affirmed their action by a vote of 265 to 57, thus sending the measure to the Annual Conferences for action, be it

Resolved, That we, the Executive Committee of the Louisiana Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society, representing a membership of 3000 women, hereby express our desire for full lay membership in the Church, and, further, that we respectfully request the members of the Louisiana Conference to consider the measure favorably, and to vote in the affirmative when the question is submitted to the Conference in this annual session.

Signed: Mrs. C. F. Niebergall, President; Mrs. A. P. Holt, Secretary.

OPINION OF A LOUISIANA CONFERENCE LEADER.

For at least two quadrenniums the Louisiana Conference has favored by a large majority the granting of full lay membership privileges to women. Without question, the constitutional recommendation of the General Conference will be adopted by our Conference, and many of us hope that it will be done by a unanimous vote.

In the coming days we shall wonder why we waited so long to grant this just privilege to the intelligent and consecrated womanhood of our Church.

R. H. WYNN.

LAITY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN.

The following strong statement is taken from the St. Louis Christian Advocate and is a clipping from an article by Rev. C. C. Grimes, one of the strong men of Missouri. He was a member of the last General Conference and is a leader in his own Conference.

He says: "To-day an American army is fighting in France for the establishment of the principle that the rights of individuals and nations shall not be sacrificed to the arbitrary will of a dictator. Ever since the war began I have been trying to get into that army.

"But why should I be willing to fight in France for the establishment of a principle for which I am unwilling to vote in the Missouri Annual Conference? Or why should I be willing to face death on foreign soil for the enforcement of a rule of conduct which I am unwilling to practice in dealing with my own mother? Because the women are in every way worthy and well qualified for official position in the Church, because the Church needs them and because I take a delight in trying to be intelligently consistent, I shall vote for the granting of full laity rights to women."

WOMAN'S REQUEST FOR FULL CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

The Annual Conferences are now passing on the question of admitting women into full Church membership. It may be of interest to many to read some of the reasons given by these women for making this appeal. The following is taken from their paper, which was sent to the members of the last General Conference:

What the Women Ask.

They Ask—
That the restrictions against fully one-half of the membership of the Church be removed from the Discipline.

They Ask—
That the word laymen be interpreted to include women.

They Ask—
That the Church to which they are giving their lives shall grant them recognition as full lay members of the Church of God and truly "welcome to all of its privileges."

They Ask—
For the recognition and privileges which are inherent with membership.

Why the Women Ask for Full Church Membership.

1. They believe there is nothing in the fundamental law of the Church which makes these restrictions upon women necessary.

2. They believe that although these restrictions are not for the purpose of limiting the activities of women, yet their observance renders these activities more difficult.

3. They believe that there is a complementary difference in the sexes, and that the Church should take advantage of this great fact and utilize it.

4. They believe that "danger lies in the direction of separateness, and safety in the path of co-operation."

5. They believe that the mother heart and mind of the Church should be permitted to function for the welfare of the church home.

6. They believe that as they have a part in preparing the child for the Church, they should also have a part in preparing the Church for the child.

7. They believe that it is simple justice that men and women received into the Church under the same formula should alike be "welcome to all of its privileges."

8. They believe that the women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, should not be the only Methodist women in all the world (save the negro Methodist women) who are denied this full membership in the Church.

Who Are These Women Who Ask for Full Church Membership?

They are not uninterested, idle women. They are the women who, in their organized missionary work, have accumulated property at home and abroad valued at more than $2,000,000, and whose income is nearly $600,000 per annum.

They are women who have given their lives to the Church and are faithful not only to their woman's organization, but to every interest of the Church.

They are women who toil and suffer and sacrifice that the Kingdom of God may come.

They are women who believe that the Church to-day has upon it the great test of the ages and that the unparalleled world crisis demands the full contribution of the combined forces of the Church of God.

They are women who believe that the present world crisis can be met only by the Church, and that the demand upon the Church can be met only when its men and its women stand together in their full strength, upholding the strong army of the ministry in order that His name may be proclaimed throughout the whole world. Sunday School

PROGRESS AT McCOOL, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We had Brother R. H. B. Gladney, our efficient and worthy Sunday school field secretary, with us two days last week. He preached four very fine sermons, organized one Sunday school, and three classes in the teacher-training course to make leaders in Sunday school work. He is a great man with a great message. Any pastor who has not had him should do so.

We now have Sunday schools in all our six churches, and the Cradle Roll and Home Department in two. We feel this will be a great help to enlighten this people.

(MRS.) A. R. BEASLEY.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

I do not know just how long it will be before we can have services, but I hope not long.

I want to call attention to Rev. M. L. White's letter in last week's Advocate. It made my heart hurn. What a great summer's work! Fine. Now for the future of the work and carrying the line farther: let each preacher of the Newton District give Brother White the name of some live man or woman he can deal with in regard to the teacher-training work. He will be a help and blessing to you.

If there is a brother who feels that his is a special case and he would like to have help within the last two weeks before Conference, please write to me at once. I would like to come to you if you will let me know about it.

The greatest thing we can do as ministers of the Gospel is to organize our workers to study how to do the work. The teacher-training course will be of great value. Read the books—it will pay you. Pray for me and the work. JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Shubuta, Miss.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Mrs. Lester G. Fant of Holly Springs, Miss., has agreed to take charge of the Elementary Department for the Conference. Let the District Superintendents of the Conference write to her and let her know how much and what kind of work they are able to do. Mrs. Fant has had long practical experience in every department of the elementary work and has devoted much time to the study of the work under our trained leaders at Monteagle and Lake Junaluska. She can help you solve your problems. Write to her and tell her what your are doing.

When a class for leadership is organized it should be reported to Dr. J. W. Shackford, Nashville, Tenn. If it is not enrolled, it cannot be counted. It would strengthen the class to organize it also into a Wesley Bible Class.

The school that adopts as its policy, "No teacher will be permitted to teach a class until that teacher has finished one book in the course," will have a larger number of teachers hetter equipped for the work. Such a policy could not be put into effect at once, but the school that has the courage to adopt a higher standard will soon have it working. Let some progressive man bring this up at the next meeting of the Workers' Council and thus lead the way to better things in teaching.

The preacher that succeeds in getting one or more teachers to study one of the books in the course for leadership may not be doing spectacular work, but he is certainly rendering the Church a form of service that will make the angels in heaven take notice. This kind of work is slow, but it is the kind most needed.

Every step forward must be preceded by the right kind of information. We cannot do a thing until we know what to do and how to do it. Before giving, before praying, the soul must be informed of the world's needs until it staggers under the burden and falls before God in utter dependence upon him who is the only source of our strength. The drive for thirty-five millions for missions must be preceded by a campaign of education. Our Methodist people will do only as they know. How can they know without a teacher?

Schools have been organized on the Marietta circuit at Palestine, Ozark, Gilmore, and Kirkville. Books were ordered for the teachers, graded lessons for beginners, Cradle Roll supplies and other material that will enable the teachers to do better work. Brother Love is consecrated and is giving the best he can to the hundreds of promising young people under his care.

The two days spent at Kossuth resulted in the organization of a class of ten young people for leadership, a class of ten to study Heroes of Faith in Japan, a Home Department with a possible enrollment of twenty-four. Brother Nabors, the pastor, and Brother Hale, the superintendent, realize that they are touching the life of every community in Alcorn County through their school. The churches located in the towns where the Agricultural High Schools are established have a great responsibility upon them.

Brother Harkey, pastor of Hesterville circuit, knows how to work and how to work others. We held an institute at Hesterville and one at Fairview. Books were ordered for the teachers of these two schools.

The day's work at Liberty Chapel resulted in the organization of a class for leadership of eight, the school at Bowie was reorganized, books for the teachers, literature for the school were ordered, including graded lessons for beginners and primaries, and literature for the Home Department. A class for leadership was organized at Liberty Hill with Miss Willie Richardson as teacher. Brother Beasley has his heart in the work hecause he has the work on his heart.

Brother W. C. Carlisle had me to spend two days with him at Rocky Hill in Winston County. We organized Cradle Roll, Beginner's, Primary, and Home Departments, and enrolled eight in the class for leadership with Miss Cherry Bridges and Mrs. T. M. Yarbrough as leaders of the class. The two days spent with these people will surely yield good results.

"MORE EGGS" PAID THE PASTOR.

"I've got more eggs than I ever did in my life, paid my debts, clothed the children in new dresses, and I paid the pastor his dues. I have money to spare now. "More Eggs" is the remedy for me. I sold 42½ dozen eggs last week, set four dozen, ate some and I have 1½ dozen left." Mrs. Lena McBroom, Woodbury, Tenn.

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, discovered the wonderful tonic "More Eggs" that revitalizes the flock and makes the hens work all the time. This remarkable egg producer means big poultry profits for you. Don't delay. Send a dollar to-day to E. J. Reefer, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., for a package of "More Eggs." Or better yet, send him $2.25, and he will send you three packages of "More Eggs" tonic prepaid. This is a season's full supply. A Million Dollar Bank guarantees that if you are not absolutely satisfied your money will be returned on request without question. So send either a dollar, or $2.25 to-day for this wonderful egg producer. Or write Mr. Reefer for his FREE Poultry Book that tells the experience of a man who is helping a great many people make money with their poultry, and who, himself, has a made a fortune out of the poultry business.—Adv.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING.

Save your Hair! Get a small bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It rohs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine to-night—now—any time— will surely save your hair.

Get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!—Adv.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Adv.

"FOR MEN LIKE YOU."

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., says the following story is told of a man in uniform approaching New York on a ferry from Jersey City, who said to a girl standing near by, "Hello, Cutey, where are you going?" Then, noticing the little badge she wore, he asked what it signified. "That indicates my membership in the Patriotic League," she replied. "And what kind of an organization may that he?" asked the soldier. "A society which we girls have gotten up to make New York safe for men like you," she said. That tells a volume in a sentence.

FOR COLDS AND GRIPPE FOLLOW DOCTOR'S ADVICE

Ask any physician or druggist and he will tell you that the first step in the treatment of a cold, cough, influenza or grippe should invariably be "a brisk calomel purgative, preferably the nauseless calomel, called Calotabs." This alone is often sufficient to break up a severe cold over night, or cut short an attack of grippe and possibly prevent pneumonia.

One Calotab on the tongue at bedtime with a swallow of water,—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with your eating, pleasures or work. Next morning your cold has vanished and your entire system is purified and refreshed. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages; price thirty-five cents. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists everywhere. Price refunded if you are not delighted.—Adv.

Biliousness

WHEN you have a bilious attack your liver fails to perform its functions. You become constipated. The food you eat ferments in your stomach instead of digesting. This inflames the stomach and causes nausea, vomiting and a terrible headache. Take Chamberlain's Tablets. They will tone up your liver, clean out your stomach and you will soon be as well as ever. There is nothing better.

A CRY IN THE NIGHT.

In behalf of the long neglected superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the M. E. Church, South. This Church claims a constituency of 2,225,000 adherents and property values that stagger the imagination. For this, much credit is due the above named men. This appeal is to save these valiant though aged and physically infirm heroes from real want. For years they have suffered in silence, receiving an annual pittance from the Church which they have helped to establish.

Men and women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose hearts pulsate in sympathy and love, can you rest complacently in the midst of your material possessions while the retired preachers, who did so much to sharpen your spiritual perceptions, languish in need of the bare necessities of existence? Shall they, who have given their all to create for you priceless values both material and spiritual, be forgotten and neglected when the wolf howls at their doors?

A voice is calling through the land: "Buy Liberty Bonds," and millions of free men, women and children swell the grand chorus "Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond!" And for what? To win the great battle of Humanity versus Kaiserism. The person who can and does not respond to this call is unworthy the name of American.

When you have purchased your Bonds, why not donate at least one to the Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., for the Superannuate Endowment Fund? By so doing you will not only perform a patriotic duty, but also you will assist in bringing sunshine and happiness into the lives of the blessed old retired preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of said Church.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS.

Possibly you have imagined that you could not get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water that those who have been relieved of their rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisoning matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefitted. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr Rhodes, of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McCann of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism or any curable disease accept the guarantee offered below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the DEFINITE RELIGIOUS WORK BY THE ARMY Y. M. C A.

By A. G. Fegert.

The testimony of the ministers of all denominations is evidence that in every Y. M. C. A. building definite soul-winning work is being done systematically and continuously. This is in line with the findings of the Southern Department Army Y. M. C. A. religious work conference held in San Antonio, Texas, January 17 to 19, 1918. The motive which all the secretaries of the organization should have in their work was defined in the findings as follows:

"As to the motive which should prompt all our activities in the work for soldiers in the army camps, we affirm the declaration of the conference on religious work held in New York, November 22-23, 1917, which reads as follows:

"The Young Men's Christian Association re-affirms that it is not only a welfare and recreational agency, but primarily an organization whose purpose is fundamentally and specifically religious.

"We believe the term 'religious' as applied to the Young Men's Christian Association work in army camps means the bringing to bear of every energy—physical, mental, social and spiritual—to the task of leading men into right relations with Jesus Christ.

"We therefore further affirm the findings of the New York conference which say that all secretaries of the Association are not only to be in general sympathy with this religious purpose, but are to make their service turn prominently and steadily in this direction."

During the year according to the annual report of the Southern Department of the Army Y. M. C. A., 14,877 religious services were held in the Y. M. C. A. buildings in camp, with an aggregate attendance of 2,875,842. The records show that 43,609 professed conversion and 40,186 asked for the prayers of the religious leaders, while 37,779 renewed their purpose to live the Christian life.

A NOTE FROM RINGGOLD, LA.

I am in hopes the Ringgold charge will make a good report. The prospects for Methodism are improving in this country. I have been a constant reader of the Advocate for over forty years and appreciate its worth very much and always love to work for it. I preach at one appointment on the Ringgold circuit. I am in my seventy-fifth year, and so nervous I can hardly use a pen. THOS. J. MARTIN, Sr.

THE WORK AT SUMRALL, MISS.

Mr. Editor: For the first time in my ministerial life, I am not allowed to preach on the Sabbath day, so I will write. The mayor of our town has spoken and I am glad to obey. I want to stop the "flu" and I want to win the war, and I am obeying orders. If the War Department says preach on this thing, I try to preach on it, or if it says go out into highways and by-ways and make Liberty Loan speeches, I go and speak. I am not working and praying for peace now; I am working and praying for victory. It is not peace with Germany I want right now, but it is victory over Germany right now, and a peace that will follow victory will abide. And that is what we want.

This has been a year of strenuous work, but the work has agreed wih me. I have kept my work moving onward, the Lord being with me, and I have held fine revival meetings on other charges. I have preached two hundred times already this year. God has been with me, and my work has been honored in the saivation of souls, for which I am thankful.

I am closing out my second year on this charge and both years have been good to me. There have been advances along many lines. I believe I have as loyal people as you will find anywhere. We have a beautiful church building, well located, in which we are, with some success, working all the machinery of the Church. The population of Sumrall is not steady, consequently we are not always as steady in church work as we desire. But some of the best Methodists in Mississippi live in Sumrall and they keep the work going on. I am expecting to remain with them another year, of course. We expect everything in full from Sumrall this year by Conference time.

I must add, that my people who read the Advocate are delighted with you, Brother Carley, as Editor. God bless you and the Advocate.

J. E. WILLIAMS.

NUXATED IRON

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, formerly Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

LET GOD SHOW THE WAY.

By "Uncle Bill."

Sometimes the way seems dreary,
And alone you seem to stand;
Sometimes your heart grows weary,
Then reach up and take God's hand.
Forget all just a moment,
Only that God reigns on high
And that Christ's blest atonement
Was for such as you and I.

Though clouds have risen and darkened
Each step of the way you've trod,
'Twas when you had not hearkened
To the just commands of God.
Go, brother, and trust him fully,
In shadows and in the light,
And He will show you, truly,
The way that is best and right.

RELIGIOUS WORK.

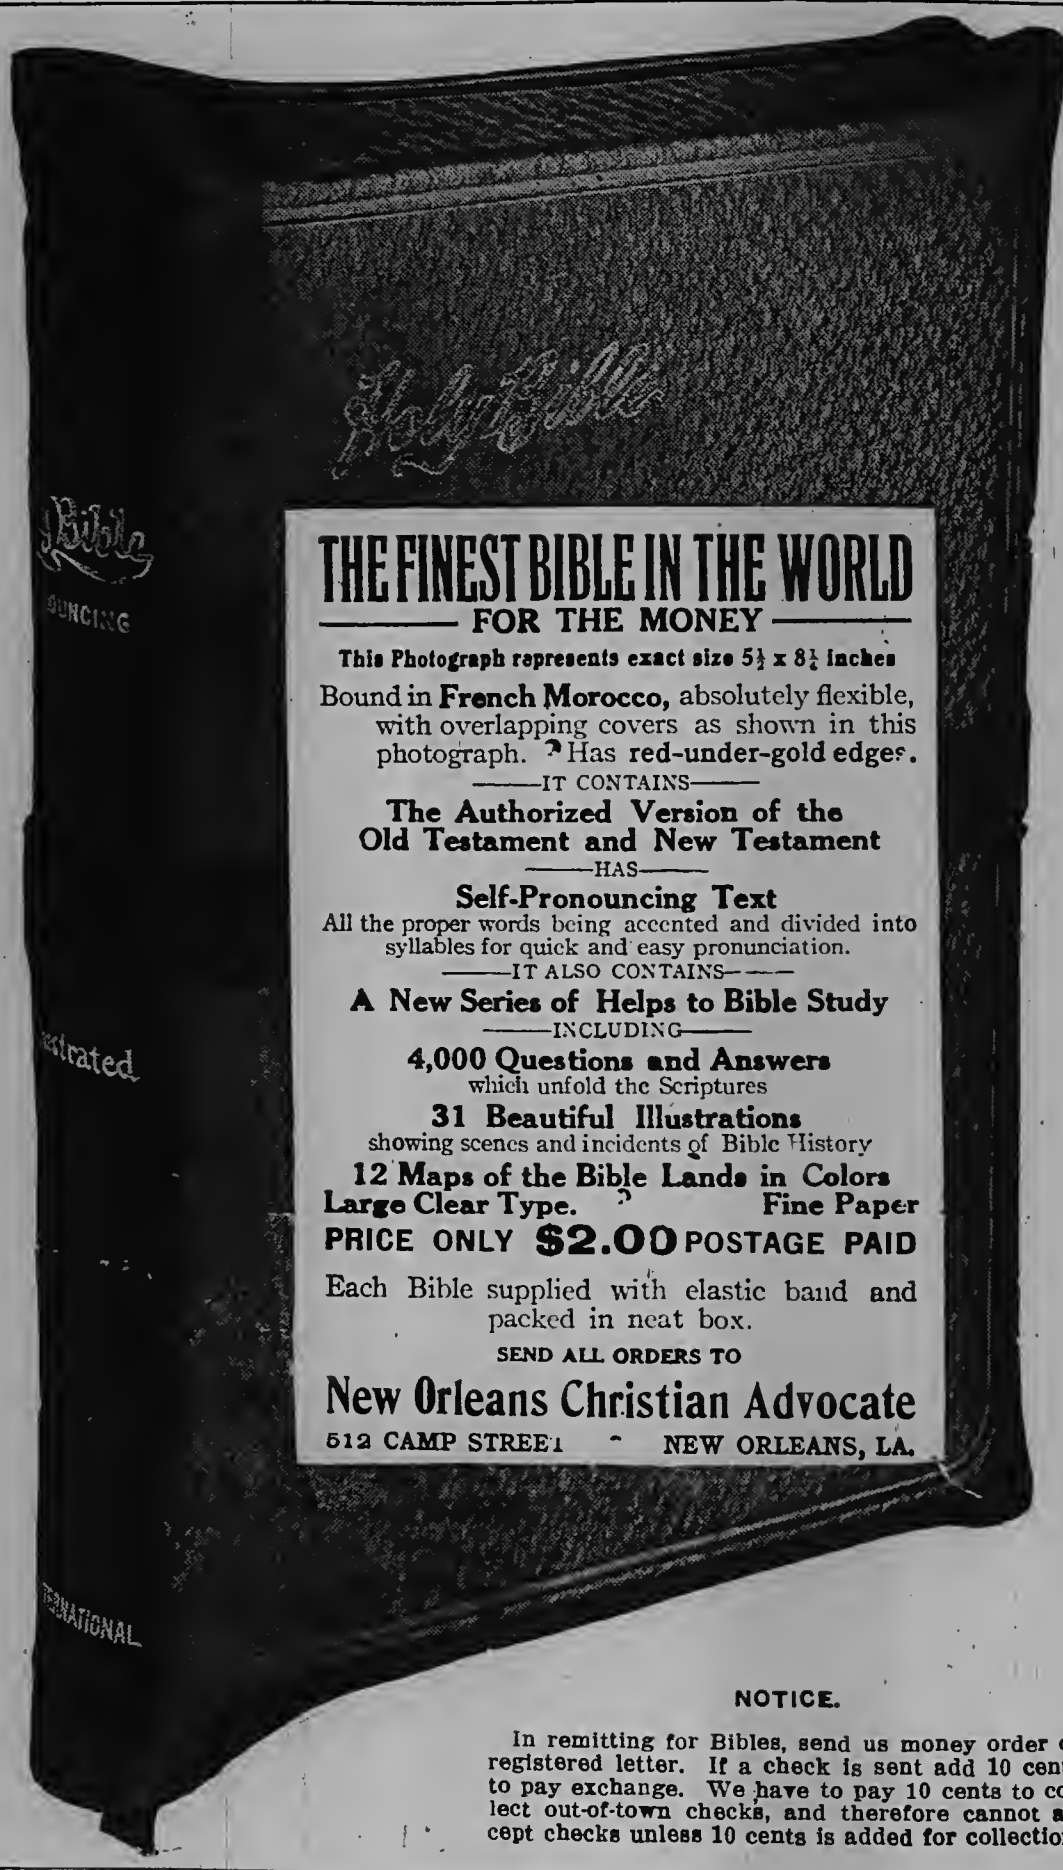
By Harry Miles.
(Passed by the Censor A. E. F.)

Our "Y" is one room, an underground casement of an old fort. It often seems as if our time was given to feeding the men. They face the canteen counter in one, two and three lines, all day long. The only chance for religious meetings is evenings after the canteen closes at 9 o'clock.

The other night a big regular army captain burst in upon my Bible class at 9:30. He had seen the light and supposed that the secretary was alone, making up his cash—so he came in for a business errand. He moved quietly to a far corner and stayed till the boys had gone. Then he apologized for the interruption and said, "You do not know what you are doing for these men. We officers must hold off from the men or they will abuse our familiarity; but my boys need just what you are giving them. I have heard some things to-night that did me good. I am glad that I came in." I asked him to join my officers' class, and he said, "Oh, I am frightfully irreligious." I told him that this was the reason I asked him, and that he would find religion more human than he thought, and spoke of the help to his boys in seeing, by his presence at Sunday service, his sense of the value of Christian life. He said quietly "Yes," asked when the officers' class met, and said he would come in. An unexpected appreciation like this makes one feel that it is all worth while.

The next Sunday, eight of those boys made their confession, and were received into the Church of Christ—not into any denomination. Members of more than a dozen denominations rose as I said, "We then, members of the Church of Christ, joyfully receive you into the household of faith." It was a rare exemplification of the Church Catholic. We write to the home churches of these boys, asking that they be recorded members there, on the basis of the confession made here. The first response to such a request came from a little country Baptist church, and said, "He will be voted in at the first meeting."

FROM BROTHER GRIFFIN.



Brother Carley: May I say through the Advocate, that after two months of suffering with something akin to sciatica, which landed me in the hospital, I have gradually recovered and have had a very busy summer?

Our meetings were held with such help as Barry, Decell, N. B. Harmon, Broadfoot, and Sullivan, all of whom seemed to sympathize with a "weak brother," and gave their best; and no preacher ever had better help. Twenty-six were received into the Church, and the churches were graciously blessed.

The Osyka church has recently been re-covered, and some church debts paid at Summit. As everywhere else, war claims have right of way, and war conditions have upset some plans. But our people are loyal and will "go over the top" by Conference—if the "flu" doesn't keep us closed up too long.

We are Dee-lighted with the Advocate staff. It shall have right of way always. W. T. GRIFFIN.

Summit, Miss.

A camera man working for the educational department of a film company met an old farmer coming out of a house in the town where he was working. GET THAT NEGLECTED MAN.

Probably in every community there is at least one man who is not identified with the Church in any way, and by general consent he is let alone. Everybody knows him—he is often "hail-fellow, well-met," but nobody thinks of approaching him in connection with the religious activities of the town.

What an opportunity for a little personal work that may result in immense good! A friendly inquiry, a tactful question, a kindly suggestion, a small service, may open the way for a ministry that may save a soul. It is not necessary to blow any trumpets in doing so—but go after that neglected man. You may get him.

MORAL BACKBONE.

More than ever before the world needs men who can stand flat-footed and say "No!" In the name of patriotism, one of the holiest sentiments that can exist in the human soul, influences are at work that at least tend to break down some of the strongest convictions that have been instilled into many of us from infancy. The mania for profanity and the craze for gambling and the rage for dancing are not the legitimate fruit of patriotism or of patriotic activities, and they are not even remotely connected in essence with these altogether admirable and praiseworthy things. But they have apparently come to be associated with both in the minds of a great many people. Cursing the Kaiser does not strengthen one's love for one's country; buying a chance in a raffle is not at all an evidence of patriotic fervor; and dancing, even though it be with soldiers and sailors, is no more a patriotic duty than drinking pond water. Patriotism and morality are not in conflict; it cannot be right to do wrong on the plea that it is patriotic. We ought to say "no" to a good many things.

WHAT ARE WE THINKING ABOUT?

We pass scores of men on the streets every day. We see them alone, and in groups of two or three. Some of them are walking alertly, with heads up and smiles on their faces. Some of them are moving slowly, with downcast eyes, apparently unaware of their surroundings. Some of them look care-free and happy, while others are haggard and worn. Some of them are well-dressed, and carry with them the air of prosperity. Others wear the garments of toil, and some seem to be almost in want. We speculate concerning their lot in life, and try to judge by their appearance who and what they are. But we wonder what they are thinking about. The face reflects the mind to some extent, but only imperfectly at best. We are in the midst of a great world that is rushing along in the currents of tremendous industrial and social and economic and political and spiritual upheaval. Old problems and new problems are confronting us at every turn, and myriad voices are calling to us for direction and help. What is the reaction of our intellectual processes to these stimuli from without? Is there any reaction at all? Are we keenly alive to the forces about us, or are we as insensate things? While our hands are busy, are our minds vacuous? The problem of the ages is not unemployed hands, but unemployed heads. What are we thinking about?

A NEW MENACE OF MATERIALISM.

There is a continuous conflict between the material and the spiritual. This conflict has raged from the beginning. The material enjoyment of the apple meant more to Eve than the spiritual joy of obedience to God's command. We are prone to measure values in terms of what we can experience with our physical senses. We like to apply the child's standard of quantity instead of quality.

We need but a moment's reflection to realize that there is no essential conflict between the material and the spiritual. Our physical needs that can be supplied only by material things are as real and as imperative as our spiritual needs. Monastic asceticism was practiced, we may assume, under the influence of the holiest motives; but it produced a type of life that was contrary to the fundamental principles of Christ's teachings. More than one ancient heresy developed out of the conception that the flesh is essentially evil while the spirit is holy. The error was detected and rejected, but the conflict has gone on unceasingly.

The trouble lies, it seems to us, not in the nature of our physical and spiritual natures, but in the degree of emphasis we place upon each. We are constantly making the mistake of putting the material ahead of the spiritual, and in so doing we run the risk of forgetting altogether the demands of the spiritual. Spiritual values become less and less evident, until finally they are practically ignored. The folly of failing to put first things first is followed by its inevitable result.

The Church has stood consistently for the supreme importance of spiritual things, and clear-visioned leaders of the world's thought have never misunderstood the ultimate issues of life. But multitudes of people who value present above future good and who are lacking in keenness of moral perception, have listened to the appeal of the material rather than the spiritual and have made slow the progress toward altruistic ideals. In spite of this attitude, however, we believe that the world has been growing better all the while, and we are convinced that there is now, on the part of mankind generally, a higher appreciation of spiritual values than ever before.

But we fear that a new menace of materialism is about to develop out of conditions brought about by the present world war. Unskilled labor is receiving such pecuniary rewards as were never dreamed of before. We are glad of it. The laboring man has long complained that he did not receive a fair share of the product of his industry. In the main, we believe his complaint has been well founded. But he is being well paid now, and we hope he will never have occasion to feel that it is otherwise.

But the danger lies just at this point. The untrained, unskilled laborer, even a boy still in his teens, is able to make so much money by manual labor that he will not realize the value of intellectual and spiritual preparation for life. The boy is likely to say, "Why should I spend several years in school, when I can go to work now and make more money without education than many of the most highly educated men used to make? Schools may be good things, but I can't afford to lose the opportunity to make good money now by work that doesn't require any education." This attitude is likely to be taken by so many of our boys and young men that, indirectly at least, our whole civilization will feel the effect. And much of the ground that has been gained in elevating the spiritual ideals of the race will have to be fought over again.

We would not, for a moment, suggest that the remedy for this state of affairs is to be found in lowering the present scale of wages. But it is to be found in renewed and persistent emphasis upon the doctrine that "the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment." This emphasis must begin in the home, and it must be applied from the pulpit and in the press. The fight is not a new one, but the forces of materialism have been tremendously re-enforced. This is a time for serious thought and vigorous action.

PEACE NOT YET.

Peace has not yet come, but events are moving rapidly and there is no telling what a day may bring forth. So far as we are able to judge by the official communications from the Central Powers, and the unofficial reports that are coming from those countries, their internal conditions must be much more serious than the outside world realizes. There seems to be almost a feverish haste on the part of Germany to secure an armistice, presumably upon whatever terms the Allies may propose. Austria has professed her willingness to conclude an armistice without reference to negotiations under way by Germany. It seems to be pretty well established that Turkey is prepared to make a separate peace. Under these circumstances, we may be prepared for startling developments to take place over night. We may rest assured, however, that the Allies will not sacrifice any of the advantage they have secured thus far, and that provisions for an armistice and ultimately for peace will be of such kind as will require Germany to acknowledge that she has been thoroughly defeated. We believe the victory we have longed for is in sight.

There is no necessary antagonism between the spirit of culture and the spirit of faith, and they are not lightly to be judged who from one side or other have done their best to set the theologian and the humanist by the ears and to compel one to make a painful choice between his Virgil and his Bible. • • • The masters of literature have not been the enemies but the friends of Christ.—John Watson, D.D.

EVANGELISM.

An extract from the Quadrennial Address of the General Superintendent, Dr. S. D. Chown, to the Canadian Methodist General Conference, October 2, 1918.

The successful Church of the future must ring with the evangelistic note. The burden bearers of the times to come will need not less but more supernatural aid for their task. The pure ideals which shall follow the purging of this war will call for the fullness of divine strength for their attainment. Deeper convictions of truth will require richer baptisms of the Holy Spirit for their fulfilment. The evangel of forgiveness, regeneration and complete sanctification will never become part of an outworn creed. The beliefs which the soldiers retain, having passed through the jostling of the war, are such as cannot be shaken. They will abide, and be the spiritual tools of every successful workman in the Master's vineyard. May I suggest what these are?

Average soldiers believe in the scientific test which Jesus Christ himself set forth, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and if they see the fruits of Christianity in an institution or in the life of a soldier of any rank, they almost worship the goodness therein revealed. This is a challenge to the Church of the very first importance—that she reveal within herself and develop in every sphere of life the very fruit of the Spirit of God. No lower ideal can satisfy either earth or heaven.

The soldier believes in prayer. The higher the rank the more implicitly, as a rule, he leans upon prayer as the staff of his life; and on No Man's Land, in the midst of an attack, the attiude of the thoughtful private is dependence upon nothing but the strength and mercy of God. He may not care for parade services, and to be "fed up" on formal religion, but his heart instinctively turns in time of need to the great Captain of Salvation.

And the soldiers believe in comradeship, which is but another name for the second great commandment of the law, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." There is the ardor of a religion about the comradeship at the front. It is a creed through which the golden threads of practice are woven a hundred times a day. If the Church cannot develop the spirit of comradeship in the new time she will be lost.

The soldiers believe in sacrifice. It is the whole atmosphere of their lives. They stake their souls upon it! And if the Church at home cannot match their sacrifice she will lose her appeal to them. If she cannot give them tasks which call for heroism, she will not be able to kindle them to enthusiasm.

And they believe in the naturalness of death. It is but an incident in life. It is only an extension of the great adventure to which they have committed themselves in fulness of sacrifice. The Church must inspire the same fearlessness of death in her members, so that in extremis they will naturally cry, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? * * * Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Soldiers believe also that the true goal of life is to be ready to lay it down in altruistic service. They make no bargain as to the time or manner in which their lives shall fulfill themselves.

Every true soldier's life is an index finger pointing the Church to the method of fulfilling her divine destiny. If the Church heeds it not, she must read the writing on the wall. "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." Her measurement of men must be their willingness to lay down their lives in service, even unto death, for the things in which they most steadily believe.

In the faith of these truths, namely, the value of Christian fruit, of prayer, of comradeship, of sacrifice; in the faith of the naturalness of death, and of the high purpose of life as the perfection of the spirit of sacrifice; in faith in these things, and in the power of that faith, Canadian soldiers have risen to heights of heroism beyond any words of praise which we could bestow.

A letter received from a general at the front tells me not to worry about them over there. They are full of cheerfulness, because in the hell of the bitterest drive they have the greatest opportunity of their lives. Over there they do not measure life in terms of danger, disease or death, but solely in terms of duty and opportunity. It is this that has transformed many of them beyond our imagination; and it is the incarnation of these principles, and nothing less, that can make the Church a supreme power in the hands of her Lord for the salvation of the world and every man in it.

A living faith in the short creed I have outlined will focus light and power upon our divine objective, and make us evangelists indeed.

Need I exhort you that you lift your eyes unto these hills of truth from whence cometh our help, for with this enrichment the Church cannot fail.

IS THERE SAVING GRACE IN WAR?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

To ask the question raised in the caption of this article is to answer it negatively if either the teachings of history or the principles of Christianity be accepted by us. Nevertheless, there are those who seem ready to answer it affirmatively and with emphasis.

A recent article, widely circulated in weekly papers and in pamphlet form, takes the position that war has brought to light what has long existed or has produced as it has progressed a great body of most admirable Christians, who are overflowing with a fine type of unconscious Christianity, best described by a phrase coined by Donald Hankey, "the religion of the inarticulate."

The characteristics of this religion (which many who have it, we are told, do not know that they have it) are self-sacrifice manifested on the battlefield or behind the lines or in pest-ridden districts or among starving villagers; charity exhibited in giving the last crust to the hungry or the last garment to the naked; humility shown by titled persons doing menial work to relieve sufferers or by sons of noblemen bivouacking with the sons of peasants on terms of equality; generosity of both rich and poor people in making great sacrifices in order to meet the demands made upon them in this time of war. Now, all these characteristics are very admirable, and at such a time as the present they are likely to receive universal applause.

But may they not exist without any religion at all? Closely analyzed, they all may be reduced to one—namely, generosity and kindness to the needy in a time of great trial and distress. But does such generosity and kindness, however self-sacrificing, constitute a Christian, articulate or inarticulate? Do not even the Huns the same toward their fellows? If this be the whole of the war-made Christianity, may we not ask of its possessors whether they claim to have religion or not, or know that they have it, "What do ye more than others? Do not the heathen the same?" Both ancient and modern paganism can supply examples of self-sacrificing generosity equal to anything set forth by the advocates of the "religion of the inarticulate."

When deeds of charity and kindness are set up as perfect samples of faultless religion one cannot put out of mind what St. Paul (who may be regarded as tolerably high authority on what constitutes a Christian) wrote in his first letter to the Corinthian church: "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love it profiteth me nothing." (I Cor. 12:3.) Doing charitable deeds is evidently no substitute for the kind of love, or charity, which the great apostle reckons to be of the essence of Christianity, else he could not have taught that one might give all his goods to the poor and yet not have it. A man might have the spirit of a martyr and give his body to be burned and yet not be a Christian, if we may trust St. Paul to teach us. Evidently the apostle believed and taught that pure and undefiled religion has in it love toward God as well as generosity and kindness toward one's fellow-men, and that its prime elements are faith and hope and love. He enjoyed a religion requiring for its existence the new birth and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the human soul. He knew nothing of a religious life that is invisible in time of peace, when nothing militant stirs to action, and inarticulate in time of war, when unusual scenes of suffering evoke sacrifices from it.

It appears that another characteristic of this "religion of the inarticulate" is that it has a decided antipathy to the Church, with its creeds and ordinances, and that it proposes after the war to "develop its own Church, which will be the Church of the future," finding its "leaders among the laity" and pronouncing "ordinances, rituals and creeds as non-essential for admission" to its pales. This preacherless, creedless, voiceless, inarticulate Church, we are told, will be the conclusive proof that "the Church of to-day has failed" and will take its place among men as the final and best form of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

Of such a Church Paul knew nothing, as he knew nothing of any form of Christianity which could be described by the phrase "the religion of the inarticulate." Pauline Christianity is not a deaf and dumb spirit, and the Pauline Church was not a creedless, gospel-less body of inchoate and incoherent sentimentality arising out of the smoke of battle.

Close akin to this unscriptural program of "the religion of the inarticulate" is the somewhat prevalent notion that the war by its own force is going to make men Christians. War has no such property.

That many men facing death daily will become more serious, some of them will come to Christ and be saved, is highly probable. For such a result we all devoutly pray. We have reason to believe with joy that already many thousands have been thus blessed. But we are forced to admit with sorrow that many thousands also have been demoralized by the war. Absent from home and home restraints, beset by the peculiar temptations of a foreign land and strange surroundings, multitudes of young men have become the victims of vice. Many will return from France, as many returned from the Philippines, wrecked by habits of vice contracted in the army.

Every student of history knows that the tendency of war is to demoralize. Cromwell's army, with all its Puritan origin and purposes, did not escape from the effects of this tendency of war. The army of Northern Virginia, commanded by Robert E. Lee, was one of the most religious forces that ever went to war, and great revivals of religion prevailed in its camps, as one may discover by reading that interesting book entitled "Christ in the Camp," by Rev. J. William Jones, D.D., but every one acquainted with the facts knows that many came back from the army of Northern Virginia wrecked in faith and morals.

There is nothing in war to convert. There is in its hardships and conflicts that which inspires self-sacrifice and generosity. It is also a great equal-ixer. In the trenches in France the rich and the poor are meeting together and treating each other as brothers. Engagement in a common cause will do all that. Even a political campaign will bring men together somewhat in the same way. Hence the proverb that "politics makes strange bedfellows." But war-begotten virtues will perish in peace, having no root in themselves.

For the conversion of the human soul from sin to God nothing less than the saving grace of Jesus Christ is required.

Under the pressure and perplexities of this awful war multitudes may lose all faith. During the war between the States many men in both the North and the South lost all concern for religion and religious things. The same results will follow the war now going on.

Our only hope is in God. A religion which bears the trade mark "made in war" will soon die and rest under a tombstone inscribed "Died in peace." There is no saving grace in war.

Let us pray for our dear boys at the front and keep the altar fires burning at home. When they return to us wounded and sick and sore, as many will, they will need the old Bible, the old faith, the old prayers, the old songs and the old Church. Many thousands of them are longing for these holy things now as the Hebrew exiles by the rivers of Babylon yearned for Jerusalem, with its holy temple and blessed services.—Midland Methodist.

A TIMELY MESSAGE CONCERNING PROHIBITION.

By Dr. P. A. Baker, General Superintendent, Anti-Saloon League of America.

The greatest blunders that have ever been made by military authorities have been in the failure to follow up hard-won victories. The same is true in even a greater degree in the field of moral reform. The great weariness of the long, hard, aggressive fighting necessary to win the victory, is almost invariably followed by a period of relaxation that gives the enemy the watched-for opportunity to reform his lines and give battle at the most vulnerable point of attack. This is peculiarly true of the liquor traffic. It has two great assets—Appetite and Greed. While these endure and can be combined, eternal vigilance is the price of real prohibition.

Voting the town, the State or the nation dry will not insure effective prohibition. Prohibition laws must be buttressed by personal temperance if they are to remain and be effective. Public sentiment is not and cannot be made stationary. It will go forward or it will recede. If nourished by constant enlightenment, it will thrive until appetite for liquor is eradicated and the people have gotten back to the normal state, and the prohibition laws are safe and their enforcement is insured. There is no way by which such a condition can be reached so cheaply and permanently as by a wide and systematic distribution of wholesome literature in all dry territory for years to come.

The Manager of The American Issue Publishing Company, realizing the need of this, has wisely prepared and published large quantities of such literature which will meet the need of the various classes of our people if from time to time it is placed in their hands. Now that the cause of prohibition is winning everywhere, it would be a crime if through neglect to educate the people we should let down this standard to the point where the laws will be disregarded and personal temperance ceases to be considered a virtue. Neal Dow knew well what he was talking about when he said "Sow the State knee-deep in literature." Now that we have succeeded in making liquor selling disreputable, the next final step is to make liquor drinking disreputable.

"A holy man will have eyes to see holiness in others. Holiness is never hypercritical. Some men who claim a large degree of holiness toward human weakness are merciless. The Son of God did not bring a railing accusation against the sinner. He was pitiful and full of compassion."

LAITY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN.

By A. P. Holt.

I favor the granting of laity rights to women, on two grounds:

First—Because it is wise.

Second—Because it is just.

I.

We are living in an age of large and wonderful experiences and happenings.

But this age is not to be compared with that into which we shall enter when this war is ended.

The Church is being tested now as never before, and after the war the opportunities that will confront her, and the responsibilities that will await her should engage the attention of all thoughtful and spiritually-minded people.

Will the Church be ready to meet this grave responsibility? I have faith to answer emphatically, yes. Trusting in the Master whose teachings have led the world to this day of larger things, His Church, that has cherished, transmitted and exemplified His teachings, will be found prepared for its enlarged mission.

But it behooves us as followers of the Master and members of one of the branches of His great Church to see that every obstacle to her highest usefulness and service is removed.

Laity rights for women is one of the questions that must be solved and solved in accordance with the enlightened and progressive spirit of the age if our Church is to take her proper place in the world-movements that confront us.

In times past woman has always been used by the Church. We know her loyalty and have always relied on her counsel and service. But in the crisis which awaits the Church we need her presence, with her pure and sympathetic vision, in our councils; we need her voice, always clear and certain, in shaping our larger activities; we need her help, with all her energy and perseverance, in carrying forward these plans successfully; we need her womanly intuition, tact and wisdom to avoid any dangers that might threaten us; and we need her unfailing devotion ever to keep the Church to that which is highest and noblest. In this new and enlarged life the Church will stand in need of all the qualities that women alone supply. Then let us have the wisdom to use these qualities to their fullest extent.

II.

Long our Church has accepted the unstinted, self-sacrificing, loving service of its women without according them any voice in its deliberations. She may be a Sunday school superintendent but not a member of the quarterly conference. She may do the work of a steward, but may not hold the office. She may construct the Church but may not be one of its trustees.

The spiritual fires on the Church altars would surely burn less bright, her Sunday schools would be without adequate and efficient teachers, and even her material welfare would suffer but for the faithful, efficient and consecrated women. Then there can be no justice in refusing her a larger share in the affairs of the Church. She should enjoy all the privileges of full Church membership.

The State is fast abolishing the prehistoric idea that women are weaker, inferior and less wise than men, and much more should the Church to which women in all the ages have given their highest and best.

In conclusion, changing the word nation to Church, I ask in the language of Mr. Wilson,

"Are we * * to ask and take the utmost that our women can give—service and sacrifice of every kind—and still say we do not see what title that gives them to stand by our sides in the guidance of the affairs of their Church and ours?"

A LETTER FROM BISHOP LAMBUTH.

Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Chairman of the War Work Commission of our Church, has been for some time in France, studying the war situation and especially the religious and welfare work among the soldiers. His opinions concerning the great issues involved are well worthy of consideration, for, as is well known, he has had such opportunities for the study of world problems as few men of our nation have enjoyed. And no man of his day has made better use of his opportunities. Concerning the various movements for human uplift and the world's betterment he can speak as one who has had a share in such work and yet as one who has sought no other reward than the consciousness of duty done and the approval of his Master.

Recently there came from Bishop Lambuth a letter to Rev. G. M. Eakes, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Gainesville, Ga. While the letter was, in part, a personal communication concerning the good work of Mr. Felix Jackson, a business man of Gainesville who is now in the Y. M. C. A. service in France, it gives some information concerning the situation "over there" that will be of interest to our people generally. The letter has been published in one of the Georgia papers, hence I am taking the liberty of giving some extracts from the Bishop's interesting communication.

Concerning the issues involved in this world struggle, he says:

"It was our Ambassador to Turkey who said, 'The moral issues of this era are the greatest in the history of the world.' Mr. Henry Morgenthau was right. And it will take the best and strongest men we have in America to meet these issues, and meet them we must. It is not an hour for retrospect, but one for action. We, as Americans, may feel thankful for the character of the issues we have had to face in our homeland and for the demands of a growing civilization. They have trained us to look difficulties squarely in the face and nerved us to meet and overcome them in the spirit of service to the individual man and to humanity at large. As I look at it from my present standpoint it seems as though we in the United States have been in a great training school for events which have been hidden from view. The veil has now been drawn aside and we are made to realize the new and important role we have to play as a nation in the tremendous world movements which lie before us."

Bishop Lambuth's estimate of the value of the service of the Y. M. C. A. to our soldiers is, in part, as follows:

"It goes without saying that the Y. M. C. A., which secured Mr. Jackson's services as a voluntary worker, is doing a truly great work for our boys and for France in helping to win the war. If the war involves a great moral issue, and it does, and if the winning of it depends upon the morale of our soldiers, then every man who contributes to this end is a real factor in it all. * * * A superficial survey even of this vast work fills one with astonishment. The task is stupendous. In order to care for American soldiers scattered through France, the central office in Paris, presided over by Mr. E. C. Carter, has the territory divided into eight great areas and each area under the direction of a regional director and business manager. The work is again subdivided and carried on by a regional staff which relates itself to religious and educational work, entertainment, athletics, transportation, construction, moving pictures, woman's work, and office management."

In his letter the Bishop tells what he has seen of the every-day work of the Y. M. C. A. in France—how the "Y" workers are ministering to American fighting men, engineers, carpenters, stevedores, Chinese laborers, Portuguese soldiers, German prisoners, and others; operating canteens, hotels, restaurants, and lodging houses; furnishing the men in the "Y" buildings heat, light, and many of the comforts of home; giving them wholesome amusements; ministering to their spiritual needs. And all this, as he says, is done under such pressure and in the face of such difficulties as we at home cannot understand. He adds: "Some one asks, Is it worth while? I ask, in turn, Is it worth while to win this war for righteousness and justice and democracy? Is it worth while to minister to our noble fellows who fight for the liberty our sires fought for—the liberty which has made our country what it is? I close in Mr. Jackson's own words, uttered in a talk a few days ago: 'It is no sacrifice to work for these boys. It is the greatest privilege that ever came to my life.' We may well be grateful that our country can furnish business men and Christian laymen who are willing to lay aside their own interests and give themselves without reservation to the great work of ministering to our boys, and through them to the freeing of the weaker nations, like Belgium and Serbia, from the heel of barbarism and the rule of autocracy."

Only a few extracts from a lengthy letter are given. But they are words that carry weight, because back of them is a man who has given himself unreservedly to every enterprise that has had for its purpose the making of a better world.

LAITY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN—THE OTHER SIDE OF IT.

By Mrs. Cornelia C. Meek.

Dear Mr. Editor: I notice that in recent issues of the New Orleans Christian Advocate there has appeared a good deal in advocacy of what many term laity rights for women. This question is now before the Church, and it is well enough that our Church papers should be open to a discussion of it. It was before the last three General Conferences, and those of 1910 and 1914 voted largely against it, while the last one (which many regard as the most radical in the history of the Church, South) voted largely in its favor. Can it be logically argued that the view of the majority of the General Conference of 1918 should be entitled to great weight, while that of the two preceding General Conferences should be lightly regarded?

In some of the utterances bearing on this issue there have appeared intimations, if not assertions, that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been lacking in appreciation of its women and has failed to do them justice. Over against this view, we submit the following statement, written some five years ago by one of the foremost men in our denomination:

"The good women (whose work for the Church is worthy of great praise) seem to have overlooked entirely the special rights and privileges which the Church has granted them—rights and privileges which the men of the Church do not enjoy at all. First, the General Conference granted them the privilege of organizing Missionary Societies. These are entirely in the hands of the women. With them the men have nothing whatever to do. Later the General Conference granted the women the privilege of training and setting apart and appointing Deaconesses, and with this not even the Bishops have anything to do—an arrangement which is not altogether satisfactory. If the rights of the women and the rights of the men were balanced just now, it seems clear that the women already have a pretty good share of special rights. If now, in addition to all these things, the women get the few righs that the men have, could not the men with good reason start a movement for 'the rights of the laity?'"

Furthermore, if there is to be no discrimination whatever between men and women in the Church, if they are to stand upon absolutely the same plane, must not women, if they desire it, be given license to preach and be accorded places in the itinerant ministry? The right of an open door into the pulpit, if he professes to be called and is qualified for that service, is one of the rights of a layman. If women are to be given 'the full rights of the laity' in every respect, how can this privilege be denied them? This phase of the question may not seem to be up at present, in view of the wording of the proposed constitutional amendment, but that it is really involved in the pending issue there is no doubt. Are Southern Methodists ready to embark upon a course which manifestly must lead in this direction?

Some of the "laity rights" proponents seem to speak as if all the women of the Church were in accord with their views and were concurring in requesting more privileges; but such is far from being the case. There are thousands of women in Southern Methodism who are not at all in sympathy with this agitation. As bearing pertinently upon this important issue, we ask the privilege of having reproduced in the columns of the Advocate the following impressive utterance, made by Mrs. T. B. King, of Memphis, Tenn., in reply to Miss Belle Bennett at the Oklahoma City General Conference:

"It is my distinguished privilege this morning to represent the motherhood of the Church. I am not a mother myself, but my own precious mother is living, and I can conceive no greater honor than to represent her and speak for her this morning. I come before you not only to speak for my mother, but for thousands and multiplied thousands of women all over Southern Methodism; and I declare to you we do not want laity rights. The very movement, from its beginning, has been utterly repugnant to us. And I represent the interest of the Christian Church. We are doing just as much work as the women who want laity rights. We are contributing just as much money; and we do not feel that we have been circumscribed in any particular. We do not ask for more liberty or latitude; and certainly not for emancipation, for there is nothing to be emancipated from.

"If there is a highly honored class on this earth, it is Southern womanhood, warm, happy, exalted, and beloved. No queen upon her throne has held more royal sway or exercised more undisputed sovereignty. Our splendid, noble, chivalrous men would give the last ounce of their strength and every drop of their blood for our defense and protection. Oh, it was a sad day for American womanhood, and it received a most cruel blow, when the question of 'women's rights' was raised!

"This whole question of laity rights is the suffragist question. You read the literature that has been sent out by this movement, and if you do not find that one point coming right through, from start to finsh, the question of women voting, I do not see what else you can find in it. It is their desire to vote. It is the Church wing of the suffrage question. I have never talked to one who favored this, with one exception, who was not a suffragette.

"They say that this principle of rights is fundamental; that women are entitled to men's rights as much as men are. I want to remind you of the decision handed down by Chief Justice Marshall. He said that the question of suffrage had always been regarded as a matter of expediency, and not one of inherent rights. The men in the District of Columbia have the full right of citizenship, and yet not one of them can vote. The men and the officers in the Army and the Navy do not feel that it is any hardship that they cannot vote.

"When God created the sexes, he made woman for man's helpmeet, and not for his competitor. One was to be the complement of the other. He gave us different endowments, different graces, different talents, and different spheres to operate in. I come to you this morning and ask you if it is right that men's work shall be put upon women's shoulders? We cannot do your work, and you cannot do ours. We have more than we can well do now, and we do not want to do yours. We do not want to act as men; we do not want to be men. We want to be womenly women, with all the sweetness and gentleness that God has endowed us with.

"Suppose you let women come in to do all your work, to be stewards and members of all the Conferences—what is going to happen? You emasculate your Church in one sense and you masculinize it in another. The Church needs men. Let the men come and take their place, and let the women stay where they belong, and where God intended for them to be.

"They say it is Scriptural, and they give this passage of the Scripture: 'There is neither male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus.' You know full well that that is not a question of administration at all. That is a question of justification by faith and our relation to Christ. If it is Scriptural, when the seven were elected in the Church, why was not a woman elected one of the deacons? Why was not a woman sent out with the seventy, or made one of the apostles of our Lord? Christ is the head of the Church, and man is the head of the woman.

"They bring up the cry of 'taxation without representation.' Our offerings are free-will offerings—nobody is taxed in our Church. They say that they cannot administer their own affairs. But the women appropriate every cent of money that they raise, at their Council meetings. There are ten women on the Board of Missions.

"Why should these women ask to act independently of the Church and set up a government of their own? I feel like that is disloyal, and as one of the women of the Church who has had a large part in this work, and who has helped to raise all this money, I say it is disloyal. Think of the confusion and anarchy in our Church if the women are allowed to act independently of the rest of the Church! So I hope that you will let it stand just as it is.

"They say that most of the other Churches have answered this call of the women. It was stated at the last Ecumenical Conference that Methodism had made an increase of 1,109,000 members, and that one-third of this was in our Church. One-half of the increase in American Methodism (for the preceding ten years) was in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Why should we follow the example of others when we are taking the lead? It would be better for them to follow our example, I think.

"Mr. Taft, I think it was, who said the South is the conservator of our great Nation. When radicalism comes from the North and the East and the West, there is ballast enough in the South to keep the grand old Ship of State moving on her way in the boundless expanse of the governmental high seas. So I say to you about the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her feet are planted on the rock. Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted, nor heeds the violent shock. Her eye is upon Omnipotence, and she sounds out the challenge to Methodism all over the world—

'Faith of our fathers, holy faith,
We will be true to thee till death.'"

EDITORIAL CONFERENCE IN NEW YORK.

By James R. Joy, D.D.,
Editor The Christian Advocate, New York.

For nearly two hours last Thursday morning Dr. John R. Mott addressed a group of Protestant editors upon the United War Work Campaign for $170,500,000 which is to begin November 11. He emphasized what morale means to an army, how the seven War Work organizations, each in its own way, helps to whet the forces to a fighting edge, explained the origin of the joint drive, and counted up the advantages of the plan. Many questions were asked, and the speaker frankly met the current criticisms and objections in a way which removed misconceptions and tended to abate prejudice. At the close the editors without a dissenting vote enthusiastically endorsed Dr. Mott's leadership, expressed entire approval of the plan, and pledged themselves and their papers to work unreservedly for the success of the United War Work Campaign.

The editorial conference was held in New York in Dr. Mott's private office, that spacious room on the ninth floor of 347 Madison Avenue, the Grand Headquarters of the War Lords of the Y. M. C. A. The papers represented were as wide apart as Boston, Kansas City and Atlanta, or as The Christian Register, Zion's Herald and the Central Christian Advocate. The editors had an opportunity to see for the first time the famous lay field marshal in action, as Dr. Mott, warming to his task, produced from his pigeon holes notes of his interviews with the world's great captains, memoranda of arguments before cabinet officers or with the President himself, or by the touch of a button summoned his aides who unfolded before their eyes maps of war areas that Hindenburg would give half Belgium to see.

Dr. Mott, who is not only the head of the International Y. M. C. A., but the Campaign Manager of the United War Work Drive, began his address with Napoleon's statement that morale was three-fourths of the game. Pershing had said "900 men with the Red Triangle are worth 1000 men without it." The things that weaken morale be enumerated as War-weariness, Idleness, Uncertainty, and Insidious Propaganda. Morale is strengthened by Physical Comfort, Contentment, Wise Use of Leisure, Change and Refreshment of Mind, Consciousness of a Righteous Cause, Backing at Home, and Pure Religion. The Y. M. C. A. and the six war work agencies associated with it in this joint appeal for funds are, each in its own way, striving to supply all these tonic elements in the fighting man's life, not only that he may be a better man but that he may be a better fighter, and so win the war, which is the supreme business of America in this hour.

That even the upset sum of $170,500,000 is inadequate to the present need Dr. Mott went on to demonstrate by showing that since the budgets were carefully worked out four months ago the size of the army had been doubled, the scope of the work among and by women had been greatly extended, and the center of war interest and activity had been transferred overseas, with a consequent multiplication of expense owing to high prices and the conditions of work with a mobile army. He spoke of the Continuity of the work, pointing out how it begins to touch the drafted man when he leaves home, goes with him to the cantonment, accompanies him on board the transport, meets him at the port of debarkation, goes with him to his village billet, to the flying field, into the zone of combat, to the hospital, and, if the worst comes, even to the grave. He remarked upon its Comprehensiveness: how it was to the soldier and sailor home, school, athletic field, club, lyceum, gymnasium, library, and church. "But where," he said, "dare we leave the boy? Which one of these functions can we possibly cut out?" To do all this the present budget allows only eight cents a day per man. Moreover, the "Y" operates 1000 foyers du soldat for the French army and is invited to go in and do the same service for the Italian troops. In view of these growing demands it is evident that only by a large over-subscription of 50 or 100 per cent will the fund be prepared to meet the emergencies which are the stuff of which wars are made

Dr. Mott warned against the thought that the climax of need had passed. He did not look for an early end of the war. But even peace would bring the heaviest tasks of all, for the period of demobilization with its leisure, uncertainty and impatience, would be the period of great peril to the morale of the soldiers, and the war work agencies would then face the necessity of instituting a far-reaching educational program and perhaps a khaki university to meet the situation.

On the special subject of the United War Work Campaign Dr. Mott spoke with perfect frankness. His policy from the first had been to keep the Y. M. C. A. out of mergers, war-chests and the like. He had argued the case of an independent campaign before the authorities at Washington with all the skill at his command. But the demand for a united canvass on the war-chest plan had arisen in the Chambers of Commerce, Rotary Clubs and State Councils of Defense, and was strongly pressed on the grounds of economy of time, expense and effort. President Wilson, convinced by these arguments and by considerations growing out of his information bearing upon the whole situation, and moved by his solicitude for harmony and unity in the nation, had made a personal request that the seven societies join forces in a common appeal and canvass for funds. An invitation from such a source was not to be disregarded, and all parties had acquiesced in it. It must, however, be remembered that the President has expressly guarded the independence of the several units. He wrote:

"I wish it distinctly understood that their compliance with this request will not in any sense imply the surrender on the part of any of them of its distinctive character and autonomy, because I fully recognize the fact that each of them has its own traditions, principles, and relationships which it properly prizes and which, if preserved and strengthened, make possible the largest service."

The President having settled the matter, Dr. Mott admitted that he had himself come to realize that the advantages of the arrangement outweighed the disadvantage, at least in seven ways: (1) Economy: It will obviously save time and money, and the regular audit of all expenditure will put a check upon extravagance and waste. (2) Efficiency: Already the several organizations were learning valuable lessons from each other's experience. (3) It was enabling the stronger and more experienced agencies to be a service to the weak. (4) It was replacing mutual rivalry and misunderstanding with better feeling. (5) It was promoting the right sort of religious unity. (6) It was cementing that national solidarity which was indispensable to winning the war. (7) It was presenting a rare opportunity for cultivating breadth and largeness of soul. For example, the Jews were breaking through their traditional exclusiveness to enlist their fellow religionists to work for this common cause in an extraordinary manner, and there was every evidence that the other groups would do the same.

In reply to questions Dr. Mott gave assurances that the askings of the Jewish and Catholic agencies were only for items similar to the work of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., their other "denominational" activities being financed from "denominational" sources. He further explained that any person would be able to designate which of the societies should benefit by his gift, though it was hoped and believed that the practice of "earmarking" would not become general. The relation of the local war-chest to the drive was discussed, and the method of organization received due attention.

At the luncheon which followed, George Sherwood Eddy told what he had just seen in France of the clean and heroic lads for whom all this service was undertaken. His thrilling descriptions of the heroic daring and patient suffering of the boys of America and the Allied lands as he had observed them on the field and in the hospital were enough to inspire to any sacrifice for their comfort.

The following resolution, unanimously adopted by the editors, is evidence of the completeness of their conviction that the United War Work Campaign, as now planned and directed, offers a method in which the people of the Churches may join heartily with all other 100 per cent Americans to perform an urgent and invaluable service to their country.

"Resolved, That the undersigned editors of the Protestant religious press, met in conference in New York City, October 17, 1918, are deeply thankful to Dr. John R. Mott for his clear and convincing presentation of the plans for the United War Work Campaign and of the problems involved in it. We enthusiastically endorse his leadership, heartily approve the plans outlined, and pledge the fullest, most explicit and sustained support by continually urging the cause upon our several constituencies. And we do here so place ourselves on record."

BREWERIES RUN COUNTER TO WAR NEEDS.

Copy of a Letter from Dr. Garfield, United States Fuel Administrator.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: I have your letter of September 21, enclosing copy of telegram sent you by business men and hop growers of Yakima, Washington, with reference to the closing of breweries.

I am sure that no one regrets more than I the financial loss restrictions of this kind entail, but I can assure you that this restriction was not imposed until after the matter had received the most careful attention.

The entire matter has been under consideration at Washington for many months, and it was considered of such importance that practically all of the various governmental departments were consulted. After studying the matter most carefully from all its angles, it was decided that brewing ran counter to the war needs in so many important directions that the best interests of the war called for the action taken. Very truly yours,

(Signed) H. A. GARFIELD,
United States Fuel Administrator.

DEATH OF A GOOD MAN.

Dear Brother Carley: We have suffered a great loss in the death of Dr. Joseph Johnston Stevens, who passed away at his home here on the morning of the 15th. For many years he had been a steward in the Main Street Church and until his health failed some two or three years ago, he was one of the leading physicians of Hattiesburg. His wife was Miss Ethel Mounger, daughter of Dr. E. H. Mounger, of our Conference. The funeral was conducted the morning of the 16th by Rev. W. B. Jones, assisted by Revs. C. F. Emery and W. A. Terry.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

"The part Southern Methodism is now taking in the Centenary of American Methodist Missions, is deeply gratifying to me. The present condition of the world, the past history of Methodism, the ever youthful spirit of Christianity as it abides in Methodism, call for world-wide missions that surpass in depth of conviction, wisdom of movement, and power of execution anything yet witnessed in the life of the Church. A Drive can now begin that will mean the world for Christ."—Bishop R. G. Waterhouse.

A BIG PROGRAM FOR A GREAT CHURCH

A BIG PROGRAM FOR A GREAT CHURCH.

By Rev. A. J. Gearheard.

This is an age of big things. We would no more consent to live with the material conveniences of a century ago than our government would send its soldiers into battle clad as the knights of the thirteenth century. Should the Church of Jesus Christ move in the twentieth century along any line but the one that embraces the largest possible program it would be action without forethought, and certainly the Holy Spirit does not lead us in a small way. It is the business of the Church to blaze trails and set paces.

Under the inspiration of God, Methodism has led in big things. Being the broadest of all denominations, she can build the greatest structure. It is only in keeping with her broad foundation and the extensive scope of her influence that Methodism in the South has set out to raise $35,000,000 for missions, deeming the gift of such a sum the most fitting manner to celebrate the centennial of American Methodist Missions. The sum is large only by comparison, and it is indeed small when laid by the side of the needs of this age and the ability of our people.

One cannot touch in a paragraph the whole need of the country served by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. New Orleans may be cited as a fair sample of fallow ground. This metropolis of the South is destined to take second rank in the commercial world to few cities of America. The whole of the South American trade, together with the produce of a great farming and manufacturing section promises to find in New Orleans a clearing house, and to this city must come men of great leadership. Her population must mount up into millions in the next few decades, and the Church that dominates New Orleans to-morrow is the one that launches within her borders the greatest program to-day.

Already the Southern Baptist denomination has caught the vision. With fewer than 2000 members, church buildings of poor size and miserable appearance, and a scant number of preachers, the Baptists have launched a great Bible Training School here at a cost of more than $100,000 and are planning to open no fewer than ten missions within the city. This far-visioned step by our sister denomination in the South challenges our Church to take action along big lines or see herself far outstripped hy these or other people.

We have nine regular churches in New Orleans, with two missions. Only three of our Churches are self-supporting. Two congregations are practically without a home. Five of our preachers, including the presiding elder, must pay rent, and we must face the fact that the Methodists of New Orleans are even now paying more per capita than the individual membership of most of the large cities of the South. Big things need to be done here and it will take hig men with big money to do them. Nothing less than the carrying to successful fruition of an enterprise such as is the Mission Centenary will make possible the winning of New Orleans and the other great cities of our land.

The greatest problems of our nation offer themselves in these centers. Thither the stream of humanity flows constantly and the waters are muddy with the great freshet. It is hard to find the country people who flow into the city and are caught in the dizzy swirling and eddying of pleasure, business and sociability. The Church must claim the cities of America for Christ or the cities of America will befoul the whole of the nation. Now is the time to strike along high lines at home and there is no movement that looks so much like the proper manner to strike as the raising of this vast sum of money at this time.

With these crying demands at home, and with the graver problems in the foreign fields, and the gravest of them all on the blood-soaked soil of Europe, who is there among us that is so timorous as to shrink from this great enterprise in which we have engaged? Blessings upon the men who have been honored by the Holy Ghost with the first vision of our present duty and who have had the courage to lead our Church into so worthy a work!

HELPING CHRIST.

J. Campbell White.

Our mission is part of the work of Jesus Christ. Christ cannot save the world unless you and I help him. We shall never see the world evangelized while we spend twenty times as much on ourselves as on missions. It is just as incumbent on us to labor to earn for giving on six days as to rest on the seventh day. You cannot eliminate the spirit of giving without eliminating Christianity itself. It is a crime for the head of the family to do all the giving. It is part of each person's worship and life. Every two dollars wasted by a Christian means that somewhere in this world some one goes unreached. Self-sacrifice is the first law of grace. Before every purchase we need to ask: "Is this the thing for a person to buy who is living for the evangelization of the world?"

AS THEY ARE TAUGHT IN MEXICO.

Teacher: "What is the first commandment?"

Pupil: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Teacher: "No, the first is, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me!'"

"But that is the second in our Bible," replied a pupil.

"The second is, 'Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image,' insisted the teacher.

"That is not in our Bible," the pupils exclaimed.

Teacher: "What is the fourth commandment?"

Pupil: "Remember the feast days to keep them holy."

Teacher: "No, it is, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.'"

There was an animated discussion in the Bible class room of a Southern Methodist mission school in Mexico City. The topic under discussion was the "Ten Commandments." The pupils were wide-awake, staunch Roman Catholic boys and girls.

"If the Bible was translated from the original language for us, why is your Bible not like ours?"

"How can you prove that yours is right?" they insisted.

"Then," exclaimed the girls living in the rural places, "If it is wrong to buy on Sunday, what are we to do? Our only market day is Sunday."

No Bible, no Sabbath, false teachings, prayer only to Mary or to the Saints! Would you do better than they if you knew no better? Job said, "If your soul were in my soul's stead." What a difference it would make! What would you want done for you if America were in such a sad state as Mexico?—Belinda Boyce Barcroft.

"INASMUCH."

Says a missionary: "The new-comer to China is most deeply impressed by the poverty, the ignorance and the suffering of the lowest class in the social scale—the coolie as he is called. The most common reproach of the gentry in regard to the missionaries is that they are friends of the outcasts. And it is true. It is gloriously true. We wouldn't be following in the steps of our Master if we did not preach the gospel to the poor. Many of the gentry will not unite with the Church because the membership is so largely made up of coolies. The proud Pharisee is still offended because Christ eats with publicans and sinners."

IT CAN BE DONE.

The easiest way to accomplish a big, hard job, is to tackle it energetically and accomplish it quickly and not play with it decade after decade. The present world crisis offers an opportunity not only for the spread of the Gospel but of the principles of Christianity and democracy such as has never been afforded before. My final reason for saying that the program must be carried through is that there is ample money in the Church to do it, ample faith, and that it can be done.—C. D. Foss, U. S. Fuel Administration, Washington, D. C.

HIS REASON.

"Sahib, teach me geography," said a native Christian preacher forty-five years old, who could not read nor write.

"Why do you want to learn geography?"

"Your Honor, I want to know geography that I may learn the names of more places to pray for."

LET THE CHURCH BELLS RING.

Back of the premises of the Southern Methodist mission in Sungklang stands an ancient heathen temple. According to an old priest's tale the chief idol of this temple had his head cracked through much ringing of our church bell.

FINISH YOUR TASK.

It's easy enough to begin a task,
But to finish it—that's the thing:
The completed work holds the honey sweet
While the undone yields a sting.
Oh, the feet will lag and the heart grow faint
Ofttimes ere the stint is done;
But what joy is yours, as you rest at last,
With the hard-fought battle won!
Then, here's to the lad who will see it through,
Whatever the task may be.
For my heart goes out to the boy of pluck;
But no half-done boy for me.

LITTLE SCOTCH GRANITE.

Burt and Johnnie Lee were delighted when their Scotch cousin came to live with them. He was little, but very bright and full of fun. He could tell curious things about his home in Scotland and his voyage across the ocean. He was as far advanced in his studies as they were, and the first day he went to school they thought him remarkably good. He wasted no time in play when he should have been studying, and he advanced finely.

At night, before the close of the school, the teacher called the roll, and the boys began to answer "Ten." When Willie understood that he was to say ten if he had not whispered during the day, he replied: "I have whispered."

"More than once?" asked the teacher.

"Yes, sir," answered Willie.

"As many as ten times?"

"Maybe I have," faltered Willie."

"Then I shall mark you zero," said the teacher sternly, "and that is a great disgrace."

"Why, I did not see you whisper once," said Johnnie that night after school.

"Well, I did," said Willie. "I saw others doing it, and so I asked to borrow a book; then I lent a pencil and asked a boy for a knife and did several such things. I supposed it was allowed."

"O, we all do it!" said Burt, reddening. "There isn't any sense in the old rule; and nobody could keep it, nobody does."

"I will or else I will say I haven't," said Willie. "Do you suppose I would tell ten lies in one heap?"

"O, we don't call them lies!" muttered Johnnie. "There wouldn't be a credit among us at night if we were so strict."

"What of that if you told the truth?" laughed Willie bravely.

In a short time the boys all saw how it was with him. He studied hard, played with all his might, in playtime; but, according to his account, he lost more credits than any of the rest. Willie never preached at them or told tales; but somehow it made the boys ashamed of themselves, just the seeing that this sturdy, blue-eyed boy must tell the truth. Nor did it take them very long to know just where Willie stood on other things, for he was true to his colors every time. He was a temperance boy; they all knew it, and he was proud of it. They talked him all over and loved him if they did nickname him, "Scotch Granite," he was so firm about a promise.

Well, at the end of the term Willie's name was very low down on the credit list. When it was read he had hard work not to cry, for he was very sensitve, and he had tried hard to be perfect. But the very last thing that day was a speech by the teacher, who told of once seeing a man muffled up in a cloak. He was passing him without a look when he was told the man was General Garibaldi, the great hero.

"The signs of his rank were hidden, but the hero was there just the same," said the teacher. "And now, boys, you will see what I mean when I give a little gold medal to the most faithful boy—the one really the most conscientiously 'perfect in his deportment' among you. Who shall have it?"

"Little Scotch Granite!" shouted forty boys at once; for the child whose name was so "low" on the credit list had made truth noble in their eyes.

BLOTTING PAPER.

"Where's a blotter? I never can keep one!" exclaimed Gilbert Franklin, as he rummaged through the drawers of his own little desk.

"Once upon a time people did not have blotters to use at all," said his Uncle Charles Crawford.

"They didn't?" said Gilbert, in surprise. "I thought there was blotting paper always."

"No; and the way to make blotting paper was discovered by accident," replied his uncle. "Sand was used for drying ink before blotting paper was discovered."

"I want to see if I can dry ink with sand, when you finish this story," Gilbert interrupted.

"One day at a paper mill in the hills of Berkshire some ordinary paper was being made," Mr. Crawford began, "and a careless worker forgot to put in a certain material called sizing. All the paper was spoiled and thought to be useless, so it was thrown aside, and the workman was scolded for his carelessness. Soon after the paper had been thrown away the owner of the mill wanted to write a note, and he picked up a piece of this waste paper to write on. He was vexed when the ink spread all over the paper, and then the idea came to him that this paper might dry ink as well as sand. He wrote on a piece of good paper and tried to dry the ink with the waste paper, and it did the work well. He at once advertised this useless paper as 'blotting paper.'"

"Then the man had really made something useful instead of spoiling the paper," said Gilbert.

"Yes, he had," agreed Mr. Crawford. "The red rags could not be used to make ordinary paper, as all the color would not come out, so the red rags were used for blotting paper, and that was the reason all the first blotting paper ever made was of a pink color. These rags had been wasted before blotting paper was made," finished Mr. Crawford.

"I am glad I learned how blotting paper happened to be made," said Gilbert. "And here is my own blotter."—Selected.

PIGEONS FOLLOWED THE "MIDDIES."

When the training-ship Portsmouth sailed into port at the Brooklyn navy yard on one occasion, she had on board a large number of pigeons that were living happily in a coop on the hurricane deck. One of the sailors seemed pleased to tell their story, which was as follows:

Some time before, the birds had been taken on board at a foreign port and kept in the hold until the Portsmouth was far out to sea. Then they had been released, and every one was curious to see what they would do. Some thought they would make for the land, like carrier-pigeons; others thought they would be so frightened that they would not leave the coop. No one was right. The birds looked about, a little bewildered at first, then spread their wings and flew about the ship a few times, and after that settled down comfortably in their new quarters. They ate from the sailors' hands and became as tame as could be. Each day they would go off for a long flight, but return in due season. No port at which the ship stopped had lasting attraction for any of them.

At last, orders were received for the Portsmouth to set sail for home. All on board was bustle and joy, until some one remembered that the pigeons were away. What would the little creatures do to find their calculations at fault and the vessel gone? Slowly the anchor was weighed and the ship spread her white wings. The coop, almost empty, was a pathetic reminder of her feathered friends that the "middies" as well as the sailors had learned to love. Twilight came on; the land in the distance was but a green speck; silence reigned around—when suddenly there was a flutter in the rigging, and the pigeons flew on board and went into their quarters as usual.—Our Dumb Animals.

HOW AN ESKIMO KNOWS HIS AGE.

Open to your map of Greenland, and far up in the northwestern part of that country live the little Eskimos, of whom a writer says:

"The people have no books. They can neither read nor write. But they can tell you right away how old each fat little Eskimo playing about the hut in the snow and cold is by looking into a bag.

"'What a funny bag,' you say, 'to be able to tell anybody's age!'"

"This is the way it is: When a baby comes to an Eskimo's house, or 'igloo,' a fur bag is given to the little one. He is to keep this bag as long as he lives. Every year, when the sun comes once more after the long, cold Greenland night, a bone is put into the little bag. So when you look into the bag and see seven bones, for instance, you know that the little owner is seven years old."

POSTPONEMENT OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We print on another page the official announcement of the postponement of the Louisiana Annual Conference from November 13 to November 27. This action was necessary on account of the prevalence of Spanish influenza in New Orleans and throughout the State. The fact that it has been necessary to close the churches during the epidemic has made it practically impossible to secure the collections as in normal times. It is hoped that the two weeks' postponement will enable our people to meet the financial obligations of the Church in full.

Another reason for changing the date of the Conference, was the impracticability of making proper arrangements for entertainment during the epidemic. New Orleans has suffered severely from the influenza, and there has been much sickness among the members of our Church Our pastors have responded nobly to tbe calls made upon theui; and have been busy day and night, ministering to the sick and burying the dead. They have rendered heroic service—all of them—in this emergency. Under these circumstances, it was felt that a postponement would be greatly for the convenience of all concerned.

The situation in New Orleans seems to be improving, and we hope everything will be in readiness for the Conference by November 27. New Orleans Methodism regrets the necessity of the postponeuent; it will extend a cordial welcome to the members of the Conference when they do come to the city.

A GENEROUS RESPONSE.

We are very grateful to the presiding elders and psstors wbo have responded so promptly to our appeal to them to help us secure renewal subscriptions of those who have fallen into arrears with their payments. Acting under the direction of the Publishing Committee, we are sending lists of subscribers to our preachers in every case where we could secure the names of the post offices in a pastoral charge.

Some of our friends have wondered why we have so urgently asked for the names of the post offices in the various charges. The reason is this: Our mailing list is necessarily made up according to the railway mail routes—not according to pastoral charges. For example, on B circuit there may be four appointments with a post office at each appointment. There may be subscribers to the Advocate at all these offices. But we cannot know either by the Minutes of the Conferences, or by our mailing list, that these offices are all within the bounds of B circuit, and lacking that knowledge, we do not know to whom to send the list of subscribers. Where the pastor or some one else gives us the names of the post offices on a charge, it is an easy matter for us to identify them on our mailing list and clip from a proof sheet the entlre list of subscribers in that charge. This we send to the pastor and he has very definite information to go by in looking after renewals. Incidentally, it will enable him to answer accurately the question, "How many copies of the Conference organ are taken?"

We know that a good many of our preachers have been laboring under great difficulties during the prevalence of the epidemic and they have not been able to assist us as much as they would like to. But we feel that they realize the importance of maintaining the circulation of the Advocate and that they will do all they can to help us at once.

We sincerely appreciate the efforts they have already put forth, and we desire to express our hearty thanks to them for the co-operation they have so cheerfully rendered thus far. We are very earnestly hoping that the number of delinquent subscribers will be reduced to the minimum.

NO METHODIST CHURCHES IN NEW ORLEANS OPEN ON SUNDAY.

According to a report in one of the daily newspapers of New Orleans last week, a member of the City Board of Health stated that some of the churches of the city were not observing the order of the Board with reference to suspending all services during the period of the epidemic of influenza. He added the remark, gratuitously as it seems to us, that even the saloons had had the "fear of God" instilled into them, so far as the side-door entrance was concerned, but that the churches seemed to be taking up the custom. He stated also that he had seen with his own eyes a service going on—he peeped in at the side door.

We have nothing to say about this official's failure to insist upon the enforcement of the law when he saw it violated further than to remark that he manifestly failed to perform his duty. But for the information of our readers who may have seen the article referred to in the secular press, and for their reassurance, we want to say that the Methodist churches of New Orleans have obeyed the letter and the spirit of the closing order. No service has been held by any congregation of the M. E. Church, South, since the closing order was promulgated. The presiding elder of the New Orleans District, Rev. W. W. Holmes, had printed in the city papers an announcement to the effect that the order would be loyally obeyed. And there has not been a single violation of it. We are not in position to speak with reference to the other Protestant denominations, but our belief is that all of them have likewise obeyed the law. The Roman Catholic Church may speak for itself.

We are struck by the effrontery of the official above-mentioned in calling attention to what must have been an isolated case of violation of the law by the churches, while he seems not to have noticed the shameful overcrowding of the street cars every day.

PUT THEM SIDE BY SIDE.

We do not vouch for the authenticity of the following extracts, but we have taken them from the most reputable sources. They both speak of war—but with what a difference! It is the difference which made President Wilson say of the German military leaders: "They have convinced us that they are without honor and do not intend justice. They observe no covenants, accept no principle but force and their own interest. We cannot 'come to terms' with them. They have made it impossible." It is the difference which makes the American people feel that this war will not be won until the German rulers are forced into unconditional submission.

The German Spirit: General von Deifurth, in the Hamburg Nahaichten:

"Germany stands the supreme arbiter of her own methods. It is of no consequence whatever if all the monuments ever created, all the pictures ever painted, all the buildings ever erected by the great architects of the world be destroyed, if by their destruction we promoted German's victory. War is war. The ugliest stone placed to mark the burial of a German grenadier is a more glorious monument than all the cathedrals of Europe put together. They call us 'barbarians.' What of it? We scorn them and their abuse. For my part, I hope that in this war we have merited the title 'barbarians.' Let neutral peoples and our enemies cease their empty chatter, which may well be compared to the twitter of birds. Let them cease to talk of the cathedral of Rheims, and of all the churches and all the castles in France, which have shared its fate. Our troops must achieve victory. What else matters?"

The Allies' Spirit: General Foch, to his Soldiers:

"Keep your eyes and ears ready and your mouth in the safety notch, for it is your soldierly duty to see and hear clearly, but as a rule you should be heard mainly in the sentry challenge or the charging cheer.

"Obey orders first, and if still alive kick afterward if you have been wronged.

"Keep your arms and equipment clean and in good order; treat your animals kindly and fairly and your motor or other machine as though it belonged to you, and was the only one in the world. Do not waste your ammunition, nor your opportunity.

"Never try to fire an empty gun, nor fire at an empty trench, but when you shoot, shoot to kill, and forget not that at close quarters a bayonet beats a bullet.

"Tell the truth squarely, face the music, and take your punishment like a man; for a good soldier won't lie, he doesn't sulk, and is no squealer.

"Be merciful to the women of your foe and shame them not, for you are man; pity and shield the children in your captured territory, for you were once a helpless child.

"Bear in mind that the enemy is your enemy and the enemy of humanity until he is killed or captured; then he is your dead brother or your fellow-soldier beaten or ashamed, whom you should not further humiliate.

"Do your best to keep your head clear and cool, your body clean and comfortable and your feet in good condition, for you think with your head, fight with your body and march with your feet.

"Be of good cheer and high courage; shirk neither work nor danger; suffer in silence and cheer the comrade at your side with a smile.

"Dread defeat, but not wounds; fear dishonor, but not death, and die game, and whatever the task, remember the motto of the division, 'It Shall Be Done.'"

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We have two very simple but very important requests to make of our subscribers: 1. Look at the label on your Advocate to see when your subscription expires. 2. If it expires in November, 1918, or before, send us $1.50 at once. Otherwise, we shall be forced, under the ruling of the War Industries Board, to discontinue your paper.

Your pastor may have seen you already about your renewal, or he may see you in a few days. But your pastor is a very busy man, and the time is short, and he may not have the opportunity of seeing you as soon as he would like. There is no time to lose. The War Industries Board requires that we stop sending papers to subscribers who are in arrears.

We don't want to lose a single subscriber—and you need the paper. Please send us your renewal now—to-day.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Brother Thos. I. Buck, of Prairie Grove, Ark., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, speaks appreciatively of the paper. We thank him.

Brother J. L. Bell, of Newton, Miss., has our thanks for two subscriptions to the Advocate that he kindly sent us in the early part of this week.

Rev. C. A. Shultz, of Gallman, Miss., is another preacher to whom our thanks are due for work in behalf of the Advocate. We hereby tender them.

We thank Rev. B. E. Meigs, of Monticello, Miss., for his interest in the Advocate as indicated by two subscriptions which he sent us a few days ago.

The recent General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada elected Rev. S. G. Blund, B. A., D. D., fraternal delegate to the M. E. Church, South.

Rev. W. D. Bennett, of Sardis, Miss., in sending us a renewal subscription, states that everything is moving along fairly well on his charge, the Sardis circuit.

From Ennis, Texas, we have a pleasant note from Mrs. J. T. Murphey, renewing her subscription to the Advocate and expressing her appreciation of the paper.

Mr. Minis Lee Quarles, of Bogue Chitto, Miss., has our thanks for a list of seven subscriptions from that enterprising little town, where his uncle, Rev. W. W. Moore, is pastor.

Rev. G. B. Love, of Marietta, Miss., continues to evidence his interest in the welfare of the Advocate by sending us subscriptions. He reports that his work is moving along nicely.

Miss Helen O. Gibson, of St. Mark's Hall, this city, honored the Advocate office with a call on Saturday of last week. She reported the work at St. Mark's as progressing favorably.

Rev. H. Wade Cudd, our friend of other days at Centenary College, now pastor of our church at Elizabeth, La., has our thanks for a list of six subscriptions to the Advocate from his charge.

The American Red Cross has begun the work of recruiting fifteen hundred nurses' aids to be sent to France immediately to help care for sick and wounded soldiers in our military establishments.

Rev. G. D. Anders, of Indian Bayou, La., is another victim of the "flu." But he does not give up. While "lying flat on his back," he wrote us a letter to send some subscriptions to the Advocate.

We regret to learn of the death of Mr. W. G. Griffing, the eldest son of Rev. J. M. Griffing, of Meadville, Miss., at Muskogee, Okla., on October 17, of influenza. We extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. C. A. Parks, of Ackerman, Miss., has been a faithful friend of the Advocate throughout the year. We thank him for what he has done, and for what he continues to do in behalf of the Conference organ.

Brother G. F. Roberts, a useful layman of our Church at Reeves, La., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, speaks appreciatively of the Conference organ. We pray that it may be a blessing to him.

Rev. B. L. Sutherland, of Poplar Springs Church, Meridian, Miss., in renewing his own subscriptions, says that he will try to send us a list of renewals and new subscribers soon. We thank him for his interest in the matter.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, requests us to state that it has become necessary for him to re-arrange his quarterly conference appointments. The new dates will appear in next week's Advocate.

Rev. J. B. Stringer, of the Mentorum charge, Mississippi Conference, writing from Wiggins, Miss., says that his work is progressing in spite of the "flu" and the rainy weather. We thank him for sending us a renewal subscription.

We appreciate very greatly indeed a note from Mrs. M. E. Joyce, of Jackson, Miss., renewing her subscription to the Advocate and expressing her pleasure in reading the paper from week to week. Many Millsaps students will remember Mrs. Joyce as the matron of the dormitory.

We tender our thanks to Brother S. E. Coxe, of Watson, La., for a list of ten subscriptions to the Advocate, which he sent us last week. We appreciate very greatly the substaintial interest our friends are showing in maintaining the circulation of the Advocate.

We regret to learn that Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, and his family have all been suffering with the influenza. We are glad to be able to state, however, that they were all improving at last reports.

We regret to learn that Rev. H. W. Ledbetter of Grand Cane, La., had the misfortune to break his arm while cranking his car some weeks ago. He was able, however, to write us a letter the other day, enclosing a fine list of subscriptions to the Advocate. We thank him.

Rev. Robert Selby, the efficient commissioner of Emory University for Mississippi, has not been able to push his work recently, on account of the epidemic, but the great cause he represents is on his heart, and he is making a fine record in securing substantial support for it.

According to the Christian Guardian, a change in the Discipline of the Canadian Methodist Church was authorized at the General Conference by which the term Holy Ghost will be replaced by the more modern one of Holy Spirit, and "The Lord's Day" will take the place of "The Sabbath."

Rev. J. S. Duke, of the Mississippi Conference, in asking us to send his Advocate to the Y. M. C. A. Building, Camp Shelby, Miss., says that he is finding great joy in the work at that place. It is a great field of opportunity. He speaks in the highest terms of the work of Chaplain Cunningham.

Our Canadian brethren, at their recent General Conference, unanimously recommended that the minimum salary be $1200 per annum for married ordained men, $1000 for single ordained men, and $800 for probationers. An item was incorporated into the Discipline providing that all ministers shall be paid monthly.

A personal note from Rev. A. H. Parker, of Coushatta, La., informs us that the influenza is sweeping that part of the State. He has had one case in his family. He is now closing his third year on that charge, and the fourth quarterly conference, which was recently held, unanimously requested his return for the fourth year.

The Columbus Commercial of October 20 contained the resolutions adopted by the Columbus Ministers' Association in connection with the departure of Rev. S. L. Pope, pastor of the First Methodist Church of that city, for service with the Y. M. C. A. overseas. Brother Pope is held in deservedly high esteem by the people of Columbus.

Rev. T. C. Wier, a superannuate member of the North Mississippi Conference, is now at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. E. Bonnell, at Muskogee, Okla. He is just recovering from a slight attack of the influenza. Although he is in his ninety-first year, he is rarely absent from Sunday school and the eleven o'clock service. A noble veteran!

For the purpose of securing the collections ordered by the Annual Conference, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, our pastor at Pleasant Hill, La., got out a card giving the assessments in detail, with a plea to the membership of the Church to "go over the top." We are sure his method will secure results. We thank him for sending us 4 subscriptions to the Advocate.

Rev. E. K. Means, the brilliant pastor of our church at Monroe, La., whose literary ability is second only to his genius as a preacher, called at the Advocate office on Monday of this week. He reported that the influenza had interfered seriously with church work in North Louisiana, but that the Monroe District will have a good report at Conference nevertheless.

Rev. S. J. Davies, the scholarly pastor of our Queensboro Church, Shreveport, La., says that his presiding elder tells him that the Queensboro church leads the smaller charges of the district in the number of subscribers to the Advocate. That is due to the fact, we are sure, that Brother Davies made an active canvass for subscribers last year. We thank him for his continued efforts in behalf of the Conference organ.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, the faithful pastor of our church at Minden, La., while observing loyally the regulations preventing church services during the epidemic, nevertheless interests himself in the spiritual welfare of his people. He sent them a card with suggested Scripture readings and an exhortation to engage in worship in the home. He reports that he will have a good report at Conference, notwithstanding present difficulties.

Mr. T. Wynn Holloman, one of the leading attorneys of Louisiana, and a very active layman of our Church, is enlisted for overseas work with the Y. M. C. A. We received a post card greeting from him last Saturday, written just before he sailed from New York. He has many friends in Mississippi, being a son of T. A. Holloman, prominently identified with Methodism in that State. The Holloman boys—four of them—are all engaged in war service.

Mrs. Laura M. White, one of the Council workers in our French Mission work at Houma, La., honored the Advocate office with a call last week. In her difficult field of labor she is associated with Miss Ella K. Hooper in maintaining the MacDonell Home at Houma, which is the center of our work in Lafourche and Terrebonne Parishes. She reported that substantial progress is being made in many directions in that important section of Louisiana.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, the superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, writes that he has received a few responses from "Work Day," mostly individual contributions, but not nearly enough to meet the emergency now confronting the institution. There have been about a hundred cases of influenza in the Orphanage, but no deaths. We sincerely hope the friends of these dependent children will remember them with their prayers and material help at this time.

Rev. A. B. Barry, pastor of the South and East McComb charge, Mississippi Conference, has, we regret to learn, recently been confined to his bed on account of sickness. Mrs. Barry has been bereaved by the death of her brother, Dr. D. S. Taylor, at Gulfport, Miss., from pneumonia resulting from an attack of influenza. Her sister, Mrs. J. T. Crump, was also critically ill with the same disease at the time we received our information. Our sympathy is extended to the sorrowing ones.

Sister T. S. Randle, who, with her husband, Rev. T. S. Randle, is known and loved by many Methodists in Louisiana, writing from Yoakum, Texas, says that she has a son in the war zone in France who would appreciate communications from his friends in the United States. His address is: T. W. Randle, U. S. S. Corrola, Naval Forces in European waters, New York, in care of the Postmaster. Sister Randle states that Brother Randle's health is somewhat improved. She requests the prayers of all.

The Christian Guardian, the official organ of Canadian Methodism, has the following to say of the fraternal delegate from our Church to our Canadian brethren: "Rev. Dr. Prettyman, fraternal delegate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, came with the prestige of his position as chaplain of the United States Senate at Washington. It was nearly 10 o'clock when he was introduced, but he held the close attention of the big audience to the close of his half-hour address. Speaking extemporaneously, he exhibited the characteristic ease and eloquence of the Southern orator, and wonderfully pleased the people."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

I am authorized by Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo to announce that the date of the Louisiana Conference has been changed from November 13 to November 27, 1918. This change was made at the request of a majority of the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We are now making preparation for the entertainment of the Annual Conference which meets in New Orleans November 27 to December 2.

If you are expecting to be entertained by a friend or relative during the Conference—

If you have any preference as to "roommate"—

If your case is such as would require special consideration by the Entertainment Committee—let one of us hear from you at your earliest possible convenience.

MY OPINION.

I see that the suggestion has been made that in view of the epidemic, and the unusual conditions that have been brought about by it, we omit holding the Annual Conference this year. Let the Bishop and his cabinet get together, and the necessary boards, and avoid the calling together of all the preachers. It seems to me that this would be wise. Even if the epidemic is past, which is by no means certain, when the time to hold Conference comes, it has so deranged everything that it will take some time to get in smooth running order again.

It might save a good deal to let this Conference go over. At any rate, liberavi animam meam.

THOMAS J. WALTERS, born July 4, 1867; died Sept. 28, 1918. He was a good citizen, "subject unto the higher Powers." And when the storm-clouds (common to life) darkened his way he cast "forth anchors and wished for the day." Anchored by faith, he pierced whatever mist there might have been and saw at the end of the vista the things for which he had been striving. By the anchor of hope, he secured the ground of his expectation and had respect unto the promises of God. The anchor of love secured his benevolent spirit and moral good-will toward all mankind. The anchor of prayer stayed his soul from spiritual hunger and rendered it responsive to the draw of the moorings.

Devoted and loyal, he served his Church, an efficient steward for a number of years—frank but not egotistic, willing to "live and let live," yet a rock of Gibraltar relative to principles.

To his family he left the heritage of a plantation, equipped with modern machinery, and the necessary implements; but greater than these, he left a good name—and "a good name is to be chosen rather than great riches." We shall seldom see his like again.

ARCHIE T. SHANKLE, son of Dr. and Mrs. S. M. Shankle, died on Oct. 10, at Newport, R. I., with influenza and pneumonia. He offered the Government his services at the beginning of the war, but was rejected on account of physical disability. He then enlisted in the Navy and was accepted. While waiting his call to go over the seas to help win the war, he received the call from higher Authority to come where there was no war, but where there was nothing but peace. On the same day, four hours earlier, Archie's only sister, Mrs. Byrd Cartwright, died here. Her home was in Denver, Col. She had just returned here with her mother, who had spent the summer with her in Denver. Archie's body was shipped here and both were interred October 16, in the same grave. Byrd left a husband and one little girl that was the "sunshine" of the home. They were the only children of Dr. and Mrs. Shankle, and both were members of the Methodist Church. Byrd was a loving and obedient daughter, a gentle and affectionate sister, a tender, kind, and true mother. As a companion, her traits of character and loving disposition were equaled by few and excelled by none. They leave a host of friends and loved ones to mourn their loss—our loss here, but heaven's gain.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The subject of this sketch, Jaimie Harris, was the son of Alex Harris, of McCool, Miss. Jaimie was born on Sept. 28, 1888. He united with the M. E. Church, South, in his tenth year. He was drafted in the American army in the early part of this year. He died from wounds received in action "somewhere in France." No better boy ever lived; no braver soldier ever enlisted in Uncle Sam's army. He was true to his convictions of what he believed to be right. A great and noble boy has fallen on the battlefield and sacrificed his life for all democracy and Christianity stand for. He will be missed at church, Sunday school and in the community generally, but most at his home, where three loving hearts are broken and bleeding for dear Jaimie who died so far away.

We all feel that Jaimie is safe in the arms of Jesus; so, dear ones, try now and strive the harder so to live that we all will meet our loved ones who have gone on before, where there will be no more heartaches and sad good-bys.

T. L. OAKES, P. C.
Sallis charge, Oct. 18, 1918.

A TRIBUTE TO WALTER R. SIMPSON.

The hearts of all the people of our town were made sad last Thursday morning when the wire flashed the sad news that Walter R. Simpson was dead. He was born on September 22, 1872, and died on October 17, 1918. He leaves to mourn his loss an aged mother, three brothers and one sister, a loving wife and three children. He was employed by the leading bank of Cleveland, Miss. His mortal remains were brought to Sallis, his home town, for interment after funeral services by his pastor in the presence of many relatives and friends. He was a consistent, faithful member of the Methodist Church for more than twenty-five years. A true man has been called to his reward. I have heard the expression by many, "No better man ever lived." He will be missed everywhere, in the home circle, in the community life, in the Church with its official place made vacant. It was largely through his efforts that our church was rebuilded after being torn down by storm some five years ago. We would commend the bereaved for comfort to Him who heareth the cry of his children, and to the Christ who says, "Cast your burdens upon me." We shall see him again some sweet day.

His pastor, T. L. OAKES.

ROBERT A. N. WINN.

The subject of this sketch was born in the State of Georgia on May 26, 1843, and moved with his parents to Louisiana in his boyhood days. He was a noble son of noble sires, his father and grandfather both being Methodist preachers; he was converted in the home at family worship when but a child and joined the Church, and lived a loyal and faithful life to the end of his days. He served continually as a faithful steward for nearly fifty years, and was for several years Sunday school superintendent and teacher, and was a pillar in the Church, honored and loved by all for his Christian integrity. He was married to Miss Mary McEachern on February 14, 1867. This union was blessed with eleven children, ten of whom, together with his wife, survive him. The children are all grown and married and are living honorable, upright lives.

Brother Winn was a Confederate veteran, having served with honor the cause dear to the hearts of all true Southerners for four years. He was stricken ill during our great meeting, which he was enjoying to the fullest extent. He suffered intensely, but died in the triumphs of faith and went home to a rich reward on October 18, 1918. Thank God for his noble life. A good man has gone. The preacher has lost a true friend, the Church a loyal member, the community a good neighbor, and friend, and the dear wife and precious children have lost a most affectionate husband and father. May the God of all grace and comfort be with the bereaved ones in this dark hour of bereavement and sorrow, is the prayer of his unworthy pastor.

THE MEMPHIS HOSPITAL

YES, the Memphis, Mississippi, North Mississippi and North Arkansas Conferences own and are operating a well equipped hospital in Memphis known as the Methodist Hospital, Lucy Brinkley Annex, with fifty beds devoted exclusively to surgical and maternity cases for women and children. Special terms will be made to the wife or child of a Methodist preacher.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. We call upon everyone to send in all past due subscriptions and to talk and work and pray for new ones. We need all the help possible.

There was never a time when the sacrifices and the help of women were more appreciated than at the present time. Women should learn war-nursing and nursing at home. There is no better way than to study the new edition of the "Common Sense Medical Adviser"—with chapters on First Aid, Bandaging, Anatomy, Hygiene, care of the Sick, Diseases of Women, Mother and Babe, the Marriage Relation—to be had at some drug-stores or send 50c. to Publisher, 654 Washington Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

If a woman suffers from weak back, nervousness or dizziness—if pains afflict her, the best tonic and corrective is one made up of native herbs and made without alcohol, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. It is the prescription of Dr. Pierce, used by him in active practice many years and now sold by almost every druggist in the land, in liquid or in tablets. Send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial pkg. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are also best for liver and bowel trouble.

Tryon, Okla.—"I am pleased to have the chance to tell that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription did wonders for me. Last year during expectancy I was so poorly and was getting so weak that I couldn't do my housework until a friend told me of 'Favorite Prescription.' After taking four bottles I was so much better I didn't feel like the same person. Our baby is now seven months old and although he had the whooping cough last winter he weighs nineteen pounds.

"Will advise all expectant mothers to use 'Favorite Prescription' for it did so much for me I am sure it will for them."

WOMAN'S NERVES MADE STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Winona, Minn.—"I suffered for more than a year from nervousness, and was so bad I could not rest at night—would lie awake and get so nervous I would have to get up and walk around and in the morning would be all tired out. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. My nervousness soon left me. I sleep well and feel fine in the morning and able to do my work. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make weak nerves strong."—Mrs. ALBERT SULTZE, 603 Olmstead St., Winona, Minn.

How often do we hear the expression among women, "I am so nervous, I cannot sleep," or "it seems as though I should fly." Such women should profit by Mrs. Sultze's experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For forty years it has been overcoming such serious conditions as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, dizziness, and nervous prostration of women, and is now considered the standard remedy for such ailments.

A WAYWORN PREACHER.

By Rev. R. S. Lawson.

I saw a wayworn preacher,
In seedy garment clad,
Holding down a circuit;
It seemed that he was sad.
His pocketbook was empty,
Provisions nearly gone,
But he shouted as he rode around,
"Deliverance will come."

The summer's sun was shining,
The sweat was on his face,
His steps of early morning
Had quickened to a pace;
But the people even grumbled,
Because he did not run,
But he shouted as he visited,
"Deliverance will come."

I saw him in the evening;
The sun was bending low,
He had that tired feeling,
His step was very slow.
But as he dragged his weary limbs
Toward his humble home,
He shouted loud, "Hosanna!
Deliverance will come."

He went to bed at twelve o'clock,
But could not go to sleep,
For the wife had said for breakfast
They had not much to eat.
But when he rose next morning,
With a heart so sad and sore
They found a ham and bacon,
And some flour at the door.

The Conference was coming on,
The salary was away behind,
He had no clothing fit to wear,
Which weighed upon his mind;
But the day before he started
The ladies rigged him out
In a brand new suit for Conference,
Which made the preacher shout.

The Conference ground out business,
All along from day to day,
Till the time came for appointments
And the Bishop had his say.
The preacher listened daily
To see where he would fall;
He was made Presiding Elder,
And that atoned for all.

PROGRESS AT PICKENS, MISS.

My Dear Brother Carley: I am glad to say that some good things have transpired on the Pickens charge this year.

We held our meeting at Pickens in June. Mr. Paul I. Templeton, of Meridian, Miss., conducted our singing, and did fine work. The pastor did the preaching, and the people stood by him with their whole strength. We are sure that much good was accomplished. Some of the oldest citizens have told us that it was the best meeting that has been held in the town for several years. The Lord was with us in great power.

We held our meeting at Richland, in July. Rev. W. R. Lott did the preaching, and his work was well done. Brother Lott is a good preacher, and he much endeared himself to our people. The meeting was a success.

We came out "more than conqueror" in our meeting at Goodman, where we had Rev. Dan Kelly, Mississippi Conference evangelist, with us. Brother Kelly stirred the town and community from center to circumference, and since he finished his work there we feel that it is a new town. We have had twenty-three accessions to the Church this year.

At our first quarterly conference of this year, the pastor's salary was materially increased. At our fourth quarterly conference—which was held October 5, 6—we were able to report all of our benevolences in full, and salary paid in full, and over; and it was good to hear the stewards say that they had not finished yet. Although we have, perhaps, not done all that we ought to have done, we feel that we are closing a good year. These people are kind, and "long suffering."

Our presiding elder has been very faithful, and I will say more, efficient, in all of his duties. I can speak especially for this charge. He is much loved by all of the people of his district.

With the best of wishes for you, and the Advocate, I am, cordially,

THOMAS H. MILLS, P. C.

NUXATED IRON IS USED BY OVER 3000000 PEOPLE ANNUALLY IN THIS COUNTRY ALONE TO HELP BUILD UP THEIR HEALTH STRENGTH AND ENDURANCE

Look around at the men and women you meet in a single day. One glance is enough to tell the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York and the Westchester County Hospital, says that to help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in his experience which he has found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, rundown people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; General John L. Clem (retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Claims of Washington, and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

Constipation

THERE IS NOTHING equal to Chamberlain's Tablets for constipation. When the proper dose is taken their action is so agreeable and so natural that you do not realize that it is the effect of a medicine. These tablets possess tonic properties that aid in establishing a natural and regular action of the bowels. Chamberlain's Tablets have cured many cases of chronic constipation.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur Darkens Hair so Naturally that Nobody Can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.

LAITY LITERATURE.

The literature on full Church membership for women now being sent to the members of all the Annual Conferences seems to be of interest to many.

What the women ask and why they ask it, is given in a condensed form. The opinions and statements of many strong men of the Church on the subject are given in another leaflet. And, on still another slip, the women appeal to each man to ratify the action of the General Conference and to vote to admit them alongside the laymen in the work of the Kingdom.

The present indications are that the action of the General Conference will be ratified by the Annual Conferences.

Some Reasons Why Women Should be Given Full Membership in the Church.

By S. H. Werlein, D.D.

The question as to whether women shall possess full membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is not a question of sentiment; it is one that involves a great principle. Furthermore, it is not a question which should be settled by prejudice. The question is, does the gospel include women in the great Democracy which Jesus Christ came to establish? Is every male to participate in the benefits of the world-wide freedom and every female to be barred from them? Is man by virtue of his sex a favorite of heaven, and woman, because she is a female, not favored? The fact that all through the centuries woman has been robbed and wronged does not justify a continuance of this oppression. Precedent has nothing to do with justice. The spirit of the times is snapping the chains of tradition and the voice of the autocrat will soon be stilled in the grave to which it has been sentenced by freemen.

I have advocated woman's right to full Church membership and co-equality in citizenship with men for 30 years and more, and shall stand by them at the Annual Conference.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD.

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Spanish Influenza—What it is and How it Should be Treated

This disease, authorities now agree, is simply the old-fashioned grip that was epidemic in 1889-90. Then it came from Russia by way of France and was given the French name la Grippe. This time it comes by way of Spain.

Spanish influenza, which appeared in Spain in May, has swept over the world in numerous epidemics as far back as history runs. Hippocrates refers to an epidemic in 412 B. C., which is regarded by many to have been influenza. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, this country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-90.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grip, or influenza as it is now called, usually begins with a chill followed by aching, feverishness and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membrane, or lining of the air passages—nose, throat and bronchial tubes—there is usually a hard cough, especially bad at night, oftentimes a sore throat or tonsilitis, and frequently all the appearances of a severe head cold.

THE TREATMENT

Go to bed at the first symptoms—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Nature herself is the only "cure" for influenza and will throw off the attack if only you conserve your strength. A little Quinine, Aspirin or Dover's Powders may be given by the physician's directions to allay the aching. Always call a doctor, since the chief danger of grip is in its weakening effect on the system, which allows complications to develop. These are chiefly pneumonia and bronchitis, sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For these reasons, it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or not strong, stay in bed four days or more according to the severity of the attack.

EXTERNAL APPLICATIONS.

In order to stimulate the lining of the air passages to throw off the grip germs, to aid in loosening the phlegm and keeping the air passages open, thus making the breathing easier, Vick's VapoRub will be found effective. Hot, wet towels should be applied over the throat, chest and back between the shoulder-blades to open the pores. Then VapoRub should be rubbed in over the parts until the skin is red, spread on thickly and covered with two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck as the heat of the body liberates the ingredients in the form of vapors. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carry the medication directly to the parts affected. At the same time, VapoRub is absorbed through and stimulates the skin, attracting the blood to the surface, and thus aids in relieving the congestion within.

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC.

There is no occasion for panic—Influenza or grip has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death out of every four hundred cases, according to the North Carolina Board of Health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, attacking principally patients in a run-down condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough, or those who get up too early.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds, which means avoiding crowds—common drinking cups, roller towels, etc. Keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air, and good food.

KEEP FREE FROM COLDS.

Above all, avoid colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them much better breeding places for the germs.

Use Vick's VapoRub at the very first sign of a cold. For a head cold, melt a little VapoRub in a spoon and inhale the vapors, or better still, use VapoRub in a benzoin steam kettle. If this is not available, use an ordinary teakettle. Fill half-full of boiling water, put in half a teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

Note.—Vick's VapoRub is the discovery of a North Carolina druggist, who found how to combine, in salve form, Menthol and Camphor with such volatile oils as Eucalyptus, Thyme, Cubebs, etc., so that when the salve is applied to the body heat, these ingredients are liberated in the form of vapors. VapoRub can be had in three sizes at all druggists. While comparatively new in certain parts of the North, it is the standard home remedy in the South and West for all forms of cold troubles—over six million jars were sold last year. VapoRub is particularly recommended for children's croup or colds, as it is externally applied and can, therefore, be used freely and often without the slightest harmful effects.—Adv.

A CRY IN THE NIGHT

In behalf of the long neglected superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the M. E. Church, South. This Church claims a constituency of 2,225,000 adherents and property values that stagger the imagination. For this, much credit is due the above named men. This appeal is to save these valiant though aged and physically infirm heroes from real want. For years they have suffered in silence, receiving an annual pittance from the Church which they have helped to establish.

Men and women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, whose hearts pulsate in sympathy and love, can you rest complacently in the midst of your material possessions while the retired preachers, who did so much to sharpen your spiritual perceptions, languish in need of the bare necessities of existence? Shall they, who have given their all to create for you priceless values both material and spiritual, be forgotten and neglected when the wolf howls at their doors?

A voice is calling through the land: "Buy Liberty Bonds," and millions of free men, women and children swell the grand chorus "Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond! Buy a Bond!" And for what? To win the great battle of Humanity versus Kaiserism. The person who can and does not respond to this call is unworthy the name of American.

When you have purchased your Bonds, why not donate at least one to the Board of Finance of the M. E. Church, South, St. Louis, Mo., for the Superannuate Endowment Fund? By so doing you will not only perform a patriotic duty, but also you will assist in bringing sunshine and happiness into the lives of the blessed old retired preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of said Church.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

What school in the Conference will agree to say that no teacher will be permitted to teach without first receiving credit for one unit? This need not take full effect for twelve months. When one school adopts this policy others will follow. Raise the standard, is the call.

If the teacher of beginners desires immediate and definite help in the management of her department, send for Lessons for Teachers of Beginners, Danielson. 75 cents; also Stories and Story-Telling, St. John, 50 cents.

The teacher of primaries should order Child Nature and Child Nurture, and Stories and Story-Telling, both by St. John, each 50 cents.

The teacher for Juniors needs The Unfolding Life, Lamoreaux, 60 cents, and Stories and Story-Telling. It is understood that these books are in the Standard Teacher-training Course and can be had from Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn. When you order the books write to Dr. J. W. Shackford, Nashville, and ask him to enroll you as an individual student.

The teacher that has the courage to follow the suggestions given will improve rapidly in her ability to teach and be of benefit to the entire school. We grow in grace as we grow in a knowledge of God.

A few schools after using the graded lessons for beginners, primaries, and juniors, have cast them aside because the parents do not like them. It would be well to make such parents a visit and explain to them the advantages to the child in the study of the lessons adapted to their needs. If you are not prepared to make the necessary explanation send to me for leaflets giving full information.

All engagements were canceled the latter part of October on account of the prevailing epidemic. Write me if the way is open to visit your charge before Conference.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Financial report for Sunday school work, Louisiana Conference, October 21, 1918:

Children's Day, previously reported	$ 880.37
First Church, Baton Rouge	40.00
Natchitoches	11.00
First Church, New Orleans	15.60
Greenwood	6.06
Wisner	3.60
Doyline (2nd remittance)	3.00
Total C. D. Offering to date	959.63
Specials previously reported	881.20
2% previously reported	110.00
Total receipts from all sources	$1,950.83

The number of schools having reported on Children's Day is 87—253 Southern Methodist schools in the Louisiana Conference have not reported any Children's Day observance yet. There are among those having reported, reports ranging from the most obscure mission schools to the best among our city schools, and so it is among those not having reported.

Brother Superintendent and Pastor, at Conference we shall have a large chart of each district hanging on the wall, showing the standing of the districts and the names of the charges having observed Children's Day and the amount remitted to the Treasurer. If you have observed the day and have not remitted the offering, please do so before the 5th of November, for after that date it will be too late to get the matter on the wall chart. We ought to realize at least $3000 from the Children's Day offering. We asked for only $1000 and lack $40.37 of having the first thousand asked for.

All indications are that the Wesley Bible Class Federation for next March will be held in the [illegible]ful town of Ruston, and at that Fed[illegible] it is planned to present to the Hau[illegible]ton Circuit a silver loving cup, which will be held by that circuit until some other school takes it from them for having a larger Sunday School Day offering on a percentage basis.

Rev. J. Lambuth Evans is pastor of the Haughton Circuit; Mr. A. F. Nelson and Mr. W. W. Nicholson are superintendents of the Haughton and Doyline schools, and the offerings from the two schools are as follows: Haughton, $25; Doyline, $31; total, $56, which is the largest offering by $3 from any circuit or station within the bounds of the Conference. Certainly this charge deserves public recognition, for there was a liberal response from almost all of the schools reporting.

Baton Rouge District.

The "flu" flopped the Field Secretary out of the Baton Rouge District and this tragic thing happened just about two days after the family cook "tuck and got married." Brethren, I'm learning how to help with the kiddies at home and to mix into the house work: remember me and my family in your sympathies. This "flu" makes cooks and housegirls of us all wherever it hits, and I have seen some washermen since it hit the country.

Many of the districts are planning for a district-wide Institute next year, and I hope to go to the Bluff Creek Camp Ground in the Baton Rouge District and to have a period each day to devote to one of the teacher-training books and one point in the Standard of Efficiency per day for the ten days.

This year Louisiana had a meningitis beginning with an influenza ending, instead of a bad beginning with a good ending. However, taken as a whole, the year's work from the Sunday school view-point is as good as could be expected, with so many vital things pulling at the heart-strings, the hour glass and the purse-strings of our workers. C. V. BREITHAUPT.

HELPING BY PRAYER.

God has put it in our power to help each other in many ways; sometimes by deeds that lift away burdens, sometimes by words that inspire courage and strength, sometimes by sympathy that halves sorrow. But there is no other way in which we can serve others so wisely, so effectively, so divinely as by intercession for them. Our hands are clumsy and awkward, and ofttimes hurt the life we would heal with our touch, or strengthen or uphold with our strength; but in prayer we can reach our friend through God, and His hand is infinitely gentle and never hurts a life. We lack wisdom, and ofttimes the help we give is untimely or unwise. We lift away burdens that God wants our friend to carry. We make the way easy for him when God has made it hard for his own good, for the development of his powers. We save our friend from hardship or self-denial, or hold him back from perilous duty or exhausting service when these are the very paths in which God would lead him—the paths to honor, to larger usefulness, to nobler life. Ofttimes our love is short-sighted. We think we are helping our friend when really we are hindering him in the things that most deeply concern his life. But we can pray and ask God to help him, not in our way, but in His own way, and His help is never unwise nor untimely. He never takes away a load which our friend will be the better for carrying. He never withholds things for him which he had better be left to do for himself, nor spares him hardness or suffering which will make him more a man.—Westminster Teacher.

Salts if Bachachy and Kidneys Hurt

Drink Lots of Water and Stop Eating Meat for a while if your Bladder Troubles You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

A Godsend to Rheumatics.

Here it is. Those awful pains of rheumatism so common during the cold, rainy weather are completely forgotten, and the rheumatism is expelled from your system by the very simple treatment of taking Renwar Salts, which neutralizes the uric acid in the blood. The cause of rheumatism is uric acid in the blood, and Renwar attacks the very cause of this malady and expells the uric acid from the system. Renwar is entirely dependable. It does not in any way injure the stomach or affect the heart. It is prescribed by the best physicians, and your money is refunded if Renwar fails to relieve you of your rheumatism. Give Renwar a trial and you will never regret it. Mr. Benagh, of the Nashville Railway and Light Company, says: "Within two or three days after using Renwar my rheumatism disappeared." Price 50c. Ask your druggist for it, or write WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

REPORT FROM OAK RIDGE, MISS.

Editor Advocate: While I am at home on account of the ruling of the health authorities, I will report. On October 8, we closed the last meeting on the work by order of the board of health. Taking the year as a whole, there is one noticeable feature, viz.: more men have lined up with the Church than during any year since my first year in the pastorate; and these men came in at different periods during the year—about one-half before the revival season. It is wonderful just how the Lord has peculiarly touched some of these men. My helpers in revival work were Brothers W. W. Nelson, F. B. Gray (a converted railroad engineer of Meridian, Miss.), and E. B. Moll, of Louisiana. Nelson gave us the unvarnished truth and his work still abides. Hearing Gray at Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, I felt impressed at once that he was needed especially on my work; so after prayer and thought I got him for one of my afternoon appointments that has been a problem, but he, being a workingman as these people were, and filled with the Spirit besides, got right hold of them and did what no preacher could have done. He scored a wonderful victory indeed. Brother O. S. Lewis, of Vicksburg, was to help me where Brother Moll helped, but his appointments got too thick, so I began to cast about and pray and found I could secure Brother Moll, and I found him a helper of the right kind. He has preached only five years, and has preached in 22 States, being only 23 years of age. He didn't have a fair show because of our having to stop, as above mentioned, but he remained long enough to let us know he is an unusually good evangelist.

As to finances, we are ahead of what we were this time last year. Having no services now will, necessarily, hinder some; however, I feel sure all will be in full. One church has had the presiding elder's and pastor's salary paid in full for several months and will easily pay their Conference collections. Oak Ridge church expects to pay more than the assessment, so I was informed by one of the stewards. They like very little of being paid up now. All the other churches are coming right along. I lack but very little of having all the Conference assessments in sight, in cash and subscription. Had it not been for the Spanish influenza interrupting, I would have had all these collections in the hands of the different treasurers before time to make out the annual report. For the time being, I am expected to remain right at home, but I am using the printer's ink and the Hammond constantly and carrying out the injunction of Jesus (Luke 18:1), and fully expect "everything in full" when I get ready for McComb.

Never was the Lord more precious nor the way more blessed and clearer! Surely goodness and mercy are following me right along! Under the Blood,

J. A. WELLS.

A THREE MONTHS' PASTORATE.

Having been out of the pastorate for nearly seven years, and not having quite forgotten my first love, it has been a very great delight to me, in the midst of school duties, to fill out the unexpired term of Brother Foster on the Bayou La Chute charge.

This work was formerly known as the Red River Circuit, lying as it does on both sides of Red River, and being one of the few circuits that have remained practically unchanged in a long period of years. The membership is composed, for the most part, of prosperous cotton planters and their families and it would be impossible to find a more hospitable and generous people anywhere. In former days there was constant communication between the people on opposite sides of the river, but the days of the ferry-boat are gone and it is practically impossible for the officials from opposite sides to meet for quarterly conference. To obviate this difficulty, the fourth quarterly conference will meet in Shreveport, with a representative attendance.

The people are loyal supporters of the institutions of the Church. The financial report at Conference will show a per capita contribution of at least $125, while one of the churches will make a per capita showing of $250. Can any charge beat this?

At the Campo Bello Church I recently had the privilege of receiving a Mexican and his wife into the fellowship of our Church, and of seeing them cordially welcomed by the refined and big-hearted members of the little congregation.

Whoever is appointed to this charge at Conference may mark it down that the lines are fallen to him in pleasant places.

THE MEETING AT HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We have been greatly blessed in the recent visit and most gracious ministry of Doctor Theodore Copeland of Piné Bluff, Ark. He reached us on October 1 and spent just a week, preaching twice a day. Perhaps no one has come to our city who has made a deeper impression for good in so short a time. By his genial disposition, affectionate, brotherly nature and strong, soulful gospel messages he won the hearts and confidence of all who heard him. He has the happy faculty of winning the love of all, irrespective of denominational differences, and of uniting them in the Master's work.

Notwithstanding the fact that he was greatly hampered by the serious illness of the pastor and the constant menace of the influenza scare, the congregations grew steadily until by Sunday night the large auditorium and Sunday school rooms were filled with a great, appreciative audience. The tide of spiritual fervor rose higher and higher each day and undoubtedly we were on the eve of a very great revival when the meeting was brought to a close on Tuesday by the order of the health authorities forbidding all public gatherings.

Dr. Copeland left with the love of all our people and the hope that he may return when conditions are more propitious for a great work of grace.

We are greatly indebted to our esteemed presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, for his splendid leadership in the meeting and to the other pastors for their hearty co-operation.

A NOTE FROM THE LOUISIANA ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

My work is moving along very well indeed. Old John Barleycorn, like the Kaiser, is condemned on his own record. He is getting pretty groggy. We will grant him no armistice. We never surrender, but we will soon land the knockout blow, provided all our forces stand up and fight to the finish, which will be some two to four years more. By that time we will get our Federal and State laws co-ordinated, so as to enforce national prohibition.

Let no one let up in the fight until we go over the top for God and humanity.

Ugh! Calomel Makes You Deathly Sick

Stop using dangerous drug before it salivates you! It's horrible!

You're bilious, sluggish, constipated and believe you need vile, dangerous calomel to start your liver and clean your bowels.

Here's my guarantee! Ask your druggist for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and take a spoonful to-night. If it doesn't straighten you right up better than calomel and without griping or making you sick I want you to go back to the store and get your money.

Take calomel to-day and to-morrow you will feel weak and sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of harmless, vegetable Dodson's Liver Tone to-night and wake up feeling great. It's perfectly harmless, so give it to your children any time. It can't salivate, so let them eat anything afterwards.

The Best Cough Syrup Is Home-made

Here's an easy way to save $2, and yet have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will quickly earn it a permanent place in your home.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the pint. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you a full pint of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times its cost.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membranes, and gives almost immediate relief. Splendid for throat tickle, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

NON-ESSENTIAL BUILDING PROHIBITED.

There seems to be some confusion in the mind of the general public regarding the recent ruling of the War Industries Board, Washington, as to non-war construction, of which the State Council of Defense has direct supervision throughout Louisiana.

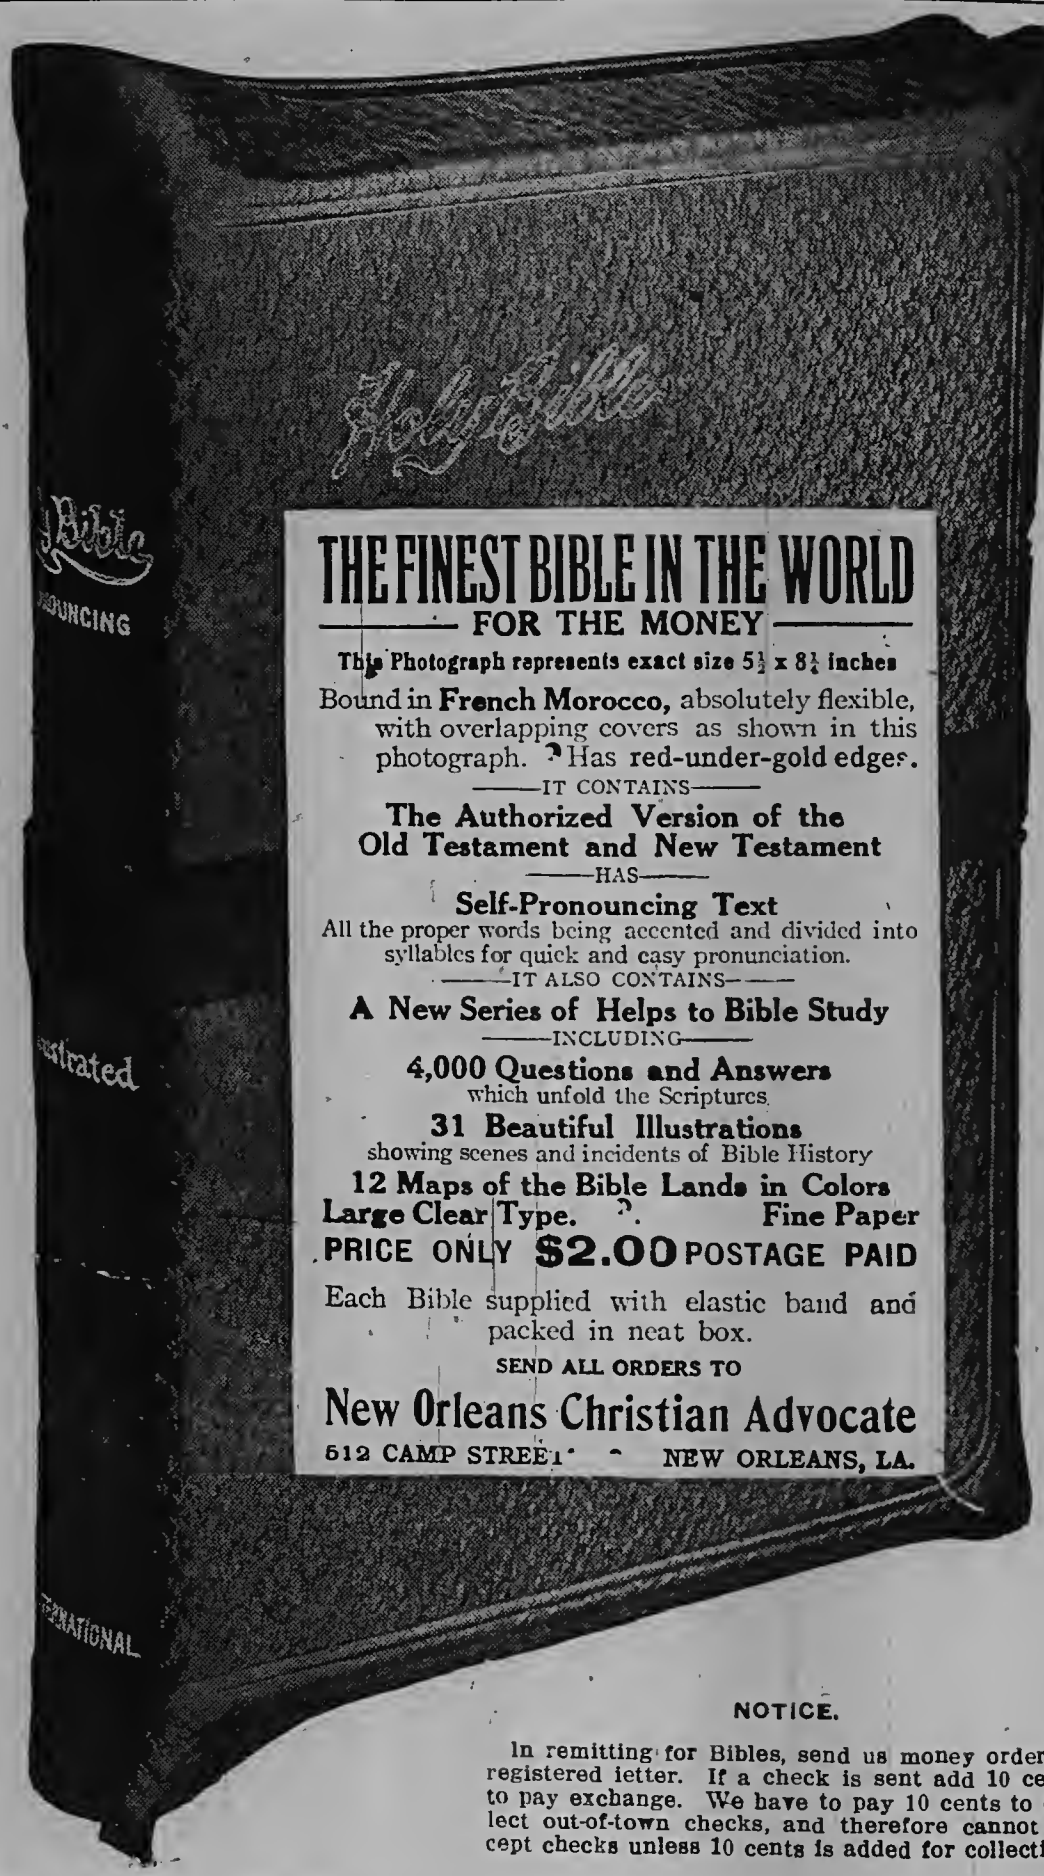
No new building of any kind, no matter what the cost, can be erected within the State until permission has been secured from the Priorities Division of the War Industries Board, Washington. In order to secure this permission, application must first be filed with the Council of Defense of the parish in which the proposed building is to be erected. After the Parish Council passes upon the application, it is sent to the State Council and finally to the War Industries Board. However, no actual construction can be started until a permit is issued by the War Industries Board.

Repairs to exlsting buildings, where the aggregate cost does not exceed $2500, may be made without a permit, and farm buildings, where the aggregate cost does not exceed $1000, and where such buildings are actually needed for agricultural purposes, may also be erected without a permit. However, these are the only two exceptions to this rule.

The main business of the United States at the present time is the winning of the war. Any person who proposes to erect a building should ask himself whether or not this building will aid directly in winning the war and whether or not it is possible to postpone the erection of the building until after the war is over. Unless you can show the Louisiana State Council of Defense the necessity for your building on these grounds, it will be impossible for you to secure a permit until after the war is won.

HOME CARD DRIVE DELAYED—DECEMBER 1 THE NEW DATE.

Because of the epidemic of Spanish influenza throughout the country, the United States Food Administration has postponed the distribution of its new Home Card until December 1. The original plan contemplated the opening of this campaign October 27. However, the new conservation program, which is considered vitai, will be pushed uninterruptedly.



Meetings of all kinds having been banned on account of the epidemic, the aid of the churches, the schools, the four-minute-speakers, libraries, lodges, and patriotic workers could not be secured for the strenuous campaign in the planning of which they were essential parts. It is hoped that by December 1, necessity for quarantined conditions will have disappeared.

Preparatory to the issuance of 20,000,000 Home Cards on that date, the Food Administration will have perfected, through the co-operation of the Federal Food Administrators throughout the country, a plan of distribution which it is anticipated will result in the placing of Home Cards bearing the latest suggestions of the Food Administration in the hands of every American housewife simultaneously.

Disregarding the precedent set in the first Home Card distribution, the Food Administration will make no effort to reduplicate the pledges of more than twelve million American housewives who last year signified their willingness to co-operate in the conservation of all foodstuffs, as it is apparent that American womanhood will aid the Food Administration in helping to supply the nutritive sinews of war to the Allies and our armed forces.

The new Home Card will contain no regulations regarding either "Wheatless" or "Meatless" days, but will urge as a whole the most careful saving in all edibles, particularly in the conservation of wheat, meat, fats and sugar. The significant fact that it will be necessary for the United States to send 5¾ million tons more foodstuffs to the Allies this year than last, with an almost staggering total of 17½ million tons for the coming year, will reawaken the supervisor of the family market-basket to the urgent necessity of maintaining a patriotic watchfulness over the spread of her individual table in order that the 120,000,000 Allies sitting at a "common table" with America may have the stamina with which to bring the war to a successful conclusion in 1919.

No man minds, or ought to mind, work's being hard, if only it comes to something.—Ruskin.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

In these times men are turning to God with an invincible faith that He still sits upon the throne of the universe. Some seem to have forgotten this great truth and in the pride of their own might have undertaken to act as if there were no God. But their evil deeds are recoiling upon their own heads. Out of the chaos of a world-wide conflict, order is beginning to appear—order that is in keeping with the unchanging laws of the Righteous One. The wrath of the nations is praising Him who in strange ways is bringing to naught the devices of men. Forms of government are but as incidents in the adjustment of mankind to the eternal principles of justice and righteousness. An apparently invincible host melts away before the strong arm of the Lord. In His own way, in His own good time, He overthows the counsel of the wicked and establishes His own will. The words of the psalmist might have been uttered for a time like this: "Now therefore be wise, O ye kings; be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve Jehovah with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the son, lest he be angry, and ye perish in the way. For his wrath will soon be kindled. Blessed are all they that take refuge in him."

CONCERNING THE PRAYER MEETING.

Is the prayer meeting the spiritual thermometer of the church, as it is often called? If we accept the view that it is, we are forced to the conclusion that spirituality is at an exceedingly low ebb in a great many of our congregations. As a matter of fact, we do not believe that it is possible to fix upon any one thing as a test of what is, of all things, the most difficult to guage. If non-attendance upon prayer meeting is to be taken as indicating lack of spirituality, attendance must be taken as a sure sign of abounding spirituality; we all know that no such conclusion follows.

There are some who hold that the passing of the class meeting is a sure sign that the Church is spiritually decadent. If it were so, a tremendous weight of responsibility would rest upon multitudes of godly men and women who are making no effort to restore this vanished institution of Methodism. We are perfectly sure that the class meeting served a great purpose in its day, and we can very well understand how, at one time, attendance upon this meeting was a test of the convert's fidelity to his profession; but we do not presume to impose any such test to-day.

We are not in any sense minimizing the importance of the prayer meeting. We should be misunderstood altogether if we should be thought of as suggesting in the remotest sense that the prayer meeting has served its day. It may be that it is undergoing a transformation made necessary by changing conditions of industrial and social life; but it has a place so distinct in the services of the Church that we have no idea that it will ever disappear. In some form or other it will continue to be, as it has been in the past, an important part of the Church's program in ministering to the religious life of the community.

Our conviction is that emphasis should be placed upon the prayer meeting, not as a test of spirituality, but as a means of grace. Its function should be active, not passive. The only thing that conceivably might cause the prayer meeting to vanish is to undertake to maintain it as a kind of fossilized specimen of the things that once were. In the realm of the material, fossils remain as curious reminders of a vanished age; in the realm of the spiritual the fossils themselves ultimately disintegrate and disappear.

THE PREACHER AND LITERATURE.

A very eminent teacher has said that "Literature is the expression of life in words of truth and beauty." This definition may not be altogether satisfactory from every point of view, but it is a simple and direct statement of the characteristic function and qualities of all the writing that has made for itself a permanent place in the world.

Literature is the expression of life. It is not an interpretation of life, as such. The idea of an interpretation carries with it the suggestion of a specific and formal attempt to elucidate the meaning of a given fact or set of facts. The writer or the speaker, as the case may be, undertakes to state certain definite conclusions he has reached in connection with the subject in hand, and to present them for acceptance or rejection to whom he speaks. On the other hand, literature as an expression of life simply presents the facts of life as they have occurred, or as they are occurring every day, and leaves the reader to draw his own conclusions. The only condition is that this expression shall be made in words of truth and beauty.

It needs no argument to show that the literary expression of life must be made in words of truth. If it were otherwise, we should have not life, but a distortion of life. Such distortion would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the reader to arrive at correct views concerning life; just as a false premise inevitably leads to a false conclusion. It is exactly at this point that much of our so-called literature falls: it is not a true expression of life.

The requirement that literature express life in words of beauty is equally evident upon a little reflection. Literature, technically, is intended to give pleasure, rather than convey information. It has a positive intellectual content, but its appeal is predominatingly to the esthetic nature. It differs from didactic composition, in many cases, in the degree in which it ministers to the sense of the beautiful. Literature has a double function at this point: it not only ministers to the sense of the beautiful, but it also develops that sense. The mind grows by what it feeds upon.

Assuming, then, that literature is the expression of life in words of truth and beauty, we believe that all preachers should make it a part of their preparation for efficient service in the Kingdom of God to familiarize themselves with what the great writers of the ages have felt and heard and seen concerning life. The literary artist is one who sees life in a clearer perspective than is possible to the ordinary man; who hears voices that are inarticulate to ordinary ears; who is sensitve to influences that the ordinary mortal never feels at all—unless he is trained to do it. The preacher deals with life as it is, and as it ought to be. He is called, by the grace of God, to bring to bear upon men and women those spiritual forces that will transform them from what they are by nature to what they may be by grace. His task is infinitely great, and infinitely difficult. His success will be in proportion to his knowledge of all the forces, human and divine, that enter into the making of life. These superlatively gifted men who can see and hear and feel things that are denied to the average man can wonderfully enlighten the preacher's mind and stimulate his sense of the beautiful and widen his knowledge of the truth. They are in a very real sense, the great teachers of the world.

We believe that the preacher should be a man of one Book—that is, that he should so master the verbal content and the spiritual significance of the Bible that it will be the central influence in his thinking and preaching. But we believe that the great poets and dramatists and novelists and essayists have a message that is worth the time and trouble of getting. It is a message that will stir his soul and make him feel his kinship with the great working, praying, laughing, sobbing, hoping, longing, believing, doubting, struggling, upward-moving mass of men and women that the world is full of. It is a message that will make him a better man and a better preacher.

THE MEN IN THE RANKS.

We have something like two million men in France—and most of them are privates. The officers are trained men, who carry heavy responsibilities, and who are proving themselves equal to all the emergencies of warfare as they arise—but they could not do much were it not for the men in the ranks. Those men in the ranks carry the guns and dig the trenches and do the thousand and one things that must be done for the success of our cause. And when the time comes, led by their officers, they let drive at the enemy and triumphantly plant the banners of democracy upon the strongholds of the Hun. They work hard and they fight hard and thousands of them—peace to their souls!—die and are buried in a foreign soil. They are only privates; yes, but they have made possible the progress of Liberty and they have laid down their lives in the performance of duty.

So it is in all the warfare and work of the world. The men and the women who make possible the advances of civilization, who withstand the assaults of evil and fight the battles of righteousness, live and work and die in obscure places; but the quality of their service is heroic and they deserve the crowns of victory, and for them the songs of rejoicing should be sung. Let us never forget this in the work of the Church. The burdens that must be borne, and the sacrifices that must be made, and the difficulties that must be faced, and the hardships that must be endured, all fall heavily upon the men and women in the ranks. Theirs is not the honor as the world counts honor, but God has reserved a high place for them among the mighty. "Faithful unto the end," is their fit eulogy.

A MEETING PLACE.

By Mark Guy Pearse.

"They heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day."—Gen. 3. 8.

O God, I pray Thee grant to me
To find within the daily life
A space fenced off from earthly strife
Where I may wait and watch for Thee.

A garden which Thyself hast made,
Where grow Thy graces rich and rare,
And gently breathes the fragrant air,
And blooms the bliss that doth not fade.

And listening let me gladly run
With eager steps to walk with Thee:
With heart aglow to talk with Thee,
An hour when earth and heaven are one.

OUR TWILIGHTS.

By Wm. C. Allen.

Hall, Twilight, sovereign of one peaceful hour.
—Wordsworth.

To most of us life, with its alternating delightfulness and darkness, presents an ever shifting scene. The intervening periods are often in very truth as twilight to our souls.

It is good to think of the soft illumination that is poured across the sky at break of dawn. How fascinating it is—how full of promise! Possibly we stand on a mountain top and watch the shadows flee away. Distant crags and fruitful valleys are unfolded to our view. Mother Nature discloses her fantasy and charms to her watching children. Just so, after we have passed long nights of doubt and gloom, does the sun of God's infinite love arise and spread His illimitable light at our very feet. Clarity of vision and judgment as to what lines of action should be followed are restored to us. We learn anew that "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

The children of men still linger in the twilight. We understand more than our fathers did but know less than our children will to-morrow. Humanity long ago was plunged into deeper blindness than we can experience under the black dome of a stormy night. As a man laboriously hews his pathway through the gloom of a tropical jungle, until he sees in the distance a ray of vivid light, so is it with us to-day. Civilization alone will not conduct us out of our partial darkness. Inventions or culture can not deliver us. Unfulfilled ideals of themselves will not meet our needs. We shamefully continue to sin against Jesus but he patiently leads us toward the brightness of the morrow. He is the Light! Whatever we do we must loyally submit to the divine illumination in our hearts. As we are obedient to this, we contribute our little share toward helping humanity out of twentieth century twilight into God's unbroken day.

Those who permit themselves to be dragged into the pit of fear lose sight of their Savior and of His luminous hope. Those who wander through the forest of doubt make sad footsteps because the guidance of heavenly light is denied them. Those who suffer from human ills apparently have no way of escape—they often seem hopelessly enmeshed in the toils of disease and pain. But to all these—in God's own way and time—deliverance can come. Sorrow is the twilight of the soul, but does the twilight last forever?

Most of us enjoy the sweet beauty of the evening, whether it be from the window of a rushing railway train, in the hurried streets of the city or as we note the speckled splendor of the western sky fading into night. Perhaps we have watched the calmness of the countryside when the gentle stars appeared amidst the dull gloom that softly enfolded us in its strong embrace. So, in a sense, may be the twilight of our lives. After the sunshine and the battle, shall we dread the evening of our day? Do we wonder how it will be with us when we shall enter the dark valley? Are we affrighted as we near the deepening shadows? Shall we tremble as we go out into the final twilight? If we have honestly made our peace with God, all will be well—there is glorious radiancy beyond:

"Though I walk through the valley,
* * * Thou art with me!"

The souls of God's children live forever—their last twilight becomes the harbinger of perpetual day!

WORTH THINKING ABOUT.

(A friend has sent us a copy of the pastor's report to the fourth quarterly conference of our great St. John's Church, St. Louis. There are some things in this report of such general importance that we take the liberty of reproducing it. Dr. Rice is well-known in Louisiana and Mississippi as a former pastor of Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, and lecturer at the Seashore Divinity School.)

"In closing this quadrennium it might not be amiss to call attention to some of the things sought to be emphasized as necessary to the effective work of a modern church.

"First of all, prime emphasis has been placed from first to last upon the Sunday morning worship, and upon the sermon as the central item in that worship. The American Church is at the parting of the ways. Things too numerous to recount here are drawing attention away from the preaching of the Word and making it impossible that the minister shall be a preacher and meet all the other demands now made upon him. The result is that there is not so much as one man on the continent who stands out pre-eminently as the interpreter of Christianity to the nation. Unless we can get back to the value-sense of the early Church, or find a better one, we shall finally have in America, in spite of all our splendid altruism, a ministry without a message and a Church without a soul. The pastor must be relieved of everything else except those duties initmately involved in his beautiful relationship to his people. To do this requires that the Church as a whole take itself more seriously, that the membership be stirred up to aggressive, personal evangelism, and that a staff of paid assistants be furnished every city pastor. Perhaps the greatest administrative mistake made here during this quadrennium has been that the pastor has sought to relieve the church of all possible expense on account of war conditions, and while all our neighboring pastors have had paid assistants, he has tried to do the work alone, except for a brief period.

"In keeping with the emphasis upon the preaching of the Word, attention has been held to the importance of religious education. The Sunday school has been thoroughly organized on modern scientific lines, embodying the latest results in religious psychology. This organization includes a series of departments, from the Beginners to the Adult, each department being under a superintendent with a corps of assistants. The literature adopted is based also upon the established results of modern psychology. It deals with the interests of childhood and youth peculiar to each period through which we pass on the way to ourselves.

"The time has come, however, when the religious teaching of the Church must extend through the week. In keeping with his conviction the pastor has, in addition to the two Sunday sermons, given two Bible lectures a week during the entire quadrennium, one on Tuesday, the other on Wednesday evening.

"The Tuesday lecture reached as many as a hundred, half to three-fourths of whom were our own people; the others were members of other churches and of no church. We were able by this class to touch a goodly number of outsiders.

"The Wednesday evening meeting has been transformed from a dull hour, wasted by a dozen or less, to an entire evening given over to the study of things fundamental by a large and enthusiastic group of our members. Beginning at 6:30 with a dinner, generously served by our women, followed by prayer, lecture on the Bible by the pastor, music by some of the best artists in the city, selected by Miss Elizabeth Johnson, we closed with a lecture of inestimable importance by Dr. John W. Withers. It is impossible to over-state the value of these meetings, not only in an educational, but also in a social and religious way; for our people were brought together most helpfully in a deeply spiritual atmosphere, and a distinct church spirit was greatly strengthened.

"Other phases of religious education would have been undertaken but for lack of trained help.

"The pastor's whole administration has been directed and controlled by a growing conviction that the mission of the Church is three-fold: first, evangelism; second, religious training; third, the Christianizing of the social order. The Church should be the central power-house of our whole life. Its task is the transforming, comforting, uplifting, ennobling, inspiring and socializing of every individual, and the democratizing of every institution. Democracy is the word of the hour. Unless we can apply its exacting principles in our homes, our churches, our schools, our politics, our statecraft, our commerce and industry, it is murderous folly to sacrifice our boys on the battlefields of Europe for an irridescent and impossible dream. No pains have been spared, therefore, to make St. John's a great democratic institution. In accordance with this ideal, every society, board, and committee has been perfectly free to choose its own officers, methods of work, and plan of activities. The pastor has avoided any suggestion of autocracy at every point. He has also followed this ideal in all his pastoral relations. The poorest member of the congregation has had exactly the same service as the richest. Nobody has been specially favored; nobody has been consciously neglected. He has sought only to give all he had, without stint and without partiality, to all alike who are ready and willing to receive.

"War conditions have, during the whole four years, thoroughly disorganized even the thinking of everybody, and church work has been made very much more difficult. It is, nevertheless, remarkable that in spite of all our anxieties and confusions, and in spite of the fact that something like 150 of our people have gone into war service of one kind or another, our congregations have kept up steadily, our Sunday school has not lagged except in the boys' department, and all the work of the Church has gone steadily forward.

"Allow me, in closing, to record my intense appreciation of the splendid loyalty I have met through all the four years.

"Praying God's richest blessings upon you as officials in this great church, and as individual members of the Kingdom of God on earth, this report is "Respectfully submitted,

JOHN A. RICE, P. C."

WHAT IS A REVIVAL?

By Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook.

The Church as I view it to-day needs a revival of old-time religion. Many devout spirits have been crying to heaven for such an awakening. Here and there God has been pleased to pour out His majestic Spirit and gracious results have followed. Some of the most striking reports that I have any knowledge of are from our missionaries in the foreign field. This is exceedingly gratifying, and is the result of powerful, prayerful evangelism. There is an occasional revival awakening in the home church, hut nothing to compare with what should be. There are many, many places occupied by beautiful churches that have not had a genuine Pentecostal revival in years. I mean a revival where sinners were hrought under deep and pungent conviction for sin. Getting people to join the Church is not a revival. Multitudes of our young people have never even witnessed a real revival, and the older generation has drifted far away from the revival idea. This is sad but it is true.

But what is a revival? Is it a noisy, tumultuous, sensational movement? No, these often accompany genuine revivals, hut they do not constitute one. There may he a great hurrah and commotion among the people in the church without any deep conviction of sin. Large advertising will bring a crowd together at any time. Sensational preaching will appease and hold them for a while. There may he much excitement and the superficial onlookers report a powerful revival, but such is not necessarily the case. Human enthusiasm, hig choirs, large crowds, and evangelistic fervor, will make an impression occasionally, but it may, like the heautiful flower of the field, soon die and pass into oblivion. In a great revival, there is profound conviction of sin. Yes, and a solemn awe rests upon the people of the community. Eternal things are made very real. Sin is seen in its hideous nature and hated as if it were a poisonous serpent. Wrongs, as far as possible, will be righted, family altars will he established in the home, the fear of God will rest upon the people and they will walk obedlently hefore the Master. Whenever these conditions prevail, there is a genuine revival in the Church. Such a revival leavens the whole lump, and it leaves a lasting impression on the community, and people will know that God has wrought in their midst. All with whom the Holy Spirit deals will not have the same measure of conviction; all will not manifest the same emotion, hut there will be striking exhibitions of pungent conviction and outbursts of feeling in audiences where the Spirit has complete control. Every revival is followed hy a righteous movement. The Spirit of God so comes into and dwells with men that they shine for God continually. Revivals are never worked up—they are prayed down. Methods amount to very little in such meetings. The Spirit of God dominates, illuminating, convicting, regenerating, sanctifying and filling. Great things take place in a real revival; people are born of God and are translated from the kingdom of darkness into the marvelous light and liberty of the gospel of the Son of God.

Hand-picked fruit is said to be the best, and there is such a thing as a continuous revival in which persons are being saved daily and hourly. Happy the church that has adopted this Bible idea; but this does not preclude the necessity for special seasons for extraordinary effort in soul-winning, times when the church as a body gives itself to the immediate work of soul-winning. Persons will be drawn to the revival meetings that are not reached by the regular preaching services, hence there should he the continuous process of ingathering through the ordinary channels of grace, and this should be supplemented hy intensified efforts exerted on the part of the church as a whole in the revival services. But it matters not when people are converted, just so they are wrenched from their old worldly moorings to grace and implicit faith in God. We are in sore need of a great revival in the Church. Nothing else will check the rising tide of worldliness, threatening to engulf us, rebuke the skepticism that is enervating us and turn the people from their idols to serve the living God with all the heart and to wait for His Son from heaven.

The majority of people are converted in revivals and there is no measuring the depths of depravity into which we would have fallen had not the Church been awakened and purged by the mighty revivals of the past. God is anxiously waiting to bless our Church with a great revival of old-time religion. Do we as a Church want a Pentecostal revival in this dark period of the nation's history?

"Revive Thy work, O Lord,
Thy mighty arm make bare,
Speak with the voice that wakes the dead
And make the people hear."

CABINET SECRECY.

By Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D. D.

Brother J. W. Ramsey of New Augusta, Miss., has given notice to all concerned that cabinet secrecy is out of date and no longer to be tolerated—the democratic spirit having entered the Church as well as the State. Brother Ramsey says, "This is the day of democracy, and anything that looks like autocracy, either in State or Church, must go." From his standpoint, cabinet secrecy not only looks like autocracy, but is autocracy of the rankest kind. Brother Ramsey is encouraged in his demand for democracy by the action of one of our Bishops, who, near the close of one of his Conferences, announced that, "all the appointments being arranged, the presiding elders were at liberty to inform the preachers, and that he was accessible to hoth preachers and laymen."

As far as I am able to see there is no "lording it over God's heritage" in the manner of making the appointments of our preachers. The Bishop is not self-appointed to his position as superintendent, nor does he usurp authority. He is authorized hy the General Conference, and works inside of lines prescribed by that Conference which is our law-making body, which body is a democracy. It is composed of an equal number of preachers and laymen, and derives its authority by the consent of the governed. In the executive branches of the Church, the minor Conferences and the various Boards, there is not an officer that is not elected or authorized by the General Conference, with all his duties prescribed. None have prerogatives. All are hound hy law. Hence we have no autocrats in Methodism.

The Bishop is as much bound by law as any servant of the Church. One of the duties of a Bishop is "to fix the appointments of the preachers in the Annual Conferences." He alone is responsible. And common sense dictates that it he done in secret. The success of our Methodism is largely due to this method or practice, which is purely prudential. And, as the Bishop, and, incidentally the presiding elders, who are his chosen advisors, are executives, authorized hy the democratic law-making hody, there is nothing autocratic in cabinet secrecy. The President of the United States is not elected by the people, but directly by State electors. But this does not make him any the less the executive of a democracy. He chooses his own advisers. Together they constitute the cabinet. Their work, done in secret, affects every citizen in the United States. Is the President's cabinet an undemocratic institution? Does anybody think of overturning or revolutionizing the government because the President does not consult the people generally in regard to the affairs of State? Certainly the President would be guilty of no wrong in so doing, hut it would be neither convenient, practicable, nor advisable. Our Bishops would do no wrong hy consulting the preachers and people ahout the appointments, but it would not he convenient, practicable, or advisahle.

Bishop Du Bose's course, named by Brother Ramsey, can hardly be accepted as a precedent. He was presiding over one of the smallest Conferences in the Church, where misfits and unsatisfactory appointments could he adjusted in a short time. Besides, he did not consent for the presiding elders to "inform the preachers of their appointments" until "toward the close" of the Conference, the assignments having heen made. It was then easier to say "yes," or "no," and rectify mistakes than to stand in the midst of conflicting interests while the making of the appointments was in progress. Bishop Du Bose has been long known as a wise man. That is one reason he was elected to make appointments.

Should Bishop Kilgo, at the approaching session of the Mississippi Conference, announce in the beginning that the presiding elders would inform the preachers of what was being done in the cabinet, instead of adjourning on Monday as is usual, he would have to hold the Conference another week, and then lack time. Or should he wait until "toward the close," he would need two or three days additional to satisfy the brethren. While these statements only partially justify cabinet secrecy, they show that as a prudential regulation, it has answered a good purpose. It has made in the ranks of Methodism heroes and men of faith—men who have gone into strange lands, as did Abraham, trusting in God. And, behold through them, what hath God wrought!

If we are going to apply the so-called principle of democracy in supplying our work with preachers, we must not forget the fact that two parties are equally interested: the preachers on one hand and the laymen on the other. The Bishop could not consistently take the preachers into his confidence without at the same time consulting the brethren and sisters, who in all respects have as much at stake as the preachers. And be it said to the credit and loyalty of our people, that so long as the preachers have been content to let the Bishops make the appointments without interfering with them, they have been content to receive their preachers as sent from God.

But should our system break down, and the preachers undertake the selection of their appointments, with or without the help of presiding elders, the laymen will assert their democracy—and, not only that, they will assert their sovereignty, and declare, not always who they will have, hut who they will not have. Then the rejected brother will be at somebody's mercy. When that day comes a good per cent of preachers by virtue of ability, education, and social qualities will be in demand. They will have no trouble while young and in good health in securing desirable pastorates. But hundreds of others, like hundreds of preachers of congregational and other liberal democratic (?) Churches, will need help and the help will not be at hand. Like the laborers of whom we read in the parable, they will stand idle hecause no man will hire them. Of course Brother Ramsey neither desires nor expects such a day to come. He has fared too well as a Methodist itinerant at the hands of Bishops and presiding elders who did their work in secret. Should his idea of democracy, self-government, be applied to our itinerancy, he will soon find himself and all the rest of us dependent on self-support.

Our itinerancy as it is, or as it was, is the most efficient method in existence for supplying the world with the gospel. It has made thousands of men, who, without its shaping and refining power and processes, would never have done anything, and never would have been heard of. The great Dr. McFerrin said to the great Dr. Green, when both were at their zenith of power and popularity: "Green, when I first knew you, you were wearing copperas breeches, and if it had not been for the Methodist Church, you would have been wearing copperas hreeches still." Lots of us twentieth century preachers have forgotten "the hole of the pit whence we were digged."

A BROTHERLY SUGGESTION.

Dear Mr. Editor: Please let me say to the pastors of the respective churches, that at this time of churchless days, when the presiding elders cannot hold their quarterly conferences, and while our good people are remembering us, let us remember that our presiding elders may need their part of these funds. This is just a suggestion. I know we will do this if we do not forget it. We pastors ought to remember the presiding elders while our people remember us.

"KILLED IN ACTION."

By J. F. Dorroh.

They rest beneath the consecrated sod
They died to save from the invader's hand;
Yet, is not far-off France as near to God
As is their native land?

From that low cross, that marks each resting-place
On Honor's field, to God's bright Morning Star,
The Soul, exultant, thro' the realms of space,
Finds not the distance far.

It always has been, is and will be thus—
A truth that time or distance cannot dim,
That God is always just as near to us
As we are near to Him.

As when our childhood troubles to us come,
When danger threatens, or when fear alarms,
Instinctive flies the child-heart to that home
Within its mother's arms:

And o'er the hurt she pours the balm of healing,
(What pain so deep, that mother cannot touch?)
And her dear face, above him bent, revealing
The love that loves so much:

So, danger works beneath this two-fold law;
As griefs and pains obey God's chosen plan,
And lift the stricken heart to God, and draw
God closer unto man.

Madison, Miss.

MRS. SUSANNAH OWENS KEARNEY.

Mrs. Susannah Owens Kearney was born in Madison County, Mississippi, on June 3, 1831. When a young girl, she attended school both in Canton and in Jackson. Her education was finished at the Episcopal Institute, Columbia, Tenn. Mr. William Owens, her father, was also a Mississippian by birth: a wealthy planter and slave-holder. He was a magnificent type of his race: tall, splendidly developed, fair-haired, blue-eyed. He was a descendant of those Welsh people of centuries ago who made glorious the history of Wales.

The mother of Mrs. Kearney was Abi Rose Owens, of French extraction, a native of Kentucky. Her daughter was very proud of this distinction; and often spoke admiringly of her elegant French grandfather.

Susannah Owens Kearney became an orphan when a little child: her mother dying when she was only three years old, her father when she was twelve. She was reared by her sister, Mrs. Harrison Jordan, whose husband was a prominent physician as well as a planter. They lived on an estate near Madison, Miss. Not only was Miss Sue Owens reared by this noble man and woman, but her brother, Andrew, who died early in life, her younger sister, Lucy, and her brother, William Owens. The two last lived to maturity, married and became the heads of families.

A deep attachment existed between Sue Owens and her brother, William. She cherished the tenderest affection also for her niece, Fannie Jordan, who afterward became the wife of Capt. Gillespie, of Jackson, mother of Mrs. Frances Gillespie Carnahan, now of that city.

At the age of twenty, Susannah Owens was married to Walter G. Kearney, who had recently finished his college course; and who, later on, served as Colonel in the Confederacy and became prominent in the political life of his State. They made their home in a stately dwelling on a plantation, near Vernon, Miss., which had been presented to the young husband by his father, Colonel Guston Kearney, who owned vast landed estates in Madison County.

Mrs. Sue Owens Kearney was a woman of distinguished appearance. Her presence carried the essence of high breeding. Her every movement gave expression to that aristocracy of soul and brain and blood for which the Old South was justly famous. She was a person of high ideals, of exquisite refinement of thought and speech. Her generosity was boundless. She lavished her benefactions with an open hand and unselfish heart. She was intensely literary. Her life was spent with books. She was celebrated among her acquaintances for her profound knowledge of the Bible and as a brilliant student of history. She was a consecrated Christian and a devoted Methodist.

When it became known that she was very ill, and probably would not recover, all of her ex-slaves who could reach her, called to pay their respects. Among these was the son of Col. Walter Kearney's coachman, who went with him to the Civil War as his body-guard and who lost his life in the army.

Mrs. Susannah Owens Kearney made an adoring mother. Three of her children are living: Tully S. Kearney of Chicago, Walter A. Kearney of Mississippi, and Miss Belle Kearney, who is known as a writer and lecturer. Two granddaughters of Mrs. Sue Owens Kearney are: Mrs. Corinne Wingfield, of San Diego, California, and Mrs. Grantland S. Long, of Los Angeles, daughters of Corinne Kearney and Capt. Andrew J. Baker.

On Wednesday morning, October 16, 1918, Mrs. Sue Owens Kearney passed gently from the life of earth to the blessedness of eternity. She was beautiful with the light of the majesty of death upon her. She looked like a queen in her coronation robes. Friends and relatives brought flowers: notably roses, carnations and cape jessamines. The last recalled a characteristic incident.

Several years ago, Mrs. Kearney presented a superb cape jessamine to her daughter, saying: "I love this flower better than all others, because it was the first flower that your father gave me."

The day of the funeral was one of shifting shadows. As Rev. Mr. Adams stood praying in the handsome old room, hallowed by precious memories, pale rays of flickering sunlight fell suddenly across the flower-covered casket, lingered for a moment, then vanished. The second time they came with a glorious effulgence, apparently pronouncing their benediction upon the spotless life of her who had so recently awakened in the world of immortality.

Late in the afternoon, in the family cemetery, at Vernon, Miss., the frail body of Mrs. Susannah Owens Kearney was laid to rest, in the company of those whom she had "loved and lost awhile."

"TO THEM THAT ASK."

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

In St. Luke 11:13, it is said, "If ye being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." This Scripture contains two sermons, first, "Good Gifts to Children;" second, "The Gift of the Holy Spirit." I am to remark, in this, of the Holy Spirit, and how to secure this most important of all gifts.

1. It should be mentioned that the Holy Spirit may be secured by asking. "How much more," says the Divine Christ, "will he give the Holy Spirit to them that ask.' Great emphasis is placed upon asking. The Savior again said, "Ask and ye shall receive." The Holy Spirit comes from God and such as receive must "ask Him."

2. The asking must be sincere. He knows human hearts, and instantly understands every purpose. If sincerity exists, some preparation for the coming of the Holy Spirit will be made. People, in instances, invite company to their homes; if no preparation is made, the visit may be disappointing. Cold rooms, poor diet, uncongenial associates and an air of indifference, might compel to a brief stay, and probably prevent a second coming. The prophet said, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," and the Savior suggested, "I go to prepare a place for you." The preparation creates the inviting nature of the situation, and His words of assurance were in the highest sense sincere.

3. To secure the Holy Spirit, things offensive to Him must be put away. The church man could say, "Come Holy Spirit, and dwell in my heart—but I can do little in service, and less in attendance at the house of God, and in some cases I must break the Sabbath." "Nothing doing," naturally would be the answer. And it would be the same should the people of a city cry out, "Holy Spirit, come, and brood over the town, and quicken all of our enterprises, and make us great—but we must defy God's commands, and compromise with evil." Again it might be said with the same result, "Holy Spirit, dwell in my home, rule in my life and give unto me the joy of conscious favor with God—but no family altar for me, and places must be visited to which the Divine Chrsit has no invitation." "Come Holy Spirit," sings the choir, "but we must be very 'swell,' and the elegant minister must remark scantily on the doctrine of hell." Great is the choir and we expect to sing in heaven, and the well-equipped minister is a benediction from the Wondrous Giver of all good. But the best Church appointments must be vain without the presence of the Holy Spirit.

4. It may also be mentioned that a forgiving spirit is needful in order to secure the gift of the Holy Spirit. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses," says the Word. Not that anyone can be better than God, for what He condemns must also be condemned by such as would be His, and the Spirit of Christ is a spirit of antagonism to evil of every possible sort and God, our Father, has indicated a limit when forgiveness comes to be impossible, when he said, "Ephraim is joined unto his idols, let him alone," and when the Holy Ghost, because of sins "which hath not forgiveness" takes his flight for ever. But a disposition to pardon, as God would pardon, must be entertained in order that the heart may come to be a temple for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

5. God gives the Holy Spirit for service. "Saved for service," as well as for personal good, and to secure heaven, everywhere passes current. The minister might humbly pray, "Lord give unto me the Holy Spirit to speak in thy name—but I may expound the Word, or perchance I may not do so!" Such an attitude must be offensive to God, and prevent the fulfillment of the promise, "Lo, I am with you." Again he might cry, "Lord give unto me the Holy Spirit for the work of revivals—but I will send for the evangelist."

"God helps the man who helps himself" is good philosophy, and the Holy Spirit comes to such as commit for duty in every proper direction, and unto the finish. God himself possesses no power to call and to commission the minister of the pulpit simply that he may perform the stupendous task (?) of sending for "the other fellow." "Here am I, send me," for service of some kind, somewhere, was the ancient statement, and still binding as a condition of acceptance with God, and of securing the presence and company of the Holy Spirit. It was apostolic to "help each other," as men of the ministry, but each stood in his lot, and did his duty, and could stand alone with God, if conditions so demanded. God's work and God's workers are great in variety, but to secure the support of the Unseen Partner, each must commit for service, which may not be relegated to any living mortal, not even to an angel of heaven. Such God-given place and duty develop greatness, and unlock the gates of an eternal heaven.

6. The Divine Leader at the Red Sea, said unto Moses, "Why cryest thou unto me! Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Prayer may not be omitted, but the going forward is a condition of Divine favor and of success. A pastor was assigned to a new charge. For ten years the congregation had groaned in an old and dilapidated house of worship on a prominent and beautiful street corner. Many expedients had been tried, but the problem of a new church was still unsolved. Before the frosts of winter had fallen, it was known that the Methodist people possessed the best arranged and most captivating house of worship in the little city. In less than two years a great revival had come to that congregation, and 100 people were added to the Church, and they knew for themselves that "The Comforter" had come, "the Holy Ghost from heaven, the Father's promise given."

7. God's riches are infinite; the Holy Spirit fills the measureless distances of the universe and even at times stands at the door of human hearts and knocks for admission, but the "Heavenly Stranger" cannot enter without a welcome, or linger regardless of conditions.

The keys to the great city are His, and where He comes is a title to heaven, and where He remains is a prophecy of triumph, and of admission to the household of the Eternal King.

A REQUEST FOR INFORMATION.

Who was the first Methodist preacher that preached in Sunflower County, Miss., and when and where did he preach?

Any information that will assist me in getting track of the early history of Methodism in this County will be very much appreciated.

THE PREACHER AND THE PARSONAGE QUESTION.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The recent artiele by Rev. P. H. Fontaine on "The Southern Negro and the Southern Methodist Preacber," was not all "hot air." Others besides Brotber Fontaine have experieneed parsonage eonditions such as he in the matter of the neglect of keeping up our parsonages and theIr premlses. The fáct is, we generally find a parsonage just as the carpenter left it, minus the wear and decay since the building was eompleted, or the last professional carpenter was employed. This means that if a pane of glass is broken, a window gets cranky and won't raise, a door sags, a gate hinge gets broken, and the other things that happen daily, it is just let alone until some official move is made by the ehurch to have the defects remedied. And thus it neeessitates several months' repairing, arranging conveniences, and, In a general way, getting a place really fit to live In, when we move into many of our parsonages. This writer has had as high as six wagon-loads of brickbats, tin cans, broken glass, and a thousand and one non-burnable things to haul off from the parsonages premises before he could consider the surface of the yard a safe plaee for the children to live and play. And when we have begun to dig in tbe garden and to cultivate the "patches," then the discoveries of ancient buried treasures have sometimes been wonderful indeed.

It sometimes seems that the parsonage premises have been the burying-ground for all of the filth of the community, and the preachers are "sinners above all of the Galileans," but upon investigation such will be found not to be the case. For among the homes of the eitizens there will be found many even in worse fix than such parsonages, and among transient renters the ease is still worse. But should the preacher be satisfied as a home maker just a little better than the worst? Is be not supposed to be both cultured and ethical, and out of place except in a home approaching the ideal, as far as the equipment will allow?

It strikes us as being another matter In whicb preachers should be "graded." Along witb being classed as "mixers," orators, money raisers, etc., suppose the eommittee on grading add that of "home maker;" and then when the "cabinet" begins to exchange certain "grades" of preachers witb certain ranks of appointments, let it be the rule tbat the men who try to make their homes comfortable and models for their parishioners be sent to other charges where such homes have been prepared for them, and not be forced to follow a pastor who has let the physical part of his home take care of itself. This would seem to us to be fair, as in this way those who appreciate good bomes could have them, and those who would let any home to whieh they were assigned deteriorate to a poor one could have just what it would take to satisfy them. It is a hardship to build up one home after another and then realize that the upbuilding work will never end.

And what could be said of the other part of tbe parsonage premises, could be with equal force said of the parsonage gardens, most of them being simply bermuda sods and weed patches. Only once in more than a twenty years' pastorate has this writer found the parsonage garden anything eise. Some of the pastors have given as the reason, that they are not farmers but preachers, and ratber than spend their time in gardening, they must put the time on preparing high-elass sermons; but more than once have we heard it intimated by the people that the trouble with these pastors is not so much literary activity as what they called "laziness." So there you are. Anyhow, it is hard on the man who tries to have a garden to have to undo in one year the neglect of many years.

To keep up a civilized home takes constant thought and care, and almost daily, something in the upkeep needs to be done; and more than all should the pastor's home be up to the best, as far as its type and the available money will allow. Our own plan is to have chair bottoming, screening, fence fixing, etc., done when it is needed, and keep itemized accounts of what is done, and at intervals ask tbe members to pay the bills, and this has proved to be the most satisfactory plan to us.

But whatever the method adopted for carrying it out, the pastor's home and premises, and his garden, should be as much a model for the community as the preacher's moral life itself.

CALL FOR CHAPLAINS.

There is immediate need for our best men as chaplains. Unquestionably the chaplaincy In the Army or Navy is the greatest opportunity of service enjoyed by any Christian minister to-day. It is gratifying that the ministry of our Church has made prompt and patriotic response to the call for chaplains. A number of our strongest men and many young men of unusual attainments have been commissioned as chaplains. Our Church is practically up with her quota to date. We have acted upon 181 applications and now have 92 commissioned; 30 In attendance upon the Training School, and 41 approved candidates for November Training School. We also have 46 applications on file for development.

Within the past week the War Department has recast the figures and assigned our Church a quota exceeding by forty the previous assignment. To meet this call we must furnish a total of about 300 chaplains for Army and Navy. We hope to receive immediately applications from at least 100 of our very best men of outstanding ability. These should come from every Conference.

The Executive Committee and Committee on Chaplains of our War Work Commission have agreed tbat, while we cannot of course draw the line and say that no man under 30 will be considered for a chaplaincy, we greatly prefer men over 30.

The War Department construes the age limit to be up to 46 and since the Chaplains' Training School cannot send out men as rapidly as General Pershing requires, they have agreed to commission, within the next few weeks, 600 men without attendance upon the Training School. To secure a commission under this, it will be well for these applicants to be from 35 to 45 years of age. The War Department is also prepared to commission a few men, possibly as many as 200, who are beyond the age of 45.

Address E. O. Watson, Secretary, Rooms 40 and 41, Washington Post Building, Washington, D. C. for application blanks and information as to method of procedure, etc.

ANOTHER GIFT OF $2500 TO MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Dear Mr. Editor: The many friends of Millsaps College throughout the State will be much gratified to learn that a subscription of $2500 has recently been made to the new Dormitory by those princely laymen, the Dantzler brothers, of Moss Point, Miss., and New Orleans, La., who are worthy sons of a noble and sainted father. We are indebted to Brother J. D. Turley, a splendid laymen of Coldwater, Miss., for the gift of $100 to the Ministerial Student Loan Fund, which from year to year is performing a noble service in helping worthy young preachers through College. I take pleasure also in announcing a much-appreciated gift in Liberty Bonds to the Dormitory fund by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sherard, of Sherard, Miss., who, although liberal contributors to other benevolences, believe thoroughly in the educational work of our Church. We are deeply grateful to these and other friends for their generous gifts to the cause of Christian education, which was never more important than now.

I respectfully suggest that the example of Brother and Sister Sherard is worthy of imitation. No doubt there are many consecrated Mississippi Methodists who, on account of responses to the big "war drives," which of course ought to have the right of way, find themselves unable to make a cash contribution to the Dormitory, but who could easily spare one or more Liberty Bonds. These would he gratefully received, and used to advantage.

Yours fraternally,

M. M BLACK,

Jackson, Miss. Commissioner.

AN OPPORTUNE EXHORTATION TO ALL.

To the Preachers of the Aberdeen District.

Dear Brethren: The stewards of the Aberdeen District are going to make this year the finest record in their history. Already they are several thousand dollars ahead of any previous year, and I shall urge and expect that every pastor's salary be paid in full.

It is now up to us, as pastors, to do as well by our missionaries, superannuated preachers, and all the interests represented in our Conference Assessments. NEVER WAS THERE GREATER NEED THAT OUR BENEVOLENCES BE RAISED IN FULL THAN NOW. Our missionaries can hardly live at all on their salaries even when paid in full, and we should be as conscientious and diligent in providing for them as we expect our stewards to be in providing for us. We rightly think that the stewards should see every member on our behalf. So we should canvass thoroughly the entire membership of the church in behalf of the benevolences, the responsibility for the collection of which rests upon us.

The call of the nation is, "Work or fight." So let us be diligently about our Master's business. Remember he classes the "slothful" with the "wicked," and says to both—depart. It is no small offense to be negligent about the work of the Lord.

Our district has made a magnificent showing in regard to the War Work Fund, almost every charge paying in full—some doubling and more. Now let us do as well by our Conference Assessments. Freely the people have received of God; freely they should give to Him. It is ours to call them to fulfill this duty and privilege.

Depending upon every one of you, that laboring together with God we may everywhere attain the goal set before us, I remain,

Your friend and brother in service

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

CARRY ON

It is said that the captain, wounded in the charge and falling in the thickest of the fray, passes two little words back to the next in command—"Carry On." In turn the officer assigned to the task, when he finds himself laid low by shot or shell, repeats the magic words and leaves to another the work of Carrying On and leading to victory. So it goes through each succeeding rank. When the man higher up falls it devolves upon someone else to "Carry On." No one must evade his responsibility or shirk his duty. No matter what the danger, no matter how fast the shells fall or that the air is filled with poisonous gas, each soldier must bravely obey the command to "Carry On."

Thus it is with the great enterprise which the Church has undertaken. The great Captain looks to his followers to "Carry On." For a hundred years men and women have been "Carrying On" the missionary work of the great Methodist Church. One by one, the pioneers have passed back the words: "Carry On." And now in this eventful era of the world's history, amid the stress and strain of a world bathed in blood, God's soldiers must heed the call to "Carry On." No matter what the sacrifice, the work must go forward. The weakest Conference, the humbiest member, has an important part to play, and only as each one meets his responsibility will the great work of the Missionary Centenary be "Carried On."—Maud M. Turpin.

CENTENARY MOVEMENT SWEEPS SOUTHERN METHODISM

That the Centenary Movement was born at a time of a great world crisis has seemed to many of our leaders a most opportune coincidence. Not "in spite of the war," but "because of the war, "has come to be an all-sufficient reason not only for maintaining all lines of missionary work now in force but for enlargement as well. "The World Safe for Democracy and Democracy Safe for the World," has become a slogan.

With this end in view and believing that the movement will serve the enlarged needs of the nations of the earth at the close of the war, the World Program was launched—a program which has for is underlying principles the release of the prayer power of the Church and the acknowledgement of God's ownership. No undertaking is too big for a Church that attempts the task in the spirit of prayer and strong in the faith that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof."

It is a significant fact that as the Centenary Movement grows and the people become more accustomed to the vastness of the program, their interest in national affairs increases, they are more responsive to the many and varied calls which come day by day. They are not afraid to undertake big things, to give generously to the Red Cross, to buy to the limit of War Stamps and Liberty Bonds. Lifted out of self and touched by the suffering of a warring world, they have come to realize that upon the Christian citizenship rests the future peace and security of the world.

The Annual Conferences of Southern Methodism are featuring "Centenary Day" and giving the movement their heartiest endorsement. In fact "Centenary Day" in the Conferences has come to be "the day" of the session, and the enthusiasm with which these bodies accept their share in the great drive is most gratifying.

NEW MEXICO CONFERENCE ADOPTS MODERN METHODS IN DOING LORD'S BUSINESS.

Realizing the value of organization in putting across any enterprise, one of the first actions taken by the New Mexico Conference was the organization of the New Mexico Conference Centenary Commission, with Dr. P. R. Knickerbocker as Chairman and Mrs. J. J. Ayers as Secretary. A further organization by districts puts this wide-awake Conference on record as employing modern methods in doing the Master's business.

The second day of the Conference was devoted to the Missionary Centenary. Team No. 1 had charge of the program which was carried out in full. The Conference enthusiastically accepted their apportionment and it is safe to say will not fall short of their responsibility for their share in the World Program.

OLD JERUSALEM CONFERENCE SIGNS UP FOR CENTENARY.

The Tennessee Conference met at Lebanon, Tenn., with Bishop James Atkins in the chair. The business of the Missionary Centenary claimed the second day. Dr. W. W. Pinson gave a general historical sketch of the Centenary Movement; Dr. G. B. Winton presented the needs of the Latin lands, giving a survey of Mexico, South America, and Cuba. Dr. W. G. Cram, Missionary to Korea, spoke for the Orient, telling of the task in China, Japan and Korea. Dr. C. G. Hounshell, Educational Secretary, emphasized Intercession, while Dr. J. J. Stowe, Stewardship Secretary for the Centenary, discussed Christian Stewardship. J. E. Edgerton, Conference lay leader, made a short, but stirring, speech, pledging the laymen of the Conference to the Movement. At night Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, of the Woman's Missionary Council, gave the stereopticon lecture and talked on the needs of the various mission fields; and Bishop Atkins delivered an able address on the purpose and scope of the Centenary.

Dr. W. B. Beauchamp presented organization plans for the Conference, districts and charges. The Centenary Commission was made up of the strongest men in the Conference, both ministers and laymen. Rev. W. B. Ricks was elected Conference Missionary Secretary to give all his time to the work during the Centenary period. The district commission was also appointed and dates and places announced for the group meetings to be held in the various districts. This "Old Jerusalem" Conference is always to the front in all movements for the advancement of Christ's kingdom and the interest in the Centenary was especially deep. The acceptance of the allotment was unanimously voted and the membership look forward with confidence to going over the top in the five-year drive.

OUR MISSIONARY CENTENARY IN STEP WITH HIM.

It is always timely to obey our Lord's great Commission, but never did it seem more urgent than now when we are challenged to show what remedy Christianity has for a world at war. It shows the great hold which Christianity has on human thought when by common consent Christ is our only hope. One hundred years ago, in that dark period of human history when the Reign of Terror filled the world with despair, Christianity alone responded to the world's crisis and in heroic endeavors gave birth to the great missionary societies which have so signally blessed all lands. Blot out those years of missionary zeal and imagine a world now without God and without hope. Christianity has put heart into the nations and will do it again. It is man's extremity that proves God's opportunity. Happy are we to know the way God is moving and to keep step with Him.

GLORIOUS TIDINGS FROM GOLDEN GATE.

Southern Methodist Woman Gives $37,000 to Centenary.

In addition to the regular members of the Centenary team which visited the Pacific Conference at its recent session in San Francisco, Dr. C. D. Bulla and Dr. R. H. Bennett made addresses on "Centenary Day." Bishops Leonard and Warne of the M. E. Church, the latter of India, were present part of the day and made short talks which were heard with great interest.

At the close of the night session, after the stereopticon lecture, the Conference Board of Missions made a report, calling the Church to rally around the Centenary standard and pledging the Conference to raise their apportionment. The report was unanimously adopted.

A feature of unusual interest came in connection with this report. Mrs. M. L. Hargrove announced that a lady living in the bounds of this Conference pledges $37,000 to the Centenary Movement, to be paid during the five years, $20,000 being for work in Russia, $10,000 for social settlement work in Korea, and $7,000 toward building a Wesley House in one of our large western cities. The Conference rose and gave the Chautauqua salute!

POSTPONEMENT, CHANGE OF PLACE, NOR SPANISH "FLU" THWART CENTENARY MOVEMENT IN WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Nowhere has the Missionary Centenary received a more cordial reception than in the West Texas Conference, and this too in spite of the most unfavorable circumstances. Owing to the nation-wide influenza epidemic, the session was limited to two days and was held in San Antonio outside the city limits. Thursday morning was given to the Centenary, the program being presented by Bishop Ainsworth, Rev. J. L. Neill and Rev. F. S. Onderdonk. Rev. W. M. Rader, one of the foremost men of the Conference, was elected Missionary Secretary. Not only did the Conference accept their allotment, but they added to it, voting $15,000 additional!

CENTENARY GERM WINS OVER INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC IN LOS ANGELES CONFERENCE.

On account of the influenza epidemic, the Los Angeles Conference was prevented from meeting in San Diego and held its annual session in Santa Ana, about thirty miles from Los Angeles. On account of the change in place the attendance was small. The spirit of the meeting was fine, however, and the membership was completely inoculated with the Centenary idea. Although the Conference is itself largely home mission territory, the Centenary allotment was accepted and the sentiment of the Conference points to a full discharge of its Centenary privilege.

Owing to restrictions by the Board of Health, it was impossible to hold any large public gatherings, but several private meetings were held, and the people instructed in the World Program. The Missionary Centenary means much, not only to the people of the Los Angeles Conference, but its influence is felt along the entire Pacific coast.

DOUBLES ITS ALLOTMENT.

Action Taken by the Southwest Texas Conference.

Several things connected with the annual meeting of the Southwest Texas Conference made the recent session at New Fountain, Texas, a peculiarly interesting occasion. In the first place, this Conference is composed almost entirely of foreign-speaking people, and while the Centenary program was given in English, many of the messages were repeated to the people through an interpreter.

Another noteworthy thing about this body is that while it is one of our smallest and weakest Conferences, the people make the largest per capita gifts to missions of any Conference in the Connection. "Did they accept their allotment?" They did not. "Why?" Because, to use their own words, they were ashamed of it. They said it was a great deal smaller than they ought to assume and so they doubled it!

Another evidence of the responsiveness of these people of Southwest Texas and a convincing argument in favor of the Centenary of Missions, is the fact that Miss Mabel Howell, of the Centenary team, organized a Woman's Missionary Society of twenty-one members in the Church where the meetings were held!

NOT WORK BUT WORRY.

It is not the work but the worry,
That makes the world grow old;
That numbers the years of its children
Ere half their story is told;
That weakens their faith in heaven
And the wisdom of God's great plan.
Ah! 'tis not the work, but the worry,
That breaks the heart of man!

KATIE'S AIRPLANE.

"I wish I had an airplane," said six-year-old Katie, with a sigh.

Katie and her brothers were spending the summer at Uncle Daniel's farm. Her brothers and cousins were all older, and though they were very kind to Katie, sometimes she was a little lonesome at being the only little girl among them. The boys' thoughts were so full of airplanes! They talked about airplanes, they drew pictures of them, they made models of them, they talked of what they should do when old enough to "fly" in airplanes, and each hoped for a chance to go up in one while he was still a boy.

That morning the boys were all on the side piazza, whittling and sawing and nailing, trying to make a small machine that would fly.

Uncle Daniel, passing through the sitting-room, heard Katie wishing.

"Come out with me," he said, "I'll put you on an airplane."

Katie, with her doll in her arms, ran out after her uncle.

"This will take you up in the air."

"Why, Uncle Daniel, this is only just the swing."

"Well, can't you make believe? You make believe that doll is a baby."

"This is my 'Vangeline," said Katie, hugging her doll. Then she understood, and smiling, said gally, "Yes, I'll make b'lieve it's a really, truly airplane."

"I'll swing you in it five minutes every day. When you swing at other times it will be just a common swing, but for our five minutes it is to be an airplane, and when you come down you must tell us what you've seen, just as the soldiers do. Now then, one, two, three, here you go!"

Up went the swing, almost to the tree-top, back and forward again, many times, with Katie pleased and laughing.

"What did you see?" asked Uncle Daniel when the play stopped.

"I saw a teenie, weenie, cunning squirrel," said Katie. "He had bright eyes."

The next day she said, "I saw blue flowers by the stone wall, an' now I'm going to get 'em."

But the third day, as soon as the swing was high, Katie began to scream:

"Uncle Dan'l, Uncle Dan'l, s-t-o-p!"

"Why, what's the matter, child?" asked her uncle as he stopped the swing near the ground.

"You can't see from here, Uncle Dan'l, but Snowflake's broke the bars th' other side o' the pasture, an' she's go!"—

But Uncle Daniel had gone, running.

Snowflake was the finest cow on the farm. At the foot of the slope beyond the pasture was the railroad.

Half an hour later Uncle Daniel came back. He waved his hand to Katie as he went into the house. In a few minutes he came out again and Aunt Lucy was with him. In her hand she had a small bow of red, white, and blue ribbon.

"Hurrah, little aviator!" said Uncle Daniel. "You've done your bit, and we'll decorate you. I was just in time. There was a train coming. Snowflake was frightened and was heading right for the track. We always set carefully apart the milk Snowflake gives us, and the money that it brings we save for the Red Cross. We call her our Red Cross cow. So you see you saved her to keep on giving milk to help our brave soldier boys."

"I like my airplane," said Katie, happily.—Sophia T. Newman, in Zion's Herald.

HOW A SPIDER FAMILY GOT ITS NAME.

The spiders that spin and weave the wonderful cobwebs that we have seen so many times in the early mornings strewn over the grass-plats and sparkling with the tiny dew drops, all belong to the great family of Arachnida. There is a pretty fable which tells us how this family name originated.

Arachne was a maiden who took great delight in spinning and weaving. It is said that she became so skilful in embroidering and wove such beautiful patterns that even the nymphs came from the groves and fountains and gathered around her to admire her work. Soon they began to whisper to each other that it must have been none other than Athena herself, the goddess of art and industry, who had taught Arachne her great skill. But the maiden had grown so vain over her accomplishments that she not only denied having been taught by Athena but boldly challenged the goddess to a trial of skill. "If I am beaten," said she, "I will pay the penalty."

Athena accepted the challenge and the webs were woven. Arachne's web was of wondrous beauty. Some said, however, that when she saw Athena's web she knew that she was beaten; that she wept bitterly and in her despair went and hanged herself. Others claimed that her work was so perfect that Athena, in her rage at being unable to find any blemish in it, tore it to pieces.

Afterwards, Athena was so moved by pity for her vain but skilful opponent that she transformed her into a spider. And so to-day Arachne and her descendants, the Arachnidae, still retain that marvelous skill in spinning and weaving those delicate, filmy patterns that no human hands can come anywhere near equaling.—Our Dumb Animals.

THE ORIGINAL FINGER BOWL.

Queen Elizabeth never ate with a fork. In the inventory of her possessions in British Museum, London, are listed two forks, one of which was a gift to her from the King of Italy, and was made of ivory with little bells around the handle. Even kings and queens with all their glory ate with knives, spoons, and fingers; hence the need for and rise of finger bowls. The fingers of royalty became as greasy as those of other people, and were washed by holding them over a big basin, held by an attendant, who was accompanied by another bearing the ewer and fine linen cloth. That basin was the original finger bowl.—Onward.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR SERVICE.

We need take up this prayer and make it our own, "laboring fervently" until it be fulfilled in us. Only such a glowing revelation of God's purpose in our salvation can check the world's pretensions and uplift us from our dullness and gloom. We want such visions of His power to inspire our hope, to fire our desire and rouse us to effort. We cannot afford to live without looking out upon the height and depth, the length and breadth of our possibilities in Christ. Think how it would rebuke the fever of our worldliness, how it would gather to a sustained intensity our pursuit of holiness, how it would lead us into a spiritual nobility and greatness if we lived farther up the mount of God in view of the revelation that the Holy Spirit would make to us. Ah, what opportunities for blessing and for service lie about us if we had but the eyes to see them!—Mark Guy Pearse.

CHRIST THE SUFFICIENT.

Carry your inadequate resources to Christ. In His hands they become sufficient. He multiplies them. He gives wisdom, strength, all that fits for the task to which He calls us. Bring your little faith to Him, He will increase it. Bring your feeble love to Him and ask Him to kindle it from the pure flame of His own, and He will make your heart burn within you. Bring your partial understanding of His will and way to Him, and He will be to you wisdom. Bring all the poverty of your natures, all the insufficiency of religious character, all the inadequacy of your poor work to your Lord. Feel it all. Let the conviction of your nothingness sink into your soul. Then wait before Him in simple faith, in lowly obedience, and power will come to you equal to your desire and to your duties, and He will put His spirit upon you, and will anoint you to proclaim liberty to the captives and to give bread to all the hungry. "Who is sufficient for these things," must ever precede and will ever be followed by "our sufficiency is of God."—Alexander Maclaren.

THE INNER LIFE.

We should know ourselves better than the world knows us. The world has to form its opinion of us largely by what it can see of our actions; and that opinion is based upon an interpretation of our actions by a world that is not especially predisposed to look beneath them, or beyond them, to the motives from which they spring. As a consequence, our motives are often misinterpreted.

But it is not so with the man himself. No matter what his actions may be, he knows in his heart what his intentions were. It is the motive that gives moral value to an act—not the act itself. That is why God alone is competent to judge a man's life—he looks on the heart.

We can look into our own hearts, and we ought to do it frequently. We do not advocate a morbid introspection that unsettles faith and destroys spiritual peace, but a sane self-examination that will enable us to know from day to day just where we stand in the sight of God. It is the inner life that we need to watch. If our motives are pure, our actions will generally be of such kind as to commend us to our fellow-men because there will be a consistency about them that will offset an occasional misunderstanding. But best of all, we shall know that we have the approval of him whose judgment alone is infallible. Let us begin the day with a renewed consecration to God, and let us end it with a sure trust in his mercy. Keep the inner life pure.

WE APPRECIATE THIS.

We take the liberty of printing a letter that Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, sent to all the preachers in his district. Other presiding elders are likewise taking an active interest in the welfare of the Advocate in this time of emergency. We thank them all for helping us so efficiently. The pastors, too, are realizing the need of immediate action. The letter is as follows:

"Dear Brother: It is not necessary for me to emphasize the importance of our Conference organ, but I do write you to insist that you heed the appeal of the Manager at this time as to the renewal of all those who are in arrears. Under the Government order, more than two thousand dollars' worth of subscriptions will have to be dropped from the roll next month unless the renewals are sent in at once. These are not 'dead-heads,' but include some of our best people who have not been in the habit of paying in advance. But they must go if the renewal is not forthcoming. Then, if those names are cut off, the advertising space which makes the running of the paper possible will proportionately decline in value.

"Hoping that you will see that all subscriptions in your charge are promptly renewed, and a number of new subscribers added to the list, I am,

Yours cordially,

V. C. CURTITS, P. E."

Greenville, Miss., Oct. 21.

A TEST OF THE ORGANIZATION.

After several weeks' intermission on account of the epidemic of influenza, our churches are beginning to hold their regular services again. Necessarily there has been considerable interruption in the plans that had been formulated for closing up the year's activities in order to be ready for Conference, but there is still time to have everything in readiness for the annual gathering. The time is so short, however, that the organization of every local congregation will be put to a severe test of its efficiency. If our entire membership will rally promptly and loyally to the calls our pastors and official boards are making now, much of what was lost by the interruption to our services will be regained, and an especially creditable showing will be made of the year's work.

We naturally expect good reports from a strong organization under normal conditions; it is when conditions are abnormal that the test comes. We hope every Methodist congregation in Louisiana and Mississippi will come through this test with flying colors and send to the Annual Conferences reports that will reflect their intense zeal and earnestness.

MERELY A SUGGESTION.

Conference-time is not far off. Most of our churches have had a pretty hard time in getting ready for it. Our people have been called upon to contribute to a great many good causes, and they have responded liberally, as they ought to have done. Many of them have had sickness in their families, and some of them have had deaths. The financial demands have been heavy and insistent.

But think of the preacher. He has worked a whole year for probably a good deal less than he could have made by engaging in manual labor. He has preached the Word, visited the sick, buried the dead, married the living, comforted the sorrowing, helped the unfortunate—done the numberless things that people need to have done for them by one who knows God and loves his fellowman. And he has done them gladly and joyously.

Now the time is coming that brings the great event in the Methodist preacher's life—Conference. He looks forward to it throughout the year. It is the occasion when he meets his friends who have labored with him in the extension of the Kingdom; when he has the opportunity of hearing the great messages from great men, that inspire and strengthen him; when he comes into contact with influences and forces that make a better man and a better preacher of him; and it is the time when he may receive from the constituted authorities of the Church an assignment to a new field of labor. It is a great occasion.

And he ought to be there—he will be there. It is his duty to be present unless providentially hindered, and he is going to do his duty. It may mean a great financial hardship for him to go—it will be a hardship to a good many of them. "Getting ready for Conference!" A happy thought it is, but one that is going to bring worry to many a preacher's home. That suit of clothes, money for travelling expenses, ample supplies for the family, while he is away—where are they all to come from?

Now for the suggestion: Not as an act of charity—God forbid that it should be so!—but as a big-hearted, generous recognition of that preacher's service to you and to your community, and as an expression of your good-will, and to give point to your hope that he will enjoy the Conference sessions, after you have paid his salary in full, give him enough additional to relieve his worry about the extra expenses involved in that trip to Clarksdale, or McComb, or New Orleans, as the case may be. Try it and see how many people will be made happy.

THE UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN.

On next Monday, November 11, the campaign to raise $170,500,000 for general welfare work among the enlisted men of the United States will begin. There are seven organizations officially recognized by the Government engaged in this work, and the money raised in the campaign is to be divided among them. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. are to receive 67.45 per cent of the whole amount.

The work represented by all these organizations is of the utmost importance in maintaining the morale of our American troops, and we sincerely trust all our people will contribute generously to the fund for carrying it on. We must remember that the money we give is not so much for any particular organization as it is for the men who are giving their all for a sacred cause.

The prospect of an early peace should not cause any of us to hesitate to give liberally. In fact, Dr. John R. Mott, the Director-General of the campaign, has said that the needs of the men will be, if possible, more urgent during the period of demobilization than during active service. And if all is done that should be done, the amount fixed upon when the campaign was planned will have to be largely increased. The Fourth Liberty Loan was largely over-subscribed; there is urgent need that this fund should be largely over-subscribed also. The campaign will last just one week. Let us enter into it actively and enthusiastically that our enlisted men may know that we are solidly behind them in this great fight.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS.

It is possible for us to be too optimistic, but all indications seem to point to an early cessation of hostilities between Germany and the Allies. One by one, Germany's associates in the war have been forced to withdraw from the conflict. Austria has just signed an armistice, the terms of which amount practically to unconditional surrender. Germany's armies have met defeat after defeat at the hands of the Allies. Internal dissensions have accentuated the critical situation on the battle-front. In answer to Germany's appeal for an armistice, the Allies have prepared terms which Germany will have to accept, unless she wants to prolong her own sufferings, with total defeat inevitable in the end. A great day is dawning for the world. Peace is coming—a peace that is based upon a demonstration of the fact that might does not make right. The "mighty" are fallen; righteousness is exalted; and the world is still a fit place in which to live. Our faith is strengthened and our hope is made sure.

CABLEGRAM FROM BISHOP LAMBUTH.

Dr. E. O. Watson has just received the following cablegram from Bishop Lambuth, sent from London: "Our boys are fighting desperately. Victory is certain. Our greatest work is ahead. We need six hundred more chaplains, and more prayer." This inspiring message from this great Christian leader will stir our people to meet the demands that are being made upon us in these eventful times. We must not fail to pray, and to work while we pray.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

An exchange states that there are 18,818 local preachers in the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The total sales in the United States through September for War Savings Stamps and Thrift Stamps amounted to $772,713,977, or $7.34 per capita.

Dr. E. K. Hardin, pastor of Central Church, Asheville, N. C., died recently of pneumonia following influenza. He was for four years pastor of our Mt. Vernon Church, Washington.

We regret to learn that Rev. S. C. Moody, of the Oloh charge, Mississippi Conference, has been hindered in his work on account of sickness. We trust he has been fully restored to health.

Rev. J. W. Hall, of Jonesboro, Ark., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says that the paper has been in his family 60 years—since he was a boy. He still reads it with interest.

American aviators are now delivering Red Cross supplies to soldiers in the front lines, who, on account of their pursuit of the fleeing Germans, have out-distanced the army supply wagons.

November 20 is the last day on which Christmas packages may be sent to our men in France. All packages intended for them should be deposited with the nearest Red Cross chapter by that time.

Mr. W. L. Tucker, of Tucker, La., an enthusiastic Methodist laymen, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office on Wednesday of last week. He is deeply interested in all the work of the Church.

Rev. C. Wesley Baley, of Strongs, Miss., in renewing his mother's subscription to the Advocate, says she is in her seventy-sixth year, and she enjoys reading her Church paper. Blessings upon her!

Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux, our pastor at Epworth Church, this city, has received his commission as a chaplain in the army. He reported at Camp Beauregard, La., on November 1, for assignment to duty.

Brother R. W. Shell, of Houston, Miss., is one of the old-time subscribers to the Advocate. In extending his subscription two years, he says he expects to take it as long as he lives. May that be many years!

Rev. W. B. Alsworth, of the Meadville and Bude charge, Mississippi Conference, reports that everything is moving along well on his work. He serves a fine people, and he is expecting to have a good report for Conference.

The Dallas News says that one year without whiskey has reduced crime 50 per cent in Dallas County, according to court records. Texas is not different from any other State. Prohibition reduces crime everywhere.

Rev. T. J. Halfacre, of Artesia, Miss., is a happy preacher—or he ought to be. He writes that he has all his collections in full, and he is ready for Conference. He says his presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Duren, is doing a great work.

Dr. A. J. Weeks has succeeded Dr. W. D. Bradfield as editor of the Texas Christian Advocate. Dr. Bradfield returns to the pastorate in the North Texas Conference. Dr. Weeks makes a fine beginning in the issue of October 31.

We saw a statement recently to the effect that the authorities of the University of Montevideo have issued an order that the Bible must be given a place in the program of studies. This is perhaps the leading university of South America.

The Sunday school membership of the Methodist Church in Japan was 38,000 in 1917, while the Church membership was 21,000. Bishop Hiraiwa of Japan, who has recently been visiting America, is an enthusiastic Sunday school worker.

The Gulf Division of the American Red Cross needs immediately, eighty-two women and fifty-three men for overseas service. Those who desire to engage in this work should write to the Bureau of Personnel, 223 Postoffice Building, New Orleans.

The extension of a credit of $9,000,000 to Belgium recently makes the total advances of the United States to that country $80,020,000. The total amount advanced to date to all our associates in the war against Germany is $7,529,476,000.

A note from Rev. N. E. Joyner, of Lake Charles, La., says that the "flu" has interfered seriously with church work in that city. We doubt not, however, that under his energetic leadership our church there will send up a good report to Conference.

Dr. S. A. Neblett, of the Missionary Centenary Team No. 1, honored the Adovcate office with a call recently. He was returning to Nashville, Tenn., after visits to our Conferences in the West. He reported growing interest in the Centenary movement.

Mrs. Felix R. Hill, the widow of the late Dr. Felix R. Hill of the Louisiana Conference, but known throughout the Church, is now making her home in Louisville, Ky. She reads the Advocate and takes a deep interest in the affairs of the Louisiana Conference.

The Publishing Commission of the Central Methodist, the official organ of the Louisville and the Kentucky Conferences, has begun a campaign for five thousand new subscribers during November and December. We hope the desired number will be secured—and more.

Once in awhile we receive communications for publication which are unsigned. This is especially true in the case of obituaries. We cannot violate a long-standing rule not to publish anonymous contributions. This will explain why some contributions have not appeared in our columns.

The Methodist Preachers' Association of New York City has appointed a committee to consider the feasibility of planning a fitting celebration of the remarkable triumph of the allied forces under General Allenby in the Holy Land. The Federal Council of the Churches has approved the idea.

Rev. H. M. Young, of Eupora, Miss., states that the epidemic has interfered with his work in getting ready for Conference, but he hopes to be able to make a good report. All the subscribers to the Advocate on his charge have renewed their subscriptions to date. That is a fine report in itself.

Dr. William Briggs, for forty-two years the Book Steward of the Canadian Methodist Church, was retired at the recent session of the Canadian General Conference on account of the age limit—seventy years. He had made a notable record in his office. He was given an annual pension of $2000.

Milton, the manly eighteen-year-old son of the Manager of the Advocate, who has been an efficient part of the force for getting out the paper each week, has responded to the call of his country by voluntarily enlisting in the Coast Artillery. He is at present statloned at Jackson Barracks, this city. Milton will make a fine soldier.

We are glad to learn from Dr. A. F. Watkins, President or Millsaps College, that the college had an unusually fine opening. The Students' Army Training Corps is made up of a fine lot of men, and there is a fine body of Freshmen, too young to enter the S. A. T. C. The outlook is good for one of the best sessions in the history of the college.

Dr. J. E. Godbey, who has been editorial director of the St. Louis Christian Advocate for the past year, having been called to that position to assist Dr. Arthur Mather, the acting editor, who was overloaded with work, has now given up that work. Dr. Godbey has reached his three score years and ten. He has been a great servant of the Church.

Mrs. W. C. Lester, the widow of the lamented Rev. W. C. Lester of the North Mississippi Conference, is anxious to secure a copy of the Advocate of the issue of August 15. Unfortunately, the office supply has been exhausted. If any of our readers can send her a copy, she will appreciate it greatly. Her address is 308 Adele Avenue, Jackson, Miss.

Rev. D. H. Crowson, of the Potts Camp charge, North Mississippi Conference, writes that in spite of the war, the "flu" and the short crops in his section, he is working for collections in full. He serves a good people. The pastor's salary was increased over that of last year, and it will be more than paid. There have been some good revivals on the charge.

Several of the Protestant denominations having work, or related work, in France and Belgium, have under consideration common plans for the strengthening of the Protestant churches in France and for a great evangelical movement in that country and Belgium. Dr. W. W. Pinson is the representative of our Church on the committee for working out the plans.

Mr. W. T. Reeves, district lay leader of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, recently had printed and distributed at his own expense a ringing appeal to the laymen of his district to see to it that pastors' salaries are paid in full, and that an earnest effort be made to increase the salaries at least 25 per cent over those of 1917. We sincerely trust his appeal will bring results.

The members of the North Texas Conference, which meets at Dallas this year, will pay their way. The committee of arrangements has secured very favorable hotel rates. This was done on account of the unusual conditions, which made it difficult to secure the usual entertainment in homes. The Western North Carolina Conference will be entertained on the "Harvard plan"—lodging and breakfast being provided for the guests.

A writer in the Christian Advocate (New York) states that a careful examination of the statistics reveals the fact that after the Annual Conferences each year, 32 per cent of the Methodist Episcopal churches in the larger cities of the United States have new ministers, 58 per cent have either new ministers or preachers who have been with them but one year, 73 per cent have either new ministers or men who have been on the work two years or less, 82 per cent have ministers who have not completed more than three years of service, 90 per cent are served by men who have been but four years or less at their stations, while the remaining 10 per cent of the city churches have pastors who have been with them for at least five years or more. There is no time limit in the M. E. Church.

INACCURATE STATISTICS.

By Rev. P. H. Fontaine.

In a recent controversy as to the relative numbers of the Methodist and Baptist Churches, reference was made to inaccurate statistics as having quite a part in the question. This leads me to write in regard to the statistics of the Louisiana Conference.

I have for several years agitated this matter and shall continue to do so as long as necessary.

In a recent study of the statistics for 1917, I find that there were 2862 additions on profession of faith and 3109 by certificate and otherwise; removals by death and otherwise were 3947, which should show a gain of 2024 rather than 947 as given in the "Annual," and a total present membership of 40,964 rather than 39,914 as given in the "Annual."

This charge, Bernice, shows 22 less than it should be; Homer 18 less, Arcadia 9 less and Ruston 3 more.

I cannot verify the circuits as there may have been changes that I know nothing of.

Let us have accurate statistics.

A POINTED PARAGRAPH.

Our business in the world is to help make it better. We are here, not for the purpose of making a living, but of making a life. Each of us has only one life to live, one record to make, one character to build, one life for service. A good motto for us to go by is this: "Do the best you can with what you have, where you are, for Jesus Christ to-day." We should seek to make our influence count only for good, but upon as many other lives as possible. Exchange.

NOTICE, LOUISIANA PREACHERS!

I am instructed to announce that the Conference reports for this year will be made out in the old form, using the same report blanks like last year. The new report forms, which will be greatly simplified, will not be used until next year. Please take notice and have your reports ready as early as possible in the session of the Conference.

Miss IDA LUCILLE NELSON, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Nelson, was born at Arizona, La., on June 19, 1892, and died on October 20, 1918, with pneumonia, following influenza. Several years ago the Nelson family moved to Haughton, La., where Miss Ida taught school for some time. Upon leaving the schoolroom, she became a companion to her mother, who is an invalid. She joined the Methodist Church while quite young.

Her life was one of service and sacrifice. She was one who would give the sweets and take the bitter. In the schoolroom she was loved and honored for the pure and noble life she lived; in the social circle she always had a smile for everyone; in the home she was a ray of sunlight to the inmates and visitors; and in the church she was numbered with the saints of God.

It is true she has gone from us, but our minds and hearts are satisfied as to her reward, because it is "the treasure of everlasting joy."

J. L. EVANS.

Haughton, La., Oct. 24, 1918.

Sister PRICILLA CAGE BREWER was born on June 15, 1836, in Carroll County, Mississippi. After a few months' illness she departed this life in triumph on October 7, 1918, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. T. Clark, Black Hawk, Miss. She was the wife of William White Brewer, who preceded her to the better world nineteen years ago. To this union were born fourteen children, five of whom survive her, as follows: W. H. Brewer, Mrs. C. T. Clark, and Mrs. J. K. Turner of Black Hawk, Miss., Mrs. Tankie Young, Eupora, Miss., and Dr. W. W. Brewer, of Columbus, Miss. She was converted early in life and joined the M. E. Church, South, of which she lived a consistent member until her death. Her home was the preachers' home. It was the writer's privilege to visit her in her latter days and read God's Word and pray with her. In speaking of her Lord coming for her, she always expressed a willingness to go and asked that nothing be given her to prolong her days here upon earth. Sister Brewer was a gentle woman, cultured in mind and heart. Her judgment was sound, her piety uniform, her love without dissimulation. She was well grounded in the Word of God and perfectly familiar with the doctrine of the Church. She was an efficient helper to those who came in contact with her.

After funeral services conducted by her pastor, we laid her frail body in the tomb. Now let me say, dear children, as mother is gone, cling close to mother's God; then life will be bright with the anticipation of the fact that after awhile, if true to Him here, we may all be at home with Him where tears never dim our eyes and sorrow is unknown. Her pastor,

M. E. SCOTT.

DOROTHY SUE DUNCAN, youngest daughter of our beloved pastor and wife, Rev. W. N. Duncan and Carrie Sue Duncan, was born on June 7, 1911, and passed from earth to heaven in the Methodist parsonage, Winona, Miss., on Monday evening, October 7, 1918, at 7:55 o'clock, being seven years and four months old at the time of her leaving us.

During little Dorothy Sue's life in Winona she was a much loved member of the Beginners' Department of the Methodist Sunday school. By her winning ways, bright smile and sweet little voice in song, she endeared herself to teachers and pupils alike. In the home she was a ray of sunshine, a fragile flower, lent to earth to blossom for awhile and then transferred to fairer fields.

Dorothy Sue was especially attracted by stories of the Savior; her love for this tender Shepherd twice prompted her to ask for membership in the Church, and with a class of children, she was received by her father into the communion of her father's and mother's Church during the Sunday school hour, August 4, of this year.

This lovely child was gifted in song; the night before she left us, she sang in a hushed little voice, "Star Spangled Banner," dwelling on "Twilight's Last Gleaming," and we are assured that with dear little Dorothy Sue, "Twilight's Last Gleaming" was but an ushering of her spirit into the loved presence of that kind Friend of little children, where "Their angels do always behold the face of the Father."

The teachers and pupils of the Beginners' Department can not but grieve at the passing away of one so young and so fair, and we commend her sorrowing loved ones to the tender mercies of our Heavenly Father.

HER TEACHER.

The Eden community is shocked and grieved over the death of one of its most useful and beloved women, Mrs. J. H. STRICKLAND, who passed up into the Life Eternal on Wednesday night of last week. Mrs. Strickland was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Hall, of the old Free Run neighborhood. She was born on December 24, 1879, and was one of three children left orphans when only a few years of age. She was reared by Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Edwards of Thornton, an uncle and aunt, who proved themselves a loving father and mother to her and who are broken in her passing away. She was happily married to Mr. J. H. Strickland in 1902, who, with four little boys, is left to mourn her death and miss her watchful ministrations. She joined the Church in 1907, since which time she has grown steadily in grace until, it seemed, she had almost reached the perfection of the saints. In the death of this good woman the community has lost one of its kindest friends and loving neighbors. She was always foremost in all good works. She was the secretary of the Sunday school, a teacher in the same, and was recording secretary of the Missionary Society.

She was conscious up to the very moment of dissolution, her last words being, "Father, if it be thy will;" then, "I have a crown of righteousness;" and, "Tell all my friends and loved ones good-bye, and tell them to live close to God."

Her loved ones do not grieve without hope. They know that in the Great Day they shall know her again. Upon this family circle her gentle influence "droppeth like the gentle dew from heaven" and into their hearts comes an unspeakable calm.

TWO WHO LOVED HER.

We reap what we sow; but nature has love over and above that justice and gives us shadow and blossom and fruit that spring from no planting of ours.—George Eliot.

Special terms will be made to the wife or child of a Methodist preacher.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. WAR WORK

American women nurses are installed eight miles in the rear of the fighting lines "over there." Right here at home many women should learn nursing to take care of the sick or, in emergencies, the wounded. You can learn a great deal by obtaining the Medical Adviser," a book of 1,000 pages, bound in cloth, containing chapters on First Aid, Bandaging, Anatomy, Hygiene, Sex Problems, Mother and Babe. 200 prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases; profusely illustrated by wood cuts and colored plates. Ask your druggist or send 50c. to Publisher, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

If a woman is nervous or has dizzy spells, suffers from awful pains at regular or irregular intervals she should turn to a tonic made up of herbs, and without alcohol, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Druggists sell it in liquid or tablets. Send 10c to the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial pkg. Then, for the liver and bowels nothing is so good as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

Spoke Plant, Ark.—"I have had displacement for 35 years; had fits occasionally and had stomach trouble until at times I would nearly die. I doctored with four or five of the best doctors in this part of the country but they did me no good so I took three bottles of Dr. Pierce's medicines, one of 'Favorite Prescription' and two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' also one vial of his 'Pleasant Pellets', and I praise God for giving men the knowledge to prepare such medicines as these are. I recommend Dr. Pierce's remedies to all suffering women for I think they are a godsend to suffering people. I am in better health than I have been in 35 years. If I had spent for these medicines what I spent with doctors, I would have been well years ago. I hope Dr. Pierce may live long to help suffering humanity. I can't praise his medicines enough."

THIS WEAK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not stop that, I could not get well. I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my husband wanted me to try it. I took it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTHLINE, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia Pa.

The majority of mothers nowadays overdo, there are so many demands upon their time and strength; the result is invariably a weakened, run-down, nervous condition with headaches, backache, irritability and depression—and soon more serious ailments develop. It is at such periods in life that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will restore a normal healthy condition, as it did to Mrs. Worthline.

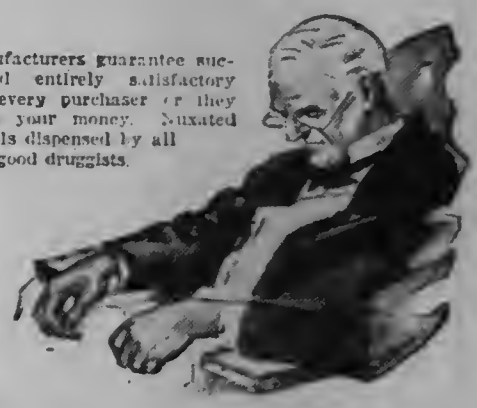
ARE YOU LOSING YOUR GRIP ON HEALTH

Your Blood May Be Starving for Want of Iron—Making You Weak, Nervous, Irritable and Exhausted.



Nuxated Iron, increases the Red Blood Corpuscles and builds up the strength, energy and endurance of delicate, run-down people in two weeks' time in many instances.

Thousands of men and women are impairing their constitutions, laying themselves open to illness and literally losing their grip on health, simply because their blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, says: "Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time." Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only twelve years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others.

The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists.

LAXATIVE for Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

MISS PAULINE GLASS. RANDLE, MISSIONARY TO KOREA.

Due to the loving forethought and excellent planning of the Conference Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. H. L. Baker, it was the privilege of the women of Louisiana to send out this new missionary with not just the necessary supplies for the seven years in Korea, but also with many real gifts that are dear to the heart of every girl—a wrist watch, dainty wearing apparel, traveling conveniences. A letter written en route from Miss Randle expresses her sincere appreciation and gratitude, as well as a desire to prove worthy of the trust reposed in her by the many women at home. Let us not forget to pray daily that this new missionary—alone among strangers—learning a new language, undertaking a new work, may be helped, comforted and strengthened.

WOMEN IN WAR WORK.

The following tribute to the loyalty and untiring service of the women of to-day, was received in a recent letter from France, from one of the "boys" who has been "over there" for the past year:

"When it is said that there cannot be anything half patriotic enough for you women folk to do compared with what the men in service are doing, I am obliged to disagree heartily. The American women constitute and are the real inspiration we now have to "cary on" in this war. They (the women) are doing every bit as much as the men, and, in many cases, more, and take it from me, no soldier in any army is being better cared for or done for by their women folk than is the American. And just between you and me, every last mother's son of this big American army not only knows it but appreciates the fact so much that they are all trying to prove truly worthy of such noble women folk and friends. When the history of this terrible war is written, the women of America will occupy no small space in it, or I miss my guess."

LAITY RIGHTS—BOTH SIDES OF THE QUESTION.

In reply to the request of the Conference Chairman on this matter, for an expression of opinion, many favorable comments have been received, some of which have appeared in this column. Knowing that there are always two sides to every question, the following and only unfavorable expression so far received by the editor of this column, is also given.

"Dear Madam: I have received the literature touching the question of giving the women of the Methodist Church 'Laity Rights.' Since you request an expression of my sentiments, without discussing the grounds of my opinion I will say that I am opposed to the movement, and regard it as only the ecclesiastical wing of the movement to give woman political 'rights.' As I believe in women, I am opposed to everything that is destructive of her feminine character.

"The women of our Southern Methodism have done a splendid work without assuming the burdens that will follow the so-called 'Laity Rights' regime; and they do not need the ballot to continue to achieve great things.

"My opinion will not disturb you, of course, since I have the honor to be in the minority. I am very happy to know that my own family, my wife and five splendid girls, all cling to the old Southern ideal of woman, and do not want the ballot. I'll match them against any six suffragists any one may name for efficiency in Church or State; but they find the ideal of the home ample to make them happy. If I am at Conference, I shall vote 'NO,' because I have the highest respect for women. Most respectfully yours,

S. A. STEEL."

THE WORKING WOMAN.

In 1910 there were 7,438,686 women in the United States, sixteen years old and over, that were engaged in some gainful occupation. In the Southern States there were 742,873 between sixteen and twenty inclusive, 1,582,828 between twenty-one and forty-four inclusive, 524,940 forty-five years old and over, a total of 2,850,641 women sixteen years old and over. Many of these women are engaged in domestic service in homes, some in clerical and stenographic work, some in stores, some in textile factories, tobacco factories, shoe factories, canneries, steam laundries and many in agriculture. Work is honorable and none of these occupations are discreditable to any person who engages in them. But the woman in gainful occupations raises questions as to the home, its stability, sweetness, restfulness, if the homemaker is absent almost all the day. What effect will grinding toil, extending eight, nine, ten, and even longer hours, have on motherhood? What does the race lose socially by woman standing or sitting all day directing a machine, or breathing gas fumes, or living in extreme humidity and heat, or working under intense nervous strain? Overworked women mean ill health, early breakdown, home endangered, society impoverished. Where is the social responsibility to see that the hours are not too long, the ventilation is abundant, that sanitation is provided, that nervous exhaustion is not allowed, that the conditions under which work are favorable to health, vigor of body, the development of the mind and soul, and the best interests of the family? The evils of the employment of women are perhaps not so great nor so numerous in the South as in the North, but they are many and too hurtful to be allowed to continue. The social conscience should be kept sensitive to these high interests of humanity.—The South of To-Day.

Vick's VapoRub Oversold
Due to Present Epidemic

Tremendous Demand Last Few Days Has Wiped Out Excess Stocks That We Had Estimated Would Last Until Next January. Last Week's Orders Called For One and Three Quarter Million Jars—To-day's Orders Alone Amount to 932,459 Jars.

Big Shipments Are En Route to Jobbers. Until These Arrive There May Be a Temporary Shortage, All Deals Postponed—Buy in Small Lots Only.

RETAILERS CAN GET IMMEDIATE SHIPMENTS DIRECT BY PARCEL POST.

This advertisement is written on Monday, October 21st. It is directed to the attention of all distributors of Vick's VapoRub, both wholesale and retail. In an emergency such as the present epidemic—our duty—and your duty—is to distribute VapoRub in the quickest possible manner to those sections stricken by Influenza. We, therefore, call your careful attention to the following:

DANGER OF SHORTAGE IF SUPPLY IS NOT CONSERVED.

On October 1st we had on hand, at our factory and in twenty warehouses scattered over the country, sufficient VapoRub to last us, we thought, until January 1st, allowing for a 50 per cent. increase over last year's sales, and not counting our daily output. This big excess stock had been accumulated during the summer months.

Then this epidemic of Spanish Influenza hit us—and in the last 10 days this stock has vanished. At first we thought this tremendous demand would last only a few days, but the orders have run:

Wed., Oct. 16	18,504 Doz.
Thur., Oct. 17	25,323 Doz.
Fri., Oct. 18	39,256 Doz.
Sat., Oct. 19	45,833 Doz.
Mon., Oct. 21	77,705 Doz.

Up to Saturday, October 19th, we have actually shipped for this month $430,284.10, or over two million jars of VapoRub.

THE PROBLEM NOW IS TO DISTRIBUTE VAPORUB QUICKLY.

Most of this tremendous quantity is still en route to the jobbers, but freight and express are both congested nowadays, and it may be some time before this supply reaches the jobbers. In the meantime, therefore, it is necessary that we distribute, as widely as possible, the stock that we are manufacturing daily, together with that now on the jobbers' and retailers' shelves, in order that it may get to the Influenza districts quickly. Our normal output is about 4,000 dozen per day. We are putting on a night shift, but it will be a little while before that is produeing.

WHAT WE ASK THE WHOLESALE DRUGGIST TO DO.

Last Saturday we notified all of our jobbers, by Special Delivery, as follows:

1. Deals and quantity shipments of all kinds are cancelled. Fill no quantity orders of any kind, whether taken by our salesmen or by your own. Sell in small lots only.

2. Order from us in as small quantities as possible. If you are out we will try to ship a limited amount by Parcel Post or express, and pay the charges ourselves.

3. In order to make distribution still quicker, we will ship direct to your retail customers quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30c size at any one shipment.

4. We are now out of the 60c size and will be for the next 10 days.

WHAT WE ASK THE RETAIL DRUGGIST TO DO.

Buy in as small quantities as possible. If you have any quantity orders, given the jobber's salesmen or given to our salesmen, don't bother about them—no need to write us—it is absolutely impossible to fill these orders at this time. If the jobbers in your territory are out of Vick's VapoRub, we will ship you by Parcel Post, prepaid, quantities not more than three (3) dozen 30c size in any one order. Naturally, we can't open accounts at this time, so your check or money order for this amount must accompany order. Don't write us stating to ship through your jobber, as we then have to wait until we write this jobber and get his O. K. If you wish the goods to come through your jobber, have him order them for you.

SNOWED UNDER WITH CORRESPONDENCE.

Our force has already been "shot to pieces"—twenty-four of our men are wearing Uncle Sam's khaki—and this recent rush has simply buried us. All our sales force has been called in to help in the office and factory. We just mention this so you won't hold it against us if your wires and letters aren't answered promptly.

SPECIAL BOOKLETS ON SPANISH INFLUENZA.

We will send, on request, to any retail druggist, 100 or more little booklets, just issued, on Spanish Influenza, giving the latest information about this disease—its history—the symptoms—the treatment, and particularly the use of Vick's VapoRub as an external application to supplement the physician's treatment.

NEW WAYS TO USE VAPORUB.

In addition to the usual method of using VapoRub—that is, applied over the throat and chest and covered with hot flannel cloths—our customers are writing us daily telling of their success in using VapoRub in other ways, particularly as a preventive. They melt a little in a spoon and inhale the vapors arising, or melt it in a benzoin steam kettle. Where the steam kettle is not available, VapoRub can be used in an ordinary tea-kettle. Fill the tea-kettle half full of boiling water, put in half teaspoon of VapoRub from time to time—keep the kettle just slowly boiling and inhale the steam arising.

According to a Bulletin just issued by the Public Health Service, Dr. Stiles recommends that the nose and throat be kept coated with some oily substance. For this purpose Vapo Rub is excellent—just put a little up in the nostrils from time to time and snuff well back into the air passages.

WAR AND MEDICINES

What Many of the Sick and Ailing Are Learning Nowadays.

So many doctors have gone to war, the services of comparatively few are available at home.

Good proprietary medicines are more widely used than ever, and more and more people are finding out how great their merit is.

At this time, when there is greater need of economy than ever before, Hood's Sarsaparilla, a thorough blood purifier, Peptiron, a real pepsin-nux-iron tonic, and Hood's Pills, a potent yet mild cathartic, are especially good. They are liked by all who use them.

These medicines are remarkably efficient, whether taken in conjunction or separately. Sold by all druggists.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instruction contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Sunday School

A TESTIMONY.

Dear Advocate: "A day or two ago I sent diplomas for two members of your class. Allow me to congratulate you and these students upon their successful completion of this part of the Standard Training Course."

The above is taken from a letter from Dr. John W. Shackford to me relative to our teacher-training class at Oak Ridge. I feel proud of the work being done in spite of hindrances on account of the epidemic.

Let me say this to the preachers: I am studying "The Worker and His Bible" that is in this course and it is just what the busy pastor needs. It is small, concise, yet essentially complete—the very thing a preacher needs to keep near him in the preparation of his sermons. J. A. WELLS.

Oak Ridge, Miss.

A GOOD TEACHER-TRAINING CLASS.

Dear Brother Carley: Realizing the good our Teacher-training Course is doing at Homewood, I wish to write a few lines for publication, hoping I may be of some help to the laymen throughout the Newton District.

Brother White organized a class here nearly two years ago. Nine have our diplomas, and are all hoping to finish. As superintendent, I have watched the improvement in our teachers that are taking the course. They are more efficient and more enthusiastic.

One of our greatest needs to-day in Sunday school work is trained teachers. Why not have them? Our Church has provided a special course for our preachers and I am glad it has provided one for our laymen. I would like to urge all preachers and superintendents in the bounds of the Newton District to get into touch with Brother White. As he has been appointed superintendent for the district, he can help you.

Yours for a good Sunday school,
W. M. TADLOCK.

PREACH THE WORD.

(1 Cor. 2:4).

By Rev. C. B. Powell.

There was a great motive in the mind and heart of the Apostle when he uttered these words, which means much to the man who deals out the precious message that is to save the world. The first entrance of the Christian religion into this stronghold of sin and vice (Corinth) is related in Acts 18. Paul was then on his way from Macedonia to Jerusalem. After passing some time at Athens, he came to Corinth, and was joined by Silas and Timothy. He preached the gospel first in that city to the Jews, but when they opposed and blasphemed, he renounced all fellowship with them and turned to the Greeks. However, some of the principal Jews believed. It seems that his fears and discouragements while engaged in this work were met by a special revelation, assuring him of the Lords' presence, and of his purpose to organize a church there. He continued his labors at Corinth more than a year and a half, and later they were followed up by the teaching of Apollos; so a flourishing church was formed, teachers were set over them, and the ordinances of Christ were observed. It seems, however, in the course of time that their peace was disturbed by certain teachers who desired to engraft on the doctrines of Christ the refinements of human philosophy. These teachers attempted to depreciate the Apostle, and the preaching of the Gospel in its purity, representing him, perhaps, as deficient in the graces of style and the arts of oratory. Under such teaching and preaching, the church was fast declining from its original faith and love. So this epistle was written from Ephesus after Paul had been absent for some time from the city, and had started on his third missionary journey, with the intention of revisiting the city, a purpose which he afterward carried out. It is my honest desire to state a few facts or truths, which I believe are worth while at this special time and occasion, basing my remarks on the above Scripture.

In my opinion, there was never a time in all the history of the Church when the leaders should be more consecrated than now. Certainly there are many things that hinder the progress of Christianity, and the development of our churches into a more spiritual and consecrated life. I believe, and am willing to confess, that one of the greatest hindrances that stand in the way of a more spiritual Church, can be charged to the preacher, the man who deals out the message to his people.

He must preach the Gospel; he must not fail to warn his people, in a sweet way, which perhaps will suit every one, but he must preach the Word with such power and wisdom from God that man and women will tremble, and say, "What must I do to be saved?" The Church is calling such men; God Himself is ready now to set his seal to such a message. Why? That the faith of his people may not stand in the wisdom and power of men, but in the power of God. The preaching of men must not be with enticing words of man's wisdom. Oh! that kind of preaching may and doubtless will suit a large majority and is pleasing to the ear, but it never has saved a soul from sin and it never will save a soul from sin.

Don't misunderstand me, and think that I am contending that we are not having the gospel preached at all; far from it. But I do believe we, as ministers of the gospel, do fail at this point. I know full well that the old-time religion and the preaching of the pure gospel are not popular at the present day. Again, I believe if the Church of God, the living God, is to receive more power and become a more spiritual Church, and in turn lead souls to Christ, we, as messengers of our Lord, must preach with such force as will stir the hearts of wicked men from sin, and lead them into a revelation which will bring them in fellowship with God.

I know that a well-prepared sermon on a great subject, well-delivered, is charming, and it has its place in preaching. But the cold-hearted Church, that stands off at a distance from the poor and sinful outcast, needs something more than a fascinating sermon. It is the duty and mission of the Church to hold firmly the credentials which her Lord held, that is, to give sight to the blind, heal the sick, cheer the fallen and touch the weak in spirit, and make them strong. I ask the question: Are our churches doing this? I fear not. Sin is not only in the world, but sin is in the Church; and it seems to me, as I understand it, that it is the duty of God's ministers to fight it back. I speak, to some extent, from a few years' experience on the question involved. I believe that every God-called man realizes his failures, but when he walks into the sacred stand to deliver God's message, and yet for some reason fails to declare the whole counsel, his own heart is troubled and he feels that he has not measured up to his whole duty. He may have preached with excelleney of speech, had a very commanding appearance, and a fine flow of language; these are all worth while and have their place. But if he fails to uncover sin to that congregation, he has failed to do his part. Then what am I contending for? A more spirit-filled ministry, a ministry of more power, and wisdom from God. Why? That the faith of our people may not stand in the wisdom of men but in the power of God.

In conclusion, I will say that it is my hope and earnest prayer, that our preachers will get busy during the great crisis of war and keep the home-fires burning, keep up the spiritual interest in our churches, fight sin with all power and strength that God will give us, and while the boys hold the line on the Western front, let us hold it here. They are holding for us; let us hold for them.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking, each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation.—Adv.

OUR ARMY SCRIPTURES IN EAST AFRICA—A LETTER FROM INHAMBANE.

Permit me to say that I am pleased that you approve of the use of the copies of the Sheetswa Scriptures that you sent us for Army purposes. Another incident came under my personal notice which I feel is worth reporting. It shows that the Sheetswa Scriptures that were thus distributed were not only used for the strengthening of the native Christians in the faith, but were also used in winning the heathen for Christ. I have just been making a tour of my district, requiring six weeks for the trip, holding quarterly conferences, examinations, meetings, etc. At one of the conferences held, among the many candidates for baptism was a very bright, intelligent, and capable young native man. When the questions were being asked him as to when, how, and where he was converted, I was greatly surprised and rejoiced to have him reply that he was converted in the army, in Portuguese Nyassaland, in this province. How did it come about? I asked him. He told me that when he went there he was a heathen, and guilty of all that a heathen African can be guilty of, but some of the Inhambane Christians held daily meetings in the Sheetswa language. Some one of the number was appointed the preacher and they would sing the Sheetswa hymns from our hymnal and then a chapter from the Sheetswa Scriptures would be read and an exposition given. At first this young man scoffed at it all, but he was taken sick, which was thought to be unto death, and those who cared for him the best were the Inhambane Christians, and they nursed him back to life. This made him more susceptible to the gospel message that the native self-appointed preacher gave each day, and this young scoffing heathen became a penitent and sought forgiveness and gave his heart to God and was thoroughly converted. He remained a few months longer in the army and was again taken seriously ill, and this time he was granted permission to return to his home. I had the honor of baptizing this young man and admitting him into the communion of our Church, and also administered to him the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper for the first time. Had the Bible Society not made possible for us these copies of the Sheetswa New Testament there would have been no services held, no Word of God read at the Nyassa front, and this young man would not have become a servant of the King. Doubtless he is just one example of many others that we will meet when the native boys return from the front.—From American Bible Society Publication.

"CASCARETS" WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP.

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—Take Cascarets To-night.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.—Adv.

160 Hens---1500 Eggs

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker write E. J. Reefer, poultry man, 6258 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar today or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

PEACE MEANS GREATER NEED FOR WELFARE WORK.

Dr. John R. Mott, director general of the United War Work Campaign which will be launched November 11, has issued a statement to the effect that the possibility of peace will greatly increase the need for welfare work among the soldiers at the front. All the campaign managers have been urged to work for an oversubscription of fifty per cent during the drive. The sum originally decided upon was $170,500,000 to be divided among the seven organizations named in the letter President Wilson wrote advising that one drive only be made for the support of their work.

"Our whole national organizations are united in the conviction that the war work activities of the seven organizations must continue to be pressed with full and increasing vigor and that whenever peace comes it will be followed by long period of demobilization" reads the message of Dr. Mott. "Military authorities say it will take fifteen months to bring the Canadian army home and eighteen months the Australian army."

"All military authorities with whom I have consulted insist it will require over twelve months after peace is declared to bring the American army home. This demobilization period will present the greatest need for our work and by far our greatest opportunity. Therefore there should be no hesitation or change in any of our campaign plans except that of enlarging them and redoubling our efforts to secure if possible fifty per cent over subscription."

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, E. P. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.—Adv.

WHAT DOES YOUR MONEY COST YOU?

Emerson said: "The worst thing about money is that it so often costs so much." If we would take this truth seriously to heart, we would not worry so much over the lack of money. Nor would we envy those who seem to have so much of it. It is not really difficult to see just how much their money has cost them. In many cases it has cost the loss of the sense of honor and self-respect; it has cost the loss of health; it has cost the lost of esteem of their neighbors; it has cost the sacrifice of their children by giving them over to worldly pleasures! it has cost their former interest in the work of the Lord and in the assembly of the saints; it has cost their neglect of the poor and the orphans; in brief, it has cost them their souls! And sometimes it does not take a great fortune to go to one's head at the expense of his heart. Money can make a fool of a man, changing the humble, self-sacrificing follower of the Lord Jesus Christ into a self-conceited snob, forgetful of the highest interests of his family and friends. It can give him a feeling of superiority over his poor neighbors and blind his eyes to the fact that he has really lost the place of confidence he once enjoyed in their hearts. Money is either a power for good in a man's life and in the lives of others or a deceiver who will cheat him out of his best possessions. What is the meaning of your money? Have you taken the time to watch its effects upon your own heart, upon the other members of your family, upon the church and the community? Is your money lifting you and others up to heaven, or is it dragging you down to hell while you, blind to the truth of the Scriptures and deaf to the entreaties of your brothers, are going on with your selfish enjoyment of it? If you have any money to speak of, take an inventory this very day. Said Dr. Lorimer: "It's good to have money and the things that money can buy; but it's good, too, to check up once in a while and make sure that you haven't lost the things that money won't buy.—The Gospel Advocate.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Our Washington City Representative Church is nearing completion. It will be finished by January, 1919. The opening sermon was preached by Dr. H. A. Boaz, in the Sunday school department, on September 22. Two years ago, our Conference Board pledged $3000 and up to this time only $328 have been paid. Dr. George S. Sexton, Secretary of General Conference Special Committee, asked me to urge the pastors of our Conference to bring with them by a special collection this remainder of $2672 to Clarksdale, November 20. The time is short and requires haste, but it can be done. Every bill for work and material has been met to date, but the Committee will not be able to meet the final payment, which will be due January 1, at which time the church will be completed. We all know what it is to let a contract depending upon the pledges of our people and fail to get them. Call on your people for a collection for this purpose and let us report it all paid at Clarksdale on November 20.

Please do this, my brethren, without fail. W. S. LAGRONE,
President Board of Church Extention, North Miss. Annual Conference.

COULDN'T.

In the third-class compartment of the city train the conversation turned on the important subject of economy. Various views were expressed. Then a small man in one corner said, slowly: "A friend o' mine—leastways 'e's more of an acquaintance like—'e ain't spent a 'a'penny in five years." "Rot!" "What are you givin' us?" and similar remarks greeted this statement. "Fact!" said the small one, briefly, as he lit his pipe. "But 'e'll be out of jail next week!"—London Tit-Bits.

It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.—Adv.

THE REAL NEED.

The real need of the world is men; not featherless hipeds; not animated sounding hoards; not beautiful specimens of studied consistency; not personifications of conventionality; not irreproacbable patterns of respectability; not exemplars of a smug morality; hut men who with their own beads think the thoughts of liberty and justice and rigbteousness; who with their own feet walk the ways, rough though they he, of hope and discovery and victory; wbo lay hold with their own hands of the tasks that have heen set for a weary world to do. The world needs men who can stand alone—who do not have to he propped up against some institutlon or supported hy some precedent; men who have sense enough to know who tbey are and why they are and where tbey are, and who have courage enough to speak what they know; men who are not afraid to ask questions and are not afraid to hear the answers to those questions. Paul was such a man, and Luther and Wesley, and the world was never the same after tbey had lived in it. And they were the men they were hecause they knew Jesus. And He was such a man.

"PEACE HATH HER VICTORIES."

The greatest war in the history of the world has been fought to a finish, and the right has triumphed. For four long years the Allies have suffered heroically and fought valiantly. But at last victory has come. We recognize the hand of God in wbat has taken piace, and we record our profound tbanksgiving to him as the source of all our strengtb.

But the task of the civilized nations of the earth is not yet over. A work of reconstruction must be done that will test the resources and strength and patience and wisdom of the world as severely as the war has tested them. So far as we are able to judge from the press dispatches, a large part of Europe is in revolution. Industry has been wrecked, and age-long economic and political structures have crumbled. Order must be brought out of chaos. In our own country, serious problems have arisen that are not settled by winning the war. Exploitation of the people by conscienceless profiteers has brought about a state of affairs that demands attention; fundamental questions as to the powers of government have come to the front; the problem of capital and lahor is, perhaps, more acute than ever beforc; profound differences of opinion as to the activities of religious forces in civil affairs have heen accentuated; educatfonal policies and programs have undergone a great change; theological thought seems to be undergoing radical changes.

All these things mean victories are yet to be won, although Germany has laid down her arms and the Allies have emerged victorious from tbe war. In due time, under the guidance of God, these victories of peace will he won.

ONE PHASE OF THE PROBLEM.

We ought to avoid the habit of thinking of Churcb work too much in terms of "problems." Tbere is danger that people generally may come to feel tbat the Cburcb is facing a never-ending series of difficulties wbich it is hopelessly engaged in trying to overcome. It is prohiem this and problem that, until it migbt almost be a fair assumption that the Church never really solves any difficulty, or solves it only to be confronted immediately with a new and greater one.

The world needs to-day more than ever before a message of cheer that will hearten and inspirit tbose who are seriously and earnestly looking and longing for tbe hest tbings. Fearful shakings of the head and gloomy forebodings of evil will not do much toward strengthening tbe belief that the Church has a sure foundation and that it is the divinely appointed agency for withstanding the forces of wickedness.

But we should always keep our eyes open to see conditions as they actually exist, and we should be sensitive enough to feel the influences that are shaping tbe attitudes and actions of men. A blind faith that everything will come out all right "in the end" is not conducive to intelligent and energetic efforts to make everything come out all rigbt "in the now."

One phase of the "problem" that confronts the Church to-day is the fact that the Church as an institution makes practically no appeal to a large part of our population. If we take church membersbip as a basis of comparison, we find that a great many people bave never thought it worth while to join any branch of the Church. Recent statistics show that of the 110,000,000 people in the United States, 26,000,000 are Protestant communicants, 15,000,000 are baptized Roman Catholics, 2,200,000 are Jews, and about 1,500,000 are of other faiths. Of tbe remaining more than 65,000,000, about 20,000,000 are children. After all deductions have heen made, we find that there are 45,000,000 people in the United States without any Cburcb affiliation whatever.

If we look at the matter from the standpoint of church attendance, we find even a worse condition. A recent writer wbo has made a careful study of the facts says that half of the city population seldom, if ever, enter a churcb. Figures showing attendance at country churches are not available, hut we douht if it is very much hetter than the city attendance.

If tbese figures indicated only a negative lack of interest in the Church, the situation would not seem so had. But we must recognize the fact that there is a positive antagonism to the Cburch as an institution on tbe part of many who profess to he devout followers of Cbrist. For example, Upton Sinclair, the famous writer of "The Jungle," and other books that expose many of the evils of our industrial system, bas recently pubilshed a hook, "Tbe Profits of Religion," the thesis of which is, in his own words, "the effect of fixed dogma in producing mental paralysis, and the use of this mental paralysis by Economic Exploitation." He adds: "From that standpoint, the various Protestant sects are hetter tban tbe Catholic, but not much better." And the whole book is a passionate denunciation of the Church as an organ of the exploiting classes. And yet he says of himself and the book: "This book will be denounced from one end of Christendom to the other as the work of a blasphemous infidel. Yet it stands in the direct line of the Christian tradition: written hy a man who was brought up in the Church, and loved it with all his heart and soul, and was driven out hy the formalists and hypocrites in high places; a man who thinks of Jesus more frequently and with more devotion than he thinks of any other man that lives or has ever lived on earth; and who has hut one purpose in all that he says and does, to hring into reality the dream that Jesus dreamed of peace on earth and good will toward men."

We do not denounce the book; we read it with interest as putting into concrete form some of the things that many people are feeling in their hearts, and are thinking every day, hut which they are not able to express so clearly or so forcefully as Mr. Sinclair has done—things which the Church must take into consideration in striving to reach the masses of the people to-day. We do not agree with Mr. Sinclair in his views—far from it—but we credit him with being sincere in voicing a protest that the Church must take notice of.

Whatever the cause or causes may be, we are forced to admit that the Church is not reaching effectively large masses of our population; they do not join it as members, and they do not attend its services. Many of them simply ignore it, while others criticize and condemn. If the Church has a message for all the people, it must deliver tbat message. How can it deliver the message, unless it can get the people to stop to hear? This is one phase of the problem that confronts us to-day—how to hring the Church into touch with the mass of the people.

THE NEWS IN NEW ORLEANS.

The greatest celebration in the history of New Orleans took place last Monday. Its occasion was, of course, the receipt of the news that Germany had signed the armistice, thus acknowledging that she had been totally defeated in the great war she had waged for world domination. It is impossible to describe the joyous enthusiasm with which the people received the news that victory had .at last been achieved. Very early in the morning, whistles began to blow, and bells to ring, and guns to boom througbout the city. Those who are accustomed to take a late nap were deprived of their luxury—sleep was impossible after five o'clock. Canal Street was the gathering place of thousands of men, women and children. Factories and mills declared a holiday, and all business houses closed their doors. Flags of the United States and of the Allies were displayed everywhere. Parades and processions seemed to be formed spontaneously. Crowded automobiles, elaborately decorated, moved along the streets in an unending stream. Crowds jammed the sidewalks and overflowed into the streets. Everybody was happy—hilariously happy. The pent-up feelings of many weary months of waiting found full expression. The inevitable had happened—democracy had triumphed over autocracy. It was a great day.

GATHERING THE CHILDREN INTO THE FAMILY PEW.

While it is an obvious fact that the American civillzation has developed a profound perception of the obligations of man toward his brother man, near-by and afar off; developed, on various sides, attributes leading toward the perfected ideal of Christ-illumined life, it is just as obvious that a retrograde standard of morals, along certain lines, is threatening the very fabric of the nation, and undermining the ideals of purity of heart in social life—a quality without which no nation can permanently stand on the heights before the world, or even maintain a sound and stable government within its borders.

In the disclosures through the demand for well-developed physical conditions in the men called by the United States Government to take their places beside the men of other nations in this mighty struggle in behalf of the freedom of the world, this country has been startled through learning of the vast numbers of youth among us who have been pronounced as physically unfit.

While many circumstances have combined to produce the above-mentioned result, it requires no far search into the causes of such calamity, nor the wisdom of profound mind, to locate, in the vast majority of cases, the sources of degeneration in a nation where the young people of to-day, as a prevalling rule, largely govern the trend of family affairs; are permited a wide freedom; are allowed to bend the tides of their lives toward sources of present pleasure and desire; have considerable cash at their disposal; discover more pleasures outside of the home than within it; smoke, and dress immodestly, to meet the customs and the pace of "the set" with whom they find their enjoyment; observe little respect for parents and the aged, or for the divine rules for action in the affairs of life in accordance with the standards of right, rather than what is agreeable to the will, and, frequently, know little of the souls of the parents to whose guardianship God gave them.

The mothers, in a certain sense, are the rulers of the country. Upon them devolves the obligation of communicating to their offspring the health of their own spirtual life; of training the spiritual eye to see the smallest departure from truth, honesty, and purity; of lifting the thought to the highest ideals of which the human mind is capable. Upon their steadfastness in meeting this, their obligation, depends the eventful happiness and spiritual wealth of the souls given by God to their keeping; the purity of the social circles in which their children move; the purity of the political life of the nation.

Close, soul-to-soul companionship with Christian parents is the need of every child brought into this world. It is but what is due them. They come not of their own volition. Those who bring them into being owe them the gift of themselves—their time, moments of close communion as to things tending to lead them into harmony with God, and the best in human law—to the height of happiness through ever-advancing stepping-places toward the perfections of the spirtual life.

As a matter of fact, how is one impressed as to the prevailng aims of the average parents concerning their children?

The answers to the following questions would seem to go far toward explaining, or bringing to view, conditions in very many family circles which tend toward moral and physical degeneracy.

Are the fathers and mothers of this country the confidential friends of their children, interested in their youthful problems, keeping in touch with their daily experinces, expecting their confidence, under all circumstances, as a matter of honor?

Is the home usually the chief center of pleasure and amusement, rather than the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, or other places, however good, the theater, or moving picture shows, one of the chief concerns in connection with family affairs being that of providing, within reasonable possibility, for home pleasures and home intercourse?

Is the spiritual standing of the child—his clear-sightedness as to the full meaning of truthfulness, honesty, and purity of life—an interest to the parents above his standing as a scholar, a social star, a successful wage-earner?

To expect honor of a well-trained child is usually to secure it. To expect from such a child entire honesty in confessing to a parent, at the close of each day, as to wrongs committed, improper words spoken, comradeship with the immoral or profane, is to shield him from entering far into the corrupt circles of life and give him a habit of daily introspection which will tend toward strengthening and culturing within him a dread of evil, and a sincere thirst for the enduring fiber of noble character and elevated purpose.

Children whose inner life is daily sounded and cultured, who are, in spite of prevailing customs, held back from sources of moral and physical dangers, are not apt to be eventually found amid physical or moral degenerates when tested by the standards of noblest manhood and womanhood.

There was never a time hitherto in this country when there was such pressing need for the Church of God to arouse itself and, by God's help, wrestle with the evil tendencies of the age, to bring its children and youth within a sacred atmosphere, and plant within them aspirations for lives of consecration to God's service. And yet how empty are the pews of childhood in these days of devotion to excitement and a mere round of pleasure!

Looking toward bringing about more sane practice in connection with the children of the Church, a movement is under way in some quarters, intended to arouse general enthusiasm among Christians, concerning attendance at the regular Sunday services by children and youth, through the united and earnest efforts of both clergy and laymen, either by house-to-house canvass, or other method, and the selection of a day in the approaching November when an earnest appeal will be made from pulpits, calling upon parents for a full representation of every Christian family at the regular church services at least once each Sunday. It is to be hoped that this movement will be widely taken up, increasing in strength during the coming weeks.

This is a period of transition in many respects. The universal mind is stirred by the consideration of many vital problems. But the problem of finding means of deepening the spiritual life of the rising generation is one of the gravest before the American people to-day. Under the combined influence of men called to God's ministry, in the various branches of the Christian Church, without doubt a multitude of parents would respond to appeal and lead their children to the house of God systematically, to worship beside them.

Children are capable of receiving inspiration from deeper sources than the average parent gives them credit for. The sermons to adults, from the lips of earnest, consecrated men, have power to quicken the nobler instincts in young spirits. If the universal Church is to be lifted to higher and higher flights of thought and work, the children must again be gathered into the partly empty pews, and permitted the opportunity to catch the quickening flame of inspiration leading them toward the too much neglected realm of the actual spirituai life.—George Kilngle, in Zion's Heraid.

WHAT A MINISTER OUGHT TO BE.

An Address to the Students of Drew Theological Seminary.

By Bishop Herbert Welch.

It scarcely seems possible that more than twenty-six years have passed since I sat in the old chapel at Drew as a student, and looked into the professors' faces, all of whom have gone with the exception of Dr. Buttz.

This is a devotional service primarily, and it might seem that the things I have in mind to say are not adapted to a devotional service. And yet I think no holier use could be made of this moment, no holler occupation could be indulged in by the students, than preparation for the work to which they are called.

A Man with a Program.

First, the minister ought to be a man with a program. I am inclined to believe that next to the spirit of discontent and self-seeking which mars the lives of ministers, there is no frequent cause of failure as the lack of a program. I am out of patience with some of the old programs that have been laid down. It is supposed to be enough to tell a minister how he is to divide his day. In the morning he is to be in his study, in the afternoon calling, and in the evening attending meetings. He is to preach so many sermons per week or per year; he is to hold so many prayer meetings, make a certain number of calls, meet committees and to go through all the motions. That kind of schedule program may be useful in its place, but the place is small. What I mean is this—when a man goes into a given community as a pastor he is to look upon that community as his problem which must be more diligently worked out than a problem in mathematics. He is not to suppose that the same methods will be adapted to this community and to that. In a country church and in a city church his occupations may be as wide apart as the poles. I know one minister who, when he goes to a new church, studies his parish. He makes a systematic study of the parish, what are the opportunities, etc., and then in the same spirit that a great general will lay out his campaign and assign his captains to their posts, he sets about organizing that church for the services which he owes to that particular community. Some ministers make the mistake of supposing that the thing needed is to do the whole thing themselves when they go into a community. Their work is neither ministry to the church nor service to the community in the sense of doing it all themselves, but to be leaders of the forces of Jesus Christ. And unless the minister has a program, unless he knows why a particular sermon is preached, and why a particular topic is chosen; unless these are but parts of a general scheme, no matter how industrious and sincere he may be, his ministry is likely to bear little fruit. We are called in the ministry to-day to a high order of intelligence, to the same degree of efficiency that pertains in the best business circles.

A Man with a Message.

I should say also that the minister ought to be a man with a Message. I wonder if you have felt that not all ministers have a real message. I wonder if you have felt that not all great sermons are preached because a text happens to occur or because the minister happens to have a convenient sermon, and you fail to catch in the sermon a message. I should not go so far as to say that the first vocation of every minister is preaching. Some of us are more useful in other ways than by preaching. There is a place for a great variety of talent in the ministry. The minister ought to preach the best that he can. Most of us will never be great preachers, but we will have something else to depend upon. How many sermons are on trifles! How many sermons never touch the heart of things, or relate conduct to the fundamental truths of the gospel! It seems to me that if I were a student to-day in Drew Theological Seminary I should try to do one or two things that I did not do when I was here. I should try, first, to become in some fair sense a master of the Bible. I should be a little more urgent about my biblical theology than about systematic theology. I should like to gain a mastery of the Holy Scriptures, and then out of all my knowledge of the Scriptures I should like to get a grip on the few great fundamentals. There are only a few. There are only a few great inventions in human progress, only a few great epochs in human history, only a few great men in the Hall of Fame. There are only a few great doctrines in theology. If a man can but get his hand on these so that they will never escape him, he will be vastly better off than the man who may have a mine of information, but has never gone to the heart of things. I believe that somehow or other the modern preacher who has done that thing will, in his time and in his measure, be like Paul, that everything else will gather about these central truths. On a few fixed pegs everything can be hung. A man will have a system of his own that will be vital because it is out of his own experience. That man will have a message. If he has seen a few great truths as in a noonday vision, every sermon is likely to be a message.

A Man with a Love.

And yet, these in a way are only on the outside. It seems to me, first of all and last of all, that a minister must be a man with a Love. I sometimes study the faces of a body of ministers, or on meeting an individual minister in some church I look into his face, and I am looking for the signs that the spirit of Jesus Christ has so taken possession of them as to transform them. A minister of Jesus Christ ought to have the cleanest, kindliest, manliest face. Sometimes I look at a minister with a bit of discouragement as I wonder, is that man representing Jesus Christ to his world? I have thought so often of the incident related by Hugh Price Hughes, speaking of a friend of his who said of his minister, "He is a very good man, but somehow he does not remind me of Jesus Christ." Who is going to remind men of Jesus Christ if we do not? Of course we need faith—faith in ourselves. We need faith in our call, and we need to feel sure not only that our hearts are good, but that we are in the place where God wants us and doing what God wants us to do. We need faith in our call. We need to have faith in the men to whom we are sent so that we may never take a Pharisaical attitude of reaching down a hand to any man, but always to meet them on the common level of the children of God. We need to have faith in our ministry, faith in our God and in the coming of His kingdom, so that no matter what the signs are we shall never suppose for one instant that the kingdom of God is not coming between nations and between the classes of our own country, and in the individual lives of men. We need faith in the kingdom, but it seems to me as though love went a little deeper than faith.

Unless a man has something of that, something of what we used to call the passion for souls, something that we like to call now the love for men—unless that is the dominating note of his ministry, unless he is in the ministry because he loves Jesus Christ (that is his only safety and his only strength)—unless he loves the men for whom Christ died, he ought to get out of the ministry. Love is the only thing that will justify his being there. The man with a love that will believe all things, hope all things, conquer all things, will never be discouraged and never let go; the man who stands in Christ's stead to bid men be reconciled to God—never must he speak except in love. I used to hear men in my day in Drew come back from a Sunday's preaching and talk in flippant terms of their preaching, as though they were professional preachers instead of men standing in Christ's stead. Never except in awe, in tenderness, and love can a man represent Jesus Christ.

As we come in this family service to hear the vows of two of these men who are to be set apart as ministers, and then as we all come to bow about the Lord's table, I cannot pray any other prayer for you than this, "More love, more love to Thee, O Christ." And more love to men. And if that prayer might be answered, until you indeed are made perfect in love, then, brethren, whether it is on the home or on the foreign field, whether it is in some great country parish or in the midst of city perplexities, you shall have a ministry that will be honored of God and will make men rejoice. —The Christian Advocate (New York).

THE CALL TO THE WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG MEN.

The Week of Prayer for Young Men for the year 1918 falls within a spacious, momentous and fateful time. Truly we are living in great days; great in upheaval and overturning, for literally old things are passing away and all things are becoming new; great in adventure and constructive achievement; great in sacrifice and suffering, for see the 11,000,000 and more war-filled graves and the many other millions of the mutilated and the maimed, and the countless sorrow-stricken and anxious homes; great in the discovery and releasing of men's latent capacities for heroism and unselfish devotion; great in the challenges summoning men to enter with wide plans and God-touched spirits into new and better days.

Such days call for men, and call for men at their best. They must be men of comprehension, that they may have understanding of their times. They must be men of the finest loyalties—loyalty to undying principles and loyalty to our Divine Lord and His undying cause—that they may not miss the way, and that they may indeed be true leaders. They must be men of contagious character and with a passion for helpfulness. To furnish such indispensable men, and likewise the secure foundation for such manhood—Christlike boyhood, is the high mission of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Times like these not only demand all that is best in men but also call us to prayer that the power of the Living God may be manifested. The Association Movement, like everything else in these days, is being tried as by fire. Our dangers are so many and so grave, our tasks so greatly exceed our powers, and our opportunities so far transcend our visible resources, that nothing short of a fresh and wonderful accession of superhuman wisdom and might will suffice. Therefore, let us during the days, November 10 to 16, give ourselves to prayer and likewise call upon our entire Brotherhood and its multitude of friends to pray.

This year our Week of Prayer synchronizes almost completely with the United War Work Campaign in which the Association is to have such a large and, we trust, such a worthy part. All our discerning leaders and friends recognize in this an added summons to intercession. Without sacrificing convictions and without compromising our distinctive character, may every member of the Movement, for the sake of the boys in uniform at home and abroad, on land or on sea or in the air, and for the sake of our Lord and Master, use the countless new contacts and the wider fellowship into which the President has called us, as an unprecedented opportunity to witness, to co-operate and to serve.

On behalf of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations,

ALFRED E. MARLING,
Chairman.

JOHN R. MOTT,
General Secretary.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 29—RUMINATIONS.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D. D.

"Then came a burst of thunder sound"—3 a. m., and at this, 4 p. m., it still rains. Surely a rainy day! And never was a community more surprised, for yesterday was bright all day with unbroken sunshine. Beginning with Wednesday, the 9th, in these 21 days we have registered more than a foot of rainfall, with few clear days to break the gloom; the smaller streams have overflowed their banks, flooding fields and doing much damage to ungathered crops, while in the delta all work has been practically at a standstill, with cotton sprouting in the bolls. Added to this, we have been wrestling with the "flu" situation, as have our neighboring cities In the midst of it all we have had the fourth Liberty Bond drive and our County director says "Over the top and $50,000 to spare;" whether our churches will report as well "remains," as we have been in a state of demobilization for quite a month. One lesson our church people have never learned is that it is unwise to defer their contributions to the last of the year, and to accept St. Paul's, "Lay by you in store on first day of the week."

During the days of enforced rest (?) I have read John Lord's "Warriors and Statesmen" (Vol. iv), and have been impressed with the likeness of the spirit of the Kaiser to-day and that of Frederic the Great—the Prussian in the 18th century—and of Napoleon Bonaparte of a later generation.

In these weeks we have been reminded of the futility of "the best laid plans of mice and men." After some trouble in arranging the time, at last we had secured from Brother Gus Harmon promise to be with us the first weeks in October, to be capped off with a great Sunday (20th) and Bishop Kilgo. Our people were in spirit for a good meeting, but we bow in reverence to the belief that "all things work together for good."

Just five weeks and the Bishop will let fall the gavel calling to order the 105th session of our old Jerusalem Conference of the Southwest—November 1, 1813-December 4, 1918; eleven members, covering a territory from the Tombigbee on the east to Attakapas on the west. Of the thirteen men receiving appointments at that Conference are the names of Ford, Winans, Griffin, Bird and James, still lingering among us in homes of decendants or appreciative friends. From a membership of 2268 white and colored, what a host has sprung up within the territory represented! By the way, I am reminded of a request made by Brother J. A. Bowen of the North Mississippi Conference to furnish a paper for their approaching session giving the history of the entrance of Methodism into the County of Washington; first preacher and first preaching place. Much turning of leaves, of such history as I have, reveals very little, so I shall greet with great delight any information that any reader of this may give—and do it now please for the time is short.

With boxes in the cellar, and only five weeks until Conference, I am reminded that my quadrennium is nearing its end. Curiosity prompted, and I find that in these four years I have baptized 46 children, received 125 into the Church (51 of the number this year), attended 108 funerals, married 105 couples (33 this year and with hope of more to follow), and have made 3000 visits; and yet there will remain much for him to do who shall follow. This work has had its difficulties and its pleasures; its successes and its reverses. There has been no time for vacations, and in these Sundays of closed doors the city papers have given space for synopses. How rapidly the months have gone—all too fast and left so much undone! So much we wanted to do which I hope another may accomplish.

Vicksburg, Miss.

THE NEEDY CHURCH VERSUS THE BOARD OF MISSIONS OF THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

By Rev. S. S. Bogan.

The new plan of the Board of Missions in making appropriations to needy churches just about destroys its functions as a system of helping the weak church or circuit by appropriation or donation, and has made it practically impossible for a needy and struggling charge to get aid.

If the church or circuit asking for aid is able to step up and sign the application as it is now formulated, and assume the obligations therein named, it is able to get on without such donation or aid. The new plan is simply incapable of giving relief to any charge, but must necessarily increase its burdens and work a hardship on those it proposes to help. E.g., here is a circuit that by a hard struggle may raise the amount of $800 assessed for pastor's salary, but the need of the pastor is $1000. The circuit applies to the Board of Missions for $200 donation and it is granted after the application has been signed up by every member of the board or boards of stewards; they become personally and collectively parties to the contract and equally bound by its conditions.

Now the trouble begins: every condition of that instrument of donation to which they have subscribed must be met, and the conditions are many and exacting—they simply must be conformed to or the contract falls to deliver the goods. There are no provisions made for inability, etc.

Did I hear some one say, "donation" of the Board of Missions? I demur. You could hardly call it a donation; and yet you would not say it was a loan. Well, what is it?

Circuit A applies to the Board of Missions for aid or donation of $200 and the Board grants it upon the duly signed and executed application. Now that sounds like real help, doesn't it? And it looks as if Circuit A has solved her problem and may go ahead with some degree of assurance. But lo and behold! there are great bundles of knotty strings to be united and yards and yards of conditions to roll out and adjust before the donation is available. Now what are these conditions?

First of all, the board of stewards must become a Publicity Committee and herald abroad to every member of the church or circuit the fact of the munificent gift, donation or appropriation of the Board of Missions of the sum of two hundred dollars.

Second, they must establish a prescribed system of financing.

Third, they must report quarterly to the Board of Missions the amount raised and paid pastor on salary.

Fourth, they must understand that the Board of Missions will dole out to them the promised donation in the same proportion that they have been able to raise for pastor's salary during that quarter. If they pay half what is due for the quarter, the donation is cut in half for that same quarter. That is law and must abide, whoever may suffer or go hungry.

Fifth, they have obligated themselves to make the Conference assessments upon the basis of the entire salary of the pastor, including the $200 donation of the Board of Missions.

Very well—we have the facts now squarely before us. The Board of Missions makes a donation of $200 to Circuit A after its board of stewards became the signatory guarantors of the conditions stated in the application. To make the matter work out smoothly, we assume that the Conference assessments are made upon the basis of 50 per cent assessed for preacher in charge, though very often it is more.

So Circuit A, with a two hundred dollar appropriation from the Board of Missions upon the new plan, is bound to do big things. First, they are bound to raise every cent of that eight hundred dollar assessment for the pastor before they can make any claim for the full payment of the donation; for it takes no note of conspiring circumstances and conditions that may arise—it merely assumes that Circuit A can meet its obligations and pay the assessment for pastor. But remember that raising the pastor's salary is only a part of the obligations written in the instrument of application to the Board of Missions. Besides salary, Circuit A must carry a 50 per cent assessment based on preacher's salary, which, in this case would be four hundred dollars, raising the budget of the circuit to $1200, plus the presiding elder's assessment of 15 per cent of assessment for pastor, or $120, giving the circuit a budget of $1320.

Yet the donation is still tied up hard and fast, and you are bound to add to your budget, to get the strings off the donation so you may use it. First, you must add to your Conference Assessments 50 per cent of this $200 donation, which is $100. Now you find your circuit with a five hundred dollar Conference assessment. "Now," says one, "the donation is at last loose." No, not yet. This two hundred dollars has been embodied in the pastor's salary as the basis of assessment. So here is an extra deduction of 15 per cent for the presiding elder, or $30 more to add to the budget of the circuit, making the assessment for the presiding elder $150, giving a total budget of $1450. Now grant that Circuit A has succeeded, or may succeed, in raising the budget: what are the facts in the case? The munificent and liberal donation of the Board of Missions has to all intents and purposes dwindled down to the insignificant sum of $70. It is a fact that nine cases out of ten of those circuits or stations that must call on the Board of Mission for a donation to supplement their pastor's salary are already over-taxed and burdened with Conference assessments, the half of which they can not and do not pay, and to add to them this added assessment under guise of giving them help is simply unfair to them and works additional hardships for the struggling pastors.

Now I do not know, nor do I care to know, who is the originator of this wonderful new plan of the Board of Missions, but I do know that the brother or brethren that formulated and shaped that plan must feel very much relieved at getting so many kinks and knots and tangles out of their system.

In conclusion, I suggest that this wonderful new plan of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Annual Conference be held in abeyance by order of the Conference, and the Board of Missions be instructed to make their appropriations upon the recommendations and representations of the presiding elders, and that the originator of this new and remarkable plan be given the privilege and opportunity to try it out for one year on some one of our needy and dependent circuits.

Jackson, La., Oct. 30.

WHY WE NEED MORE THAN $170,500,000.

By John R. Mott, National Director General United War Work Campaign.

1. Because of the remarkable increase of the American Army and its inevitable continued increase; the present budget is outlined on the basis of the work with one million American soldiers in France by November 1, and a total number of three million in the whole American Army. Before the end of the year we will have between four and five million.

2. Because of the marvelous expansion of the American Army and Navy. Relatively the organizations which are united in this campaign have neglected the Navy. If we are to serve the united purpose of this campaign, a much larger sum of money must be included in the respective budgets.

3. Because this war, unlike others, is not alone a war of armies and navies, but an entire people. Industry is being militarized. Millions of men and women are at work in arsenals, navy yards and countless other indispensable war industries.

4. Because the burden of this war falls so heavily upon the women of America and the Allies. They have released millions of the men for the fighting forces. Many are engaged in making munitions and other essential war activities. The needs of these women affected by war conditions convinces us that a larger financial provision should be made for them.

5. Because of the comprehensiveness of the ministry being rendered the American Army and Navy and the forces of our Allies. We are trying to represent to them the American home, school, library, religious institutions and the best American ideals. A large expenditure in this direction is necessary because of the growth of the Army and Navy.

6. Because of the continuity of the service we are seeking to render. We are following increasing numbers of soldiers and sailors from the time they leave their home, while they are in transit, in training camps, at ports of embarkation, while on ship-board, and during their stay at the ports of debarkation, as well as in their training overseas, and in the actual zone of combat.

7. Because of the imperative need of placing all of these helpful facilities at the service of the Allied Armies, whose claims were not sufficiently recognized in framing our budget.

8. Because of the indescribable need of millions of prisoners of war, which number is rapidly increasing and who must look to us solely for a comprehensive program in the interest of their physical, mental, social and moral well-being.

9. Even though the war were to end in a few months or weeks, we should stand in great need of a fund of more than $170,500,000, because this work would have to be continued throughout the entire period of demobilization. It would take from twelve to eighteen months to convey the armies of the Allies now in conflict to their respective countries. During that long period they will have virtually all of their time on their hands. Their temptations will be more numerous and persistent. There will be a tendency to let down standards and relax discipline. The period of demobilization should not be allowed to become a period of demoralization, but rather should be one of growth in knowledge and working efficiency and of the strengthening of the character.

10. An Army Educational Commission, composed of a group of the leading educators of America, are being sent overseas to co-operate in establishing what in popular language would be described as "A University in Khaki." British and French universities are helping in this vast undertaking and it will take at least eight million dollars for textbooks and books of reference for the coming winter alone.

11. If there are no other reasons than to meet promptly and efficientiy emergencies and crises which are sure to come, there should be a large over-subscription.

A LETTER FROM CHAPLAIN VAUGHAN.

We take the liberty of publishing a personal letter which we received recently from Rev. A. F. Vaughan, a member of the Louisiana Conference, now serving as Chaplain in France. It gives a "close-up" view of conditions at the Front. We are sure our readers will enjoy it.

"Somewhere in France," Oct. 4, 1918.

Dear Brother Carley: I am not unmindful of the fact that I promised to write you after my journey across the big ocean, and I would have done so a long time ago but for the confusion and inconveniences that we have been subjected to since my arrival. Most of my time has been spent in German dugouts and as a general rule I left "home" early and returned late at night, tired, wet and dirty. It required some little time to learn how to sleep when big guns were firing away at German trenches from positions very close to your abiding place. And then old Jerry has a habit, and a very uncomfortable one, of repiying in kind, with either a shrapnel or a gas shell. They come whizzing along, you try to imagine just where they are to land, and then, bang! right at your door.

I have been gassed once—just slightly, but it makes you dizzy, your head aches, you cry and the doctor gives you a sort of stuff nearly as bad as the gas itself. Maybe it will pass off in a few days, or it might decide to remain and ruin your lungs for life—thank goodness, not for eternity. I was crossing what is comfortably known as Death Valley, where the Boches have killed a great many of our men, when a mustard shell exploded about a hundred yards away. Now, Henry, I was never known as a sprinter, but I want to say to you that I hustled up that hill in a most creditable manner, and smelt just enough of the stuff to add a little more speed to my journey.

Nearly all of my time has been spent in burying our fallen men. There are many things I would love to forget, many harrowing experiences that make me shudder even to think of them. Up to the present time I have buried less than a hundred, but that is too many. The bodies are often so torn and mangled that we just bury what we can find. Of one thing we are profoundly grateful: In winning back to France over 150 square miles of territory and capturing 15,000 prisoners we lost about 400 men, who were actually killed on the field of battle. Others were wounded, probably many of them died, but it was an unusual record. It is surprising to see what a small percentage of the wounds are serious, even in the bitterest shell-fire.

We have had a great time exploring German dugouts. In this sector they have been undisturbed for nearly the whole period of the war. However, in 1914 this place was mentioned practically every day for six months and the hill that we crossed (I should say one of the hills) was the scene of many fierce battles between the French and Germans when thousands of men were killed.

After that the French despaired of ever taking it. Consequently, the Germans decided they could settle down and rest easy. They built concrete dugouts, furnished them well, some even brought their families along, and they were enjoying themselves immensely, when suddenly the American Army launched a drive, the first big effort of their campaign. The enemy was simply swept off his feet and left all of his comfortable quarters behind for the benefit of the Yankee soldiers. One patrol found a table spread for dinner and they claim it was a fine one, too. At the present time we are eating vegetables out of German gardens, drinking cool, fresh spring water dug by Germans, sleeping in German beds, wearing German slippers and some of us are trying to read German novels, since we have none of our own.

A few days ago I had to go close to our outposts. Just for curiosity I peeped down the valley across to the hill and there in plain view was a part of the famous Hindenburg line. Even the trenches are made of cement and in every nook and corner is a deadly machine gun. The time is coming, nobody sems to know, only it must be soon—when our men will cross that valley and climb that hill. God knows, Henry, what it will mean, but I shudder to think of it. Death and destruction will lurk everywhere, but our men are going and they will never stop until they have gone over. Then will follow a sad procession, led by a chaplain and a detail of grave diggers, to bury our fallen heroes in little graves, two feet wide, six feet long and six feet deep—the bodies wrapped in blankets, and a small board at the foot with the name, rank and number, to tell who lies in that particular grave.

For days I have lived in a dazed, dizzy state of mind. Often when they drive us in shell holes for protection, the men ask me questions, and some of them hard to answer. I can only appeal to their patriotism and love of justice. Often I am surprised at their simple faith in God. They pray and read their Bibles and tell me that this war has turned them to religion. I haven't met a single unbeliever. But are they Christians? When they get back to their dugouts they swear and many of them gamble; not as many as you might think, but too many of them do it. They are kind-hearted and generous—all things seem to be held in common, but I can't help feeling that they need a deeper type of spirituality and a religion that means real consecration to God. Maybe, when we get back home, that will come, and the great task of the Church must be to take these men and show them what genuine Christianity can do for a man. If we had some good religious papers and books to give them—but that is another problem hard to settle. In the large towns where I have been there seem to be plenty of "Christian Science Monitors," but not one copy of any of the other religious papers have I seen.

If you happen to know of any preachers coming over as chaplains, please advise them to buy as little stuff as possible. All that they need can be secured here, and more. At the present time I have my clothing roll, one suit of clothes and nothing more. It all gets lost in some way. I would be about $200 better off had I known this before leaving the States. You might pass the word along for the benefit of many a poor fellow who wonders where he will get the money for his "outfit." I have even lost the typewriter given me by the War Work Commission.

Another thing: very little money is needed. My actual living expenses amount to 50 cents per day. Maybe it will be more later on, but it is amazing to know how little is actually required. Of course, when a man is assigned to work in cities or hospitals, more money is needed, but most of us are with infantry regiments and have very little occasion to spend money. Some of the other chaplains may have different experiences and ideas, but I am expressing the opinion of many that I have talked with.

Well, it looks as if the war will not last much longer, and I pray that the end is near. It is fearful business and the cost far greater than many people can realize. We do not hear a great deal about it, but the opinion seems to prevail that the Central Powers are near the end of their rope.

Remember me very kindly to other members of the Advocate family and the preachers. I trust all goes well with you and when I get back home I hope you will still be the Editor of our Advocate.

DR. VICTOR I. MASTERS AND METHODIST-BAPTIST FRATERNITY.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

One of the evidences that the world is becoming more democratic, as far as American Churches are concerned, is the open recognition by Dr. Masters, Superintendent of Publicity of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Church, that other Churches than the Baptist are part of the Catholic Church of Christ. While we have known all along that many of the Baptist Church members believed that the Baptist was not the only Church of Christ, we have not known one of their leaders so openly to acknowledge such. At least we take the following from Dr. Masters' recent article that appeared in the Advocate anent Baptist Church statistics, so to acknowledge:

"Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and the rest—we are co-workers all. We have learned from one another, and shall learn. We will, please God, none of us be less what he is, except as he may become so under the leadesrhip of the Word and Spirit of God. But still we shall be one, as we are one in essential reality, each with his heart beating attuned to the other, just to the extent that each has had his heart attuned to that of the Christ. That is the unity of the New Testament.

"This is the sort of unity we want. God give us more of it—not less of adherence to what we conscientiously believe, though we may differ at points in our belief. For, as Bishop Warren A. Candler, that great statesman of Southern Methodists, has so ably pointed out, it is exactly in the free play of denominational Christianity, which is the normal expression of religious liberty, that this country has come to be more of a Christian nation than any other nation in the world, the other nations themselves being witnesses."

Assuming that Dr. Masters thus acknowledges that other than the Baptist are Churches of Christ, we would like to ask: Does the writer speak for the leaders and policy makers of the Baptist Church? If so, why does the Church uphold so many of its evangelists in preaching to the ignorant masses that theirs is the only Church of Christ—the very one that Christ built "upon the rock" of Peter's confession, with John the Baptist as their patron saint? If the writer should deny that the Church authorizes such bigotry, why then does it deny its members the right individually to choose for themselves in the matter of communing with Christians of other Churches? And why will the Baptists not receive a church letter from other Churches, but require Christians coming to them from other denominations first to renounce their Church, their minister, and their baptism, and be received "for baptism" just as sinners are required to be received? An answer to these questions that would make the religious world believe the Baptists really considered themselves a part of the great Protestant family of Christians, along with the other denominations, would go farther towards bringing about genuine Christian fraternity than statements as set forth in the above quotation.

But would it not be glorious to realize a fact such as the statement of Dr. Masters would indicate—that we could, in all fraternity of spirit and co-operation of effort, be just such members of the kingdom as thus to love and help each other?

For one, we do not believe in an ecclesiastical monopoly, such as the Romanists had before the days of the Reformation, or the Church of England before the days of Wesley. While we do not believe in the large number of denominations that we now have, we do believe that there should be more than one denomination of Christians, just as there are two political parties in a country or two literary societies in a college. The two are needed to compete with each other in good works and to watch and hold each other to the high ideals of the Christian religion. And we would allow of the easiest transfer system for membership from one Church to another, that a Christian could easily adapt himself to the church life wherever he may chance to be, or under whatever circumstances it may develop that he could best assist in building up the Kingdom of God. And if this spirit of unity has, in a measure, worked well among other Churches, why should the Baptists—like the Catholics—still boast about their John-The-Baptist-Apostolic succession, and still refuse to co-operate with Christians of other Churches? If not before, we believe that the return of our comrade soldiers of all denominations from France will mark the end of such religious bigotry and denominational narrowness as the Baptists and some others now hold. "So mote it be!"

WEATHERCOCK CHRISTIANS.

How well I remember the weathercocks that were upon the old New England barns when I was a boy. At a very tender age I climbed up and investigated the weathercock upon my father's barn by means of a rotten ladder. Any additional adventures or excursions of this nature were promptly forbidden by my parents, in spite of the fact that I had not the slightest intention of falling.

How the weathercocks changed front with every passing breeze! That is what they were created for; when they failed to respond to every wind which blew, their days of usefulness were ended.

How different with the Christian! Our real usefulness only begins when we cease to change front with every passing breeze; when we go breast forward; when the winds of adversity beat upon us in vain, only causing us to say with Paul, "None of these things move me." Don't, don't be a weathercock Christian! Keep your eyes on the goal! Look forward, and steer straight!

The weathercock Christian tries to please everybody, and as a rule he does not succeed in pleasing anybody. Oh, what a hard row we hoe when we try to please everybody—weeds and briars and stones run riot in that row! Remember this; you have to stand for something before you can get anywhere in life. This standing for nothing, being a nonentity a weathercock Christian who points everywhere and gets nowhere—is the most miserable existence possible. Listen to a voice that echoes down the centuries, "This one thing I do!" Stand up and be counted! What do you stand for? What do you stand against?

That weathercock on the barn is only a figurehead. A plain piece of board would answer the same purpose, for there is no life in the weathercock; it is only a signboard, an indicator. Did you ever realize what an awful thing it would be to look like a Christian, and even to act like one occasionally, and yet have no more life than a wooden weathercock? It is not so much ability, talent, education, or polish that we need as it is life! life! Only as the life of Christ flows through our life do we understand a little of the real meaning of life.—L. M. Hollingsworth, in Western Christian Advocate.

A good many people are waiting for their ships to come in; when the fact is the ships were never launched.—Anon.

I do not believe that death is to the dying the dreadful thing it looks to the beholders. I think it is more like what the spirit may then be able to remember of its own birth as a child into this lower world, this porch of the heavenly.—George Macdonald.

THE MISSIONARY CENTENARY

FORWARD, MARCH!

We have been singing "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God." Can we sing it now? We have seen how a mighty army moves. It levies its billions of dollars and gets them. It enters our kitchens and tells us what we may eat. It builds ships, requisitions factories, builds cities over night and takes over whole railroad systems. It demands our best. Mothers kiss their boys good-bye and send them to face the cannon. Men go singing by the millions to the "red rampart's slippery edge." If we dare sing like that we must set an undreamed of standard of loyalty to the Prince of Peace. We have not been marching; we have been marking time.—W. W. Pinson.

CENTENARY MUST "CARRY ON" IN JAPAN.

"Oh, the untouched villages in Japan! There they lie in heathen darkness, hundreds of them, not knowing the unspeakable graee of God in Jesus Christ; and the factories, with their half million women employees, only barely touehed by Him who eame with life abundant for all; and those awful abodes of sin, the licensed quarters of Japan, where the devil holds undisputed sway, while the Church of the living God seems powerless to break down those mighty walls of Jerieho and set free many women who are not there of their own ehoiee, but have been sold into that life to pay famlly debts; and then that other great number, the women with homes where no want is known except that awful want, peace—peace, which their poor hungry hearts so ardently long for, although they dwell behind lofty gates and are surrounded by every eomfort that wealth can give. These are the doors that await the entrance of those young women of our Chureh who are looking for a life work that will satisfy the heart and will stand the test of that great day when we shall stand to be judged at the judgment seat of Jesus Christ. May many such, counting not their lives dear to themselves, throw themselves into this glorious work of 'bindlng up the broken-hearted, proclaiming liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, to give unto them that mourn beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness!'"

Thus did Miss Maud Bonnell, for sixteen years missionary to Japan under the Southern Methodist Church, speak of the unfinished task in that country, and thus did she lay upon the young life of Southern Methodism the command to "earry on;" for this was perhaps the last message Maud Bonnell ever gave to the world. While at home on furlough (1917) she prepared for her Board a history of the missionary work in Japan. She had just completed the pamphlet and was ready to return to her beloved Sunrise Land for further service for her Lord. A day or two before the sailing of her vessel God called her. For her the task was finlshed. And now, during this Centenary celebration, God grant that there may be those who will follow the fine, brave spirit of Maud Bonnell and carry Christ to Japan!

SUNG TSZ ZIANG.

"O East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet, Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's great judgment seat."

But our mlssionaries to China, through daily contact with the educated Chinese are coming to know China better, and in turn, the Chureh at home, through the missionaries is learning that the Chinese are just plain human beings like ourselves. We are learning, too, that—

"There is nelther East nor West, Border nor Breed nor Birth,
When two strong men stand faee to face though they come from the ends of the earth."

Rev. John C. Hawk, missionary to China under the Southern Methodist Board and stationed at Changchow, is a great believer in China and the Chinese. He is a firm bellever, too, in the Centenary and the World Program and sees in it a means of bringlng life and light to the people of his beloved China. As a member of the League of Intereessors he puts on the hearts of those in the "Fellowship" the duty of praylng for these brothers and sisters of the Far East. The story of Sung Tsz Ziang as told by Mr. Hawk, is a fitting illustration of the effectiveness of prayer and the power of God to release a soul from bondage. He says:

"Owing to the antl-foreign and conservatlve attitude of the people of Changchow, the work of the Chureh had to be done slowly for some time after entering the clty. Some six years passed before we ventured to have anything like a large evangelistle campaign. As a result of this first meeting, some two hundred and fifty names were secured, which meant that they were ready and willing to investigate the 'Jesus religion.' Among these names was one which had been signed by another person. However, when lnvited to the 'get acqualnted meeting,' the man eame. He brought with him a long llst of questions and criticisms, for, as he has since told us, he hoped to get the better of us in an argument, and, if possible, drlve us from the city.

"This young man was from the official elass and, like many others, had become addicted to the use of oplum. In fact, he was an opium sot, which is a term synonomous with drunkard in the United States. The home left him by his father, and even the furniture in that home, had been mortgaged and pawned, and he was living in the servants' quarters. He continued to attend our probationers' meetnigs, and by and by, the gospel message took hold on him, and, as he tells it, one night about midnight, he fell down on his knees in the courtyard of his home, and, lookling up into the open sky, said, 'O God, if there be any God, I will not arlse from here until I am freed from this awful curse.'

"Reader, you know what happened; just what happens there or anywhere when a soul throws all on God and takes Him at His word. So there that night God's messengers spoke to Mr. Sung and he was lifted out of his misery and made a new man.

"Several years have passed since then. His road has been beset by many pitfalls. He has been tested as an exhorter, a local preacher, and is now a member of the Conference. The day I told him good-bye before coming to America on a furlough, he had walked ten miles preaching and scattering the printed portions of God's Word in the towns and villages on his circuit. The old mother, who was also an opium smoker, the wife, and the younger brother, have joined the Church, and all the children in the home have been baptized. When the wife was being examined for Church membership, she was asked what was the greatest influence that had caused her to come into the 'Jesus Church.' Her reply was, 'The changed life of my husband.'

"Sung Tsz Ziang still has a brother and a sister out of the Church. Will you not join in prayer for him and them?"

CHAMP CLARK ON THE CENTENARY.

Honorable Champ Clark, former Speaker of House of Representatives, says regarding the Centenary of Missions:

"Of course you know I am not a Methodist; I am a Campbellite, but nevertheless and notwithstanding, the Methodists are a great people and have done a great work in the world and I am very fond of them. I think it is a fine thing to celebrate the Missionary Centenary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This country is so young we do not have very many anniversary celebrations any way you fix it, and the Methodist circuit rider was one of the pioneer civilizers of the Western world. He was always on the frontier and preaching the Gospel in out-of-the-way places, and not only building up the Church but building up the institutions for which we all stand; consequently, I am heartily in favor of your movement."

A NOTABLE ACHIEVEMENT.

The quarterly bulletin of the Athens District, North Georgia Conference, in a recent issue says:

"The great forward movement in Mlssions which began so auspieiously in our district last spring is reaching a successful and happy conclusion. Practically every charge has been affected by it, and more than half have made definite contributions to it.

"We set our Goal at $18,000, whereas the district only paid about $5500 last year (an average year). Of course this includes the amount from all sources: the regular assessments, the Sunday schools and the Woman's Missionary Society. It is gratifying to know that we will in all probablity go 'over the top.' It has been an inspiration to the district and has sent a healthy pulse-beat through the whole Conference. Indeed, the entire Church has felt a quickening from it.

"Two things should be kept in mind: First, there has not been the slightest feeling expressed that this large surplus has been a burden to anyone; and second, the other claims on the churches have not suffered one whit. On the other hand, the district will probably make the best showing financially in its history. In addition to this, the number received into the churches on profession of faith is larger than usual. For all of this we thank God and take courage. Bigger things are ahead of us. Great souls are growing and big blessings await us."

KENTUCKY THOROUGHBRED FOR THE CENTENARY.

Rev. S. W. Dean, of the Kentucky Conference, spoke so convincingly to one of his members about the Missionary Centenary that the good brother became deeply interested and offered to give the proceeds of the sale of a very fine horse to the movement. The horse is a handsome bay stallion, bred by Edward and Joseph Madden, of Lexington, Ky., and has taken a number of first premiums. He is seven years old and is a splendid horse in every way. If interested, write to Rev. S. W. Dean, Alexandria, Ky., and get a good horse and at the same time put a nice sum into the Treasury of the Centenary.

The Home Circle

TALKS WITH NATURE.

"I think you're funny," I said
To the river, "for while you've a bed,
  You're awake night and day
  And run on, yet you stay;
And your mouth is so far from your head."

I said to the hill: "I'll allow
You have a most wonderful brow,
  But you've such a big foot
  That you never can put
On a shoe of the style they use now."

I said to the tree: "You are queer;
Your trunk is all packed, but I fear
  You can't leave until spring
  When—a curious thing—
You must still remain standing right here."

To a green red blackberry I said:
"I know you are green when you're red,
  And you're red when you're green,
  But to say what I mean
Is enough to befuddle one's head."

—St. Nicholas.

HOW BOBBY LEFT HOME.

Bobby was the very dearest, sweetest little fellow that ever lived. Everybody said so—father, mother, grandpa, grandma, Sister Lou, Uncle Bob and Sue; that's everybody, of course.

But every now and then Bobby would have an "off day." Grandma said that he got out of the wrong side of the bed, but Bobby said that could not be, for he always got up just the same—if it was the wrong side one day, it was every day.

Whatever the trouble was, these days were rather trying, for everything went criss-cross all day.

"I wish eggs grew bigger," said Bobby, complainingly, one of these mornings. "I don't any more'n get begun eating mine before it's all gone."

Then he wondered how much longer it would be before he was "growed up" enough to have doughnuts and coffee like father.

After breakfast he looked his playthings over, but could not find anything he wanted to play with. "I think I'd rather have my newest box of soldiers," he said, presently.

"But," said mother, "I put that away in the closet upstairs, you know, because you have so many things around now."

"But I'd rather have that than anything else," persisted Bobby.

So mother told him when she had finished baking her cookies she would go and get it for him.

But, alas; when it came he did not care for it. He had got all over that, he said; now he wanted one of mother's cookies."

"But mother does not like you to eat warm cookies, Bobby; they are not good for you."

"I don't know why; father has them, and I should think you'd like me to have them when I want them so much. I'd make 'em for my little boy every day," was Bobby's reply.

So it went all the morning.

After lunch mother proposed that they go upstairs to rest, and try to get up on the right side. But Bobby would not hear of that. He wasn't a bit tired and, anyway, he believed he would rather go and live with grandma.

"She's always doing something nice for me; I could have more fun there. She lets me have everything round at once, and when I don't like those things she tries to find somethin' new. I should like to live with her all the time."

"Very well," said mother, "if you would like it better there than here with your father and mother, you had better go. We want our dear little boy to be happy if he can. I will put your nightie in your bag and you can go right over."

Bobbie looked very much surprised; he had not expected to be taken at his word in that fashion.

"I—could wait until to-morrow," he said, hesitatingly.

"Oh, no; there's no need of waiting," answered mother, cheerfully. "Grandma is home, and will be glad to see you, I know. If you really think you would be happier there, I think you had better go."

So presently Bobby, with his little bag, was trudging down the street to grandma's

But somehow it did not seem half as nice as usual there. Grandma got out all his playthings for him, and she had two cute little kittens that someone had just given her.

Usually Bobby would have been delighted with them, but he hardly looked at them to-day. "They're very nice kittens," he said, "but I don't seem to care much for 'em this afternoon."

Then grandma got him the nicest little lunch, but there was a queer little lump in his throat so he could not swallow very well. He wondered what mother was doing now. It must be most supper time. He always helped her set the table. He didn't see how she could manage without him. And he was afraid grandma didn't know such nice stories to tell him when he was going to sleep.

"I think I ought to go home," he said all at once. "It is most midnight, and father will be home pretty soon. He and mother will be dre'fully lonesome without their little boy. It—makes me feel—all choked up—to think my mother and father are lonesome," and Bobby's big brown eyes were brimming over.

So, before mother had even started to get supper, a sturdy little figure came trudging back down the street.

"I've comed home, mother," he cried, as he rushed into her arms and kissed her over and over again. "Grandma's ever so nice, but I'd rather live with my father and mother than anybody else in the world."—Springfield Republican.

NO IDLERS AMONG THE BIRDS.

A close study of bird life shows a most careful division of labor, observes a contributor in Canadian Boy Builder, who knows the value of our common birds and has also detected the recent popular interest in the movement in their behalf. Some birds, such as swallows, swifts, night-hawks and whippoorwills, sweep the air and keep down very small gauzy-winged pests like mosquitoes, gnats and midgets; while the kingbird, pewees, phoebes and other members of the fly-catcher family take care of the larger flying insects, most of which are injurious to vegetation.

To the warblers and vireos is assigned the task of keeping leaves clear of larvae, plant lice and canker-worms. Thrushes, bluebirds, robins, orioles, catbirds, thrashers, wrens and tanagers pay special attention to the larger caterpillars and tree insects.

Another family of birds has special charge of the bark; among these bird care-takers are to be found the various woodpeckers, the nuthatches, brown creepers, chickadees and kinglets, who keep up a tireless search for insects in the tree trunks, preventing their destruction.

Not only are there birds who work in the air and on the trees, but there are also the ground floor workers. Hidden on the ground around the roots of trees and in the grass, are insect enemies whose name is legion. Blackbirds, crows, robins, ovenbirds, thrashers, ground warblers, and flickers, are well-known members of the ground workers' gang.

Other birds work in close co-operation with man in the destroying of weeds by the eating of seeds. The various sparrows and finches are his constant co-workers. Some of the more tender sparrows who have to winter in the south, leave their work to be carried on through the autumn and winter by juncos, snowflakes, redpolls and grosbeaks.—Our Dumb Animals.

MAKING HOME HAPPY.

If there is any place where true Christianity is tested, it is surely in the home, and here the strength or weakness of our personal piety is abundantly demonstrated. The Christian home is the nearest approach to heaven possible in this world, and if our homes fail to remind us of heaven, we may be certain that there is something amiss with the type of Christianity which is represented there.

We have known people who had every other kind of religion but home religion. They were good at looking after other peoples' children, but failed in caring for their own. They were capable in business, helpful in the Church, ornamental in society, but failures in the home, and the real reason seemed to be that it required a good deal more grace to be Christians at home than it did to be Christians elsewhere. And yet Christianity was meant to make home happy, and so happy that for all time to come it would remain the earthly type of the heaven which lies beyond the veil. Let us get the kind of religion which will make our home life radiant with unselfish joy.—Christian Guardian.

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

We print in another column the official announcement of the postponement of the North Mississippi Conference. This action was not unexpected, in view of conditions arising from the epidemic of Spanish influenza, and probably most of those interested have already been informed as to the postponement.

The additional time secured by the deferred date will enable our preachers to wind up their year's work satisfactorily, and will insure the usual good reports from all our charges. All our people should co-operate heartily with the preachers and official boards in making this year, in spite of all the difficulties that have arisen, one of the best in the history of the Conference.

THE ONE-TALENT MAN.

The man with one talent was not condemned because he had only one, but because he failed to use that one. He was punished, not for what he did, but for what he failed to do. His thought to himself probably was: "If I haven't gained anything, at least I haven't lost anything, and my lord will surely commend me for keeping safely what he gave me in the beginning." The tragedy of his life was his failure to make use of the one opportunity he had to increase his lord's possessions. The gain of one talent would have put him, qualitatively, in the same class with those who had received, the one five and the other two. Doubtless his reward would have been, "I will set thee over many things."

It is a poor philosophy, but it seems to be more or less prevalent, to say, "I can't do much, therefore I won't do anything." Many a man who could not buy a Liberty Bond was ashamed to buy a Thrift Stamp; yet patriotism required of him to do what he could—and no more. The pennies of the children have added enormously to the resources of the Government in this time of need.

God's standard of judgment is not quantitative, but qualitative. Have you many talents?—use them all for Him. Have you only one?—use that one; it is all God expects of you.

BUY SOME BOOKS.

We presume that our Publishing Agents will have the usual display of books at our three patronizing Conferences, though we have no definite information to that effect. If they have, we hope all our preachers and the lay delegates will look over the collection carefully and make some purchases. If the books are not on hand, write to the Publishing House for catalogues and announcements and buy some anyway.

We believe in books, not as an immediate source for preaching material, but as a means of maintaining intellectual activity and of keeping in touch with the currents of the world's thought. The daily newspapers are worth reading for the sake of the information they contain. The chief function of a newspaper is to tell us what the world is doing; the function of a book is to let us know what the world is thinking about. We need both—but the preacher should certainly keep at least in sight of the world's thought.

It is not necessary to read a great many books in order to keep reasonably well-informed as to progress in the thought-world; it is impossible for any one man to read all the volumes that are printed day by day. But it is possible to get hold each year of a few books that will keep the reader mentally alive and efficient. Buy some books and read them.

"PLAN YOUR WORK."

Before many more weeks have passed a good many of our preachers will be serving new charges. In some cases, changes will be made on account of perfectly normal situations arising out of our itinerant system; in others, they will be necessary for the good of the preacher or the good of the charge, or both. In every case, a heavy responsibility will rest upon the minister as he enters upon his new work. His own efficiency as a religious leader is to be tested for another twelve months, but, more than that, the progress of the kingdom of God is to be helped or hindered by his labors.

A wise planning of his work will demonstrate the preacher's efficiency to begin with, and it will give promise of progress throughout the year. Plans should not be hastily made, but after there has been sufficient opportunity to look into the situation, certainly some kind of definite program should be mapped out. The Church is engaged in a warfare—the warfare against sin—and a year's work may very well represent a campaign. The preacher is in charge of that campaign by virtue of his position. He is not likely to bring it to a brilliantly successful conclusion unless he has some objectives toward which he is driving. Of course the enemy is to be beaten back when he makes an attack. But that is not enough; he must be driven from his own strongholds and forced to retreat by well-conceived and well-executed offensive movements. "Watchful waiting" may be good strategy for a time, but by every consideration the army should go forward unless it is willing to confess weakness or concede defeat. It cannot go forward successfully unless its leaders know where and how they want to go.

In most cases, the first three months of a pastorate will probably determine the success or failure of the year's work so far as definite results are concerned, because in that time the preacher will make his plans—or fail to make them, as the case may be. His fate is largely in his own hands.

THE MOTIVE FORCE.

This would be a poor world if we had to throw away all our machinery and go back to the old way of doing things. Our farms would largely go untilled, our factories would be closed, our great systems of transportation would come to a standstill, and our whole industrial system would crumble. Improved machinery makes possible the miracles of modern industry.

But we presuppose power to run the machinery. The most magnificent engine in the world would be practically useless if there were no power available to run it. It might represent the highest achievement of some eminent designer, and it might be beautiful to look upon, but if there were no power to set it going and keep it going, it would be of little worth after all.

Organization is the machinery of the Church. It has been brought to a high state of perfection. Every great cause for which the Church stands is represented by an organization that has been developed by the thought and skill and painstaking care of master builders. Errors of design and defects in construction may appear now and then, but they are usually slight and are easily remedied. Our machinery is of the latest type and it is magnificently built.

But if it is to develop its full power, it must have poured into it the energy that will keep it going. That energy can be furnished only by the intelligent faith and prayers of men who are willing to work with the machinery as the engineer works with his engine. The organization may be formed and started to going, but if it is simply left to run itself, it will break down after awhile. This is a time for the faith and the prayers of consecrated men.

WHO IS THE OLDEST SUBSCRIBER TO THE ADVOCATE?

Sometimes we receive letters from subscribers to the Advocate with the statement that the writers have been taking the paper twenty, thirty, forty years. We are always greatly interested in getting this information. We have a profound respect and admiration for those loyal and faithful members of the Church who have, year after year, maintained their interest in the affairs of the Church, and fed their spiritual lives by reading their Church paper. They have made use of what ought to be, at least, a real means of grace, and doubtless many of their happiest religious experiences are connected in some way with the weekly visits of the Advocate.

It would be of great interest to us, and we believe it would be of equal interest to our readers, to know who are our oldest subscribers. If you are one of the old-time readers of the Advocate, will you not write us a postal card or a note, telling us when you began to take it, and adding any item of interest that might occur to you? We shall appreciate the favor, and we shall be glad to pass the information along.

LET THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS HELP.

The following telegram has just been received by the Advocate: "Our General Sunday School Board, Dr. E. B. Chappell, secretary, asks every Sunday school in Southern Methodism to make a generous Christmas offering for the starving children of Armenia, Syria and other Bible lands. The Board is co-operating with the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, 1 Madison Avenue, New York." The telegram is signed by C. D. Harris, for Dr. Chappell.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. C. Price, of Belcher, La., writes that he is ready for Conference. He expects to report everything in full.

Dr. Andrew D. White, the first president of Cornell University, and formerly ambassador to Germany, died recently.

Rev. H. A. Gatlin, of the Tylertown charge, Mississippi Conference, serves a fine people. He reports that his work is making encouraging progress.

Rev. J. W. Faulk, of Boyce, La., his wife and two boys, have been victims of the influenza. We are glad to be able to report, however, that they are all better.

A necessary rule concerning obituaries is that not more than 200 words can be printed free. All words over 200 must be paid for at the rate of one cent a word.

The Central Methodist, the official organ of the Louisville and the Kentucky Conferences, has removed its offices to Louisville. Its former location was Lexington.

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of Greenwood, La., has had to pass through a siege of the influenza. He and his baby both were sick, but at the time of our information, they were much better.

Dr. Carlton D. Harris, editor of the Baltimore Southern Methodist, has an irrepressible humor that adds a charming quality to his work. His "travel editorials" make interesting reading.

Rev. J. W. Ward, of Booneville, Miss., says: "Booneville is ready for Conference." Good for Booneville!

Dr. W. C. Lovett has been re-elected editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocat for a term of four years.

Rev. J. D. Newsom, of Meridian, Miss., is over 90 years of age. He has been taking the Advocate more than fifty years.

Rev. R. T. Ware, writing from Noble, La., says: "I have had a good year; the Lord has wonderfully blessed us. Everything is in full for Conference."

The Holston Conference consolidated the management of Emory and Henry College with that of Martha Washington College under one board of trustees.

Rev. Jno. A. Moore, of Moss Point, Miss., and Rev. W. G. Forsythe, of Pascagoula, Miss., with their families, have been sufferers in the prevailing epidemic.

We learn from an exchange that Mr. Charles C. Converse, the author of "What a friend we have in Jesus," died recently at Englewood, N. J., at the age of eighty-five.

In the general election last week, the Republicans elected a majority of the members of both House and Senate. This will, of course, affect the organization of the next Congress.

Rev. T. B. Winstead, of Burns, Miss., writes that the Trenton charge is making progress, and he feels that it will send a full report to Conference in spite of the epidemic of influenza.

Rev. G. B. Love, of Marietta, Miss., writes that everything is moving along nicely on his work. He has been very faithful in looking after the interests of the Advocate on his charge.

Rev. C. A. Massey, pastor of the Angie-Tallsheek charge, Louisiana Conference, has been unable recently to attend to his work on account of an attack of the influenza. We trust he will soon be well.

We are glad to learn that the two sons of Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference, who were seriously ill with the influenza, have recovered their health.

Rev. Otto Porter, of De Soto Miss has had a good year on his charge, despite the fact that for four weeks during the summer he was unable to attend to his work. The prospects are good for his having a full report at Conference.

The War Children's Relief Fund, 2 Rector Street, New York, will receive money to be used for making Christmas a happy season for the thousands of destitute and orphaned children of the war-devastated countries of Europe.

We regret to learn from a recent personal note that Rev. A. H. Parker, our faithful pastor at Coushatta, La., has had serious sickness in his family, his daughter, Esther, having the influenza. We trust that she has been restored to health.

Rev. V. D. Skipper of Leesville, La., came to the Touro Infirmary, in this city, last week to undergo a serious operation. The operation has been successfully performed, and Brother Skipper is rapidly regaining his strength. His wife accompanied him to the city.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Tupelo Miss., requests us to state that the North Mississippi Methodist Historical Society will hold its meeting at Clarksdale on Tuesday evening, December 10. This change is made, of course, on account of the postponement of the Annual Conference.

The Young Men's Christian Association is observing the week, Nov. 10-16, as its annual week of prayer. At no time in the present generation has there been greater need of enlisting prayer in behalf of young men than now. All our people should join in this great movement.

The American Bible Society makes the announcement that there are 650 languages and dialects in which at least one book of Scripture has been printed for religious use. During the last decade the Scriptures have appeared in a new language on an average of once every six weeks.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, of New Augusta, Miss., writes that the money for all the Conference collections on his charge is now in the hands of the treasurers, except one item, and he confidently expects to secure that. If he does, it will be the first time in the history of the work that it has paid in full.

The Louisiana State Council of Defense has issued an urgent appeal to the people not to let the prospect of an armistice and an early peace interfere with the prosecution of war work. Even when peace does come, much of the emergency work now being done will have to be continued for a considerable length of time.

Professor J. Reese Lin, of Millsaps College, will pardon us for quoting his opinion that the Advocate might well fix its subscription price at two dollars a year. He is a competent judge, for whose opinion we have great respect. Additional financial resources would enable us to make some noticeable improvements in the paper.

We learn from an exchange that Mr. William Wilson Weber, the son of the lamented Dr. W. L. Weber, at one time connected with Millsaps College in Mississippi and Centenary College in Louisiana, was recently married to Miss Rosalie Langford, of Conyers, Ga. Mr. Weber is a second lieutenant in the machine gun corps at Camp Hancock.

The American Red Cross Commission for Europe has assigned to Homer Folkes, of New York, the task of making a survey of European countries which are now, or may soon be, operating with reference to the work which the American Red Cross may be called on to do in the near future. Mr. Folkes brings to his important mission his experience of twenty-five years of charitable public health work in New York City.

A great Lutheran convention opened in New York last Tuesday, the purpose of which is to bring about a unification of the three older Lutheran organizations in the United States—the General Synod, organized in 1820, the General Council, organized in 1867, and the United Synod, South, dating back to the days of the Civil War. These bodies will be combined into The United Lutheran Church in America, representing a baptized membership of 1,600,000.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate has the following to say of Bishop Murrah: "Bishop W. B. Murrah came to St. Louis last week for a day. The Advocate office was not omitted from his itinerary. We are always glad to see him, and all the brethren feel the same way. The presidency of Bishop Murrah at our recent Conferences was a pleasure to us. In the chair, the cabinet, the pulpit, he met the demands and opportunities of the moment in a way that provoked our love and praise. Missourians have a taste for the fine flavor of our Bishop's cordiality and an admiration for his poised judgment. His quadrennium among us has begun in such fashion as to give confidence that the church in Missouri is safe under his leadership."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

I am authorized by Bishop Kilgo to announce the change of date of the North Mississippi Annual Conference from November 20 to December 11. This change was made because of the prevailing epidemic. V. C. CURTIS, P. E.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

Dear Mr. Editor: In my announcement in last week's Advocate of the recent gift of $2500 to the Millsaps College Dormitory by the Dantzler brothers, I inadvertently failed to make it clear that Brother L. N. Dantzler, of Biloxi, Miss., who is one of our finest and most liberal laymen, is entitled to the honor of sharing in this generous gift to the College. The worthy trio who are making this splendid gift consists of Mr. A. F. Dantzler, Mr. L. N. Dantzler, and Mr. J. L. Dantzler. Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK,
Commissioner.

Jackson, Miss.

A NOTE FROM THE LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Our Orphanage has just passed through the worst epidemic of illness we have ever experienced. Every child in the Home, except six, and one of our Matrons, had an attack of the influenza. We had eighty cases in bed at one time. We had some ten or twelve cases of pneumonia, and two of our children died. My wife was stricken down after nursing night and day. Fortunately Miss Keller, our house matron, and a most capable nurse, kept well and with untiring devotion nursed and directed the nursing of the sick children. The Home Service department of the Red Cross, under the direction of Rev. J. G. Snelling, supplied us with all the nurses from the ladies of the town that were needed, and soups, broth, milk and custard were sent in plenty by the good women of Ruston. In spite of the fact that most of the homes of the town had sickness, we were not for a moment neglected. The devotion, interest and whole-hearted sympathy shown by the Ruston people in our trouble illustrated forcibly how truly the people are devoted to our great work. We can never express our gratitude to these good people, or cease to thank God for his goodness in these days of affliction.

ROB'T W. VAUGHAN, Supt.

Isn't This Worth Thinking About?

Suppose five years ago you had $100.00 and have been saving it in some "secure" place, such as the dresser drawer? If you now wish to use it, you still have $100.00. No more—no less.

Had you placed that money in our bank you would now have $116.00 instead of just $100.00, for that's just the amount of interest your money would have earned, without the slightest worry or exertion on your part.

Help your money to grow.

Open an account in our Savings Department to-day. $1.00 starts it. We pay 3% interest.

WALK FIFTEEN MILES WITHOUT BREAKFAST TO SCHOOL.

Walking twelve or fifteen miles through African forests is not regarded as much of a hardship for the boys and girls who come to the Methodist school at Garraway, Liberia. Miss Anna Hall writes about the opening of the school term: "They came filing into the yard with their boxes and bundles on their heads, wet with dew from the forest and wading streams. Seventy-one were enrolled the first morning. Since then we have averaged eighty-five."

Many of these pupils had come without breakfast!

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

Mrs. MAE LATHAM, wife of Dr. C. E. Latham, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Powers, died at her home near Sunbeam, La., on October 20, 1918. She was born on October 8, 1891, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when she was about ten years old. She was united in marriage on December 27, 1916, to Dr. C. E. Latham. She enjoyed the fellowship of Christ, and carried sunshine wherever she went. She leaves a husband, father and mother, brothers and sisters to mourn her departure. Her pastor,

J. L. CADY.

WILLIAM B. EUBANK was born in Pontotoc County, Miss., on June 18, 1848, and died on October 10, 1918. Brother Eubank accepted Christ at the age of thirteen years and joined the Presbyterian Church. After a number of years he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at old Troy Church, and remained a faithful and consecrated member until God called him home. He served many years as steward, and as lay leader in his church. Many of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, no doubt, will be sad to hear of the taking away of this true servant of God, and true friend of his pastor. Only a few days before his death, he told the writer that he was ready to go, his only regret being the leaving of the loved ones at home. As a member of the Masonic fraternity, he had seemingly worked out every design on the "trestle-board" of life, and was ready for his wages. Brother Eubank leaves a wife, who was a Miss Mary Ann Pope, and seven children, and the precious legacy of a well spent life. We laid his body to rest in the cemetery one mile south of old Troy after services by his pastor.

W. M. COMMANDER.

HERBERT McDONALD HORTON, son of Johnnie and Edna Horton, was born on February 23, 1913, and departed this life on Saturday night, October 19, 1918, after a short illness of influenza. Herbert was just entering into manhood and was a healthy looking lad who always met one with a smile. He has left a memory of but few years, but we know where to find him—on the Golden Shore. His cousin, ROXIE HORTON.

W. A. STINEBECK, the subject of this sketch, was born in Aiken, South Carolina, on March 26, 1854, and departed this life, early in September of the present year at his home in Oxford, Miss. He belonged to one of the old South Carolina families which before the civil war was noted for its wealth and culture. His grandfather lived in Charleston, where he spent the greater part of his childhood. Upon reaching young manhood he was anxious to study pharmacy but his father had lost everything during the war and so he had to work his way through college, graduating from the College of Pharmacy in Philadelphia. For many years he was in the drug business in Oxford, Miss., with Dr. T. D. Isom, a noted doctor of the old school. He removed to Meridian, Miss., where he was a member of the well known firm of Lillybeck-Stinebeck Drug Company. After sometime he sold his interest in Meridian and was connected with the same firm in Memphis. From Memphis he went to Vicksburg, and for a time was engaged in the drug business there. He later returned to Oxford, his former home, where for a number of years he conducted a successful business until failing health compelled him to retire. Success had crowned his efforts and he had accumulated an ample fortune to make his old age free from anxiety and worry. Brother Stinebeck was converted and united with the Methodist Church during a meeting held at Oxford in February, 1913, conducted by Rev. R. A. Clark. His religion was not the noisy sort. He lived a quiet, gentle, unobstrusive life, making no show of his piety or generosity. His aged mother and his sister in South Carolina were the objects of his loving care for many years. Month by month through the years witnessed his tender concern for their material comfort. On November 8, 1887, he was happily married to Miss Alice Slate, of Oxford, who helped him in all of his struggles and was by his side when he took passage across the last river. Brother Stinebeck suffered a great deal during the last two or three years of his life, but he did not burden the world with the tale of his sufferings, but bore them calmly and awaited with patience the end of his journey. His pastor, Rev. W. W. Woollard, conducted the funeral service, his body being laid to rest in the Oxford cemetery to await the resurrection morning. His friend,

E. S. LEWIS.

THE MEMPHIS HOSPITAL

YES, the Memphis, Mississippi, North Mississippi and North Arkansas Conferences own and are operating a well equipped hospital in Memphis known as the Methodist Hospital, Lucy Brinkley Annex, with fifty beds devoted exclusively to surgical and maternity cases for women and children. Special terms will be made to the wife or child of a Methodist preacher.

Whatever delays there may have been or may be in the beginning and completion of the new hospital building have been and will be due to the exigencies of the war and our banking facilities and not to the ownership of the Lucy Brinkley Annex. We call upon everyone to send in all past due subscriptions and to talk and work and pray for new ones. We need all the help possible.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She Made Up a Mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to Bring Back Color, Gloss and Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applieations will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the sure mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.

WILLIAM H. MULLINS.

The subject of this sketch, William Henry Mullins, was born in Jones County, in the State of Georgia, on November 15, 1819, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mattie Mullins Carnes, in Copiah County, Mississippi, on July 31, 1918. In 1821, when only two years of age, he came with his parents from the State of Georgia to Laurence County, Mississippi, and two years later moved to Copiah County and settled on a farm near Bowerton, a few miles southwest from what is now the town of Hazlehurst. He was the son of James and Temperence Mullins, and one of fourteen children. He came to Copiah County when the vast acres of her virgin soil were largely untilled and her resources untouched, and grew to manhood under the simple and crude conditions incident to a pioneer State. Away from the artificiality of the world, in touch with mother earth, he held fellowship with plain, but good and honest men and women. Ever true, and trusted and esteemed by his neighbors, he spent a long and useful life in the upbuilding of his community in civil, social and religious righteousness.

"Uncle Billie," as he was familiarly known in his later life, was thrice married. His first marriage was to Miss Martha Davis, who lived only a few years to brighten his life. To this union two sons were born. His second marriage was to Miss Emeline Cato, to whom three sons were born. In 1858 he was married the third time to Louise Caradine with whom he lived happily for 54 years. Three sons and one daughter were born to this union. William H. Mullins was a man of wonderful physical and intellectual vitality, and possessed a high sense of honor. He was always open and frank in his dealings with men. His natural gifts, and bigness of soul served to make him a commanding figure in his unswerving devotion to the best interests of his community. He was a fine type of the true citizen produced by the Old South, and a liberal contributor to the development of the New South.

In his early life, schools were few and inadequate, and he was denied the literary training which he, later in life, said would have been of inestimable value to him. His lack of literary training, however, did not deter him in his eager search for knowledge. He loved good books and read them thoughtfully. He was especially fond of books of a distinctively religious character. The writer, who knew him intimately, has heard him time and again quote paragraph after paragraph from sermons of the world's great preachers. He was particularly fond of Dr. Henry Melville, the great English preacher, and of Bishops Bascom, McTyeire and Marvin. Drs. Olin, Summers, Munsey, and Winans contributed largely to his ever-ready store of information. "Uncle Billie" was a genuinely religious man. He was converted early in life and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and proved himself a most ardent worker in its varied activities. For many years he served as a local preacher in his Church, and became a fearless defender of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity and the distinctive teachings of his Church. That he made full proof of his ministry, is attested by the lives of many who still live and call him blessed. His religion was his life, and in association with others he expressed it, not to be seen of men, but because he could not help it. Every life that touched his found something in it to stimulate and strengthen.

When I was a mere lad, "Uncle Billie" came into my life as a true and constant friend. He spoke many a cheering word to my young spirit just beginning to try itself in this new life. I shall, perhaps, never know the value to me of his wise counsel and apostolic touch. He was loved and esteemed by both white and black in his community. And now, that this worthy citizen, this devoted friend, this exemplary Christian gentleman has gone from us, we mourn his loss, but cherish the memory of his "effectual fervent prayers," his noble and fruitful life, and await the meeting upon the other shore. We buried his body in the family graveyard near the old home, on August 1, 1918, surrounded by a large company of relatives, friends and neighbors.

May the mantle of this godly father and worthy citizen fall upon the shoulders of the children left to mourn his loss!

A SECOND ALLIANCE.

Frequent disasters of the soul deliver us from shallow views of religion and convince us that we need more for our security than an example. No power can be of much avail that does not act from within and reinforce us in the crises of temptation. What one longs for is a second alliance—this time with a Savior. If there be any one in heaven or earth who has gone through the same agony and has come out a victor, who has a fellow-feeling with other men and is ready to join forces with them, then we need not abandon hope, although the past has been one uninterrupted defeat.—John Watson.

What Is Nuxated Iron?

Physician Explains—Says Public Ought to Know What They Are Taking—Practical Advice on What To Do To Build Up Your Strength, Power and Endurance and Increase the Red Blood Corpuscles.

The fact that Nuxated Iron is today being used by over three million people annually and that so many physicians are prescribing it as a tonic strength and blood builder in weak nervous, run-down conditions has led to an investigation of its merits by designated physicians and others whose reports should be of great importance to the public generally. Among these is the statement made by Dr. James Francis Sullivan formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York and Westchester County Hospital, who says: "When one patient after another began asking my opinion of Nuxated Iron, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed the real value claimed by its manufacturers and attested to by so many prominent people. This is exactly what I believe every honest, conscientious physician should do before prescribing or lending his endorsement to any product whatsoever. If an article is worthless we practitioners ought to be the first to know of it and if it is efficacious we are in duty bound to recommend it for the welfare of our patients. A study of the composition of the Nuxated Iron formula so impressed me with the therapeutic efficacy of the product that I immediately tested it in a number of obstinate cases. So quickly did it increase the strength, energy and endurance of the patients to whom it was administered that I became firmly convinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it myself with excellent results. There are thousands of delicate, nervous, run-down folks who need just such a preparation as this but do not know what to take. Therefore I have urgently suggested the widespread publication of the sworn statement of the composition of its formula so that the public may know what they are taking. This complete formula is now to be found in newspapers throughout the country. It is composed principally of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients known. To the credit of the manufacturers it may be said that they use the most expensive form of iron peptonate, whereas by employing other makes they could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost and by using metallic iron they could have reduced the cost to less than one-twelfth, but by thus cheapening the product they would undoubtedly have impaired its therapeutic efficacy. In my opinion a careful examination of this formula by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that Nuxated Iron is to be placed among the very highest class and most strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. It excels anything I have ever used for building up the system and increasing the red blood corpuscles thereby enriching and fortifying the blood against the ravages of disease."

THAT MISSIONARY MEETING.

Let's have it, just like we've always had it—if there's no better way.

A good one never "just happens," it is always preceded by two p's—capital ones—Prayer and Preparation.

It needs, not simply more spirituality, but more spirit.

It responds wonderfully to Picture Possibilities.

Some have even survived the shock of a stereopticon lecture.

Once a month is often enough, if you want to keep it "cool and indifferent."

Use only ready-made plans, whether they fit or not, dryness guaranteed.

TO THE PRESIDENTS OF THE AUXILIARIES IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

My Dear Co-Workers:

On December 11, in Clarksdale, Miss., the Annual Conference of North Mississippi will convene. Measures of vital importance to the Church will come up at that session; one of these is the question of admitting women into full church membership. Will you not call your women together on that date for a season of prayer for God's blessing upon that session, for the guidance of His Holy Spirit as the votes are being cast?

There is told us an incident in the life of Moses when his art of intercession was the key to victory; on either side of him were found Aaron and Hur supporting him. So it is you are asked to "hold up the hands" of the leaders and to "let your requests be known unto God." Do not fail to heed this call. Sincerely,

Mrs. J. W. CONGER, Pres.
—North Mississippi Monthly Bulletin.

DO ALL THE WOMEN WANT IT?

1. All church people do not want a college education. Shall the Church cease to have colleges until—all the people want them?

2. Some women in the Church still do not want laity rights.

At the General Conference of 1910 thousands of men and women petitioned for this legislation—to be enacted. At the General Conference of 1914, many more made the same request.

At the General Conference of 1918 great numbers of others again made the same appeal, and the petition was granted by an overwhelming majority.

Many thousands in the Church today earnestly want full membership for the women of the Church.

SUPPOSE THE WOMEN KEPT SILENT?

Shall the progress of the Church be stayed until—all the people want it?

As to the "women keeping silent in the churches and staying strictly in their own homes" one wonders. If our women kept silent in our churches to-day, where would the churches be? Even the churches that give them no voice in their administration suffer them to teach and explain their doctrines outside the pulpit, and the women are always permitted to do the "general drudgery" pertaining to the upkeep of the church. The great body of missionary work, Sunday school work, and most of the charitable and benevolent work of the churches is done by women, to say nothing of the financial support they give the church and all its activities. Can any one estimate the loss to the world had such women as Frances E. Willard and Dr. Anna Shaw "kept silence in the churches?"

The churches that stand to-day for the highest moral and spiritual ideals are the churches that have gone farthest in emancipating women from the conventions and foolish prejudices of a by-gone time.

Women constitute from two-thirds to three-fourths of the church membership. Therefore, as a class, they are more religious than men. Prison statistics show that our prison poulation consists of 5½ per cent women and 94½ per cent men. Therefore, women as a class are more moral than men.—The Christian Herald.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptons as heat flashes, nervousnsss, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

Calomel Salivates and Makes You Sick

Acts like dynamite on a sluggish liver and you lose a day's work.

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate.

Children and grown folks can take Dodson's Liver Tone, because it is perfectly harmless.

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel to-day and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.

FIRST AID TO DIGESTION

In cases of indigestion or dyspepsia, the contents of the stomach, for lack of a proper supply of digestive juices, first ferment, forming gases, and later decompose. This process is attended with more or less discomfort and reacts to the injury of all the digestive organs, with the result of poisoning the entire system, a condition known as anto-intoxication. Three prime considerations arise in treatment of such conditions:

First, the process of decomposition must be arrested, by neutralizing the acid condition of the stomach, thus giving prompt relief from pain.

Second, the salivary glands and other glands which produce the various digestive juices must be stimulated into active secretion in order that the food may be properly digested.
